lump-sum settlement and whether he is temporarily or permanently disabled are two separate issues. Bundtrock v. Duff Chevrolet, 199 M 128, 647 P2d 856, 39 St. Rep. 1211 (1982).

Lump-Sum Payment Properly Denied — Poor Business Sense and Prospects: Although a lump-sum award of permanent total disability benefits may be made, the Workers' Compensation Court (in a pre-1985 amendment case) did not abuse its discretion in denying such award where claimant's disability, lack of business experience, incomplete consideration of objective data concerning his proposed project, and occasional nonavailability of his son's services militated against the probable success of the business venture for which he sought the lump-sum award. Krause v. Sears Roebuck & Co., 197 M 102, 641 P2d 458, 39 St. Rep. 394 (1982); distinguished from Utick v. Utick, 181 M 351, 593 P2d 739, 36 St. Rep. 799 (1979).

Appeal From Lump-Sum Advance — Standards of Review: Wide discretion will be afforded Workers' Compensation Court determination regarding lump-sum settlements, and the decision will not be interfered with by the Supreme Court unless there is an abuse of discretion. The court will be presumed correct and affirmed if supported by substantial evidence and reversed only if the evidence clearly preponderates against the findings. The Supreme Court is required to look to all evidence properly before the court below in deciding whether there is substantial evidence to support the lower court's findings and conclusions. Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981).

Workers' Compensation Lump-Sum Advance — Guardian Ad Litem Appointments: A mother received a lump-sum workers' compensation advance payment. Her minor child had a separate, legally cognizable interest in present and future benefits, which might be prejudiced by any lump-sum payment to the mother; therefore, the Workers' Compensation Court should have either appointed a guardian ad litem to represent the child or made a finding stating why appointment was not necessary, and it was error to fail to do so. However, reversal was not required as there was a mutual benefit to mother and child in the payment of the benefits and the method of lump-sum advance repayment presented a very limited chance of financial loss to the child. Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981).

Attorney Fees for Claimant Not Dependent on Carrier's Compliance With Chapter: Insurance carrier's compliance or noncompliance with this chapter was not relevant to the issue of whether claimant, who prevailed on petition for a lump-sum settlement in lieu of future periodic payments, was entitled to attorney fees and costs. Award of attorney fees and costs was governed by 39-71-612, and where claimant met that section's test and prevailed in a hearing wherein the sole controversy was the difference between amount tendered and amount awarded, he was entitled to attorney fees and costs. Polich v. Whalen's O.K. Tire Warehouse, 194 M 167, 634 P2d 1162, 38 St. Rep. 1572 (1981).

Lump-Sum Settlement for Health Reasons: In a pre-1985 amendment case, there was substantial evidence to support the conclusion below that a lump-sum settlement would be in petitioner's best interests, and judgment for conversion of periodic payments to a lump-sum payment was not an abuse of discretion, where petitioner's doctor warned him to avoid bending, crawling, heavy lifting, and overhead work; the slightest physical exertion was painful to him; his wife had diabetes, migraine headaches, and impaired circulation; they wished to move to Phoenix for their health; life away from Montana winters would be in their best interests in view of their ill health and advanced age; and the expense of moving gave rise to the lump-sum payment request. Polich v. Whalen's O.K. Tire Warehouse, 194 M 167, 634 P2d 1162, 38 St. Rep. 1572 (1981). On rehearing the court held that it was not required that conditions be placed on a lump-sum award. Polich v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 203 M 280, 661 P2d 38, 40 St. Rep. 448 (1983).

Workers' Compensation Settlement — Mutual Mistake: Plaintiff injured his back when he fell in the restaurant where he worked and a rack of dishes fell on him. He submitted his claim to the Division of Workers' Compensation (now State Fund) but was not represented by an attorney. He was examined by physicians who found him to be 5% disabled. Plaintiff entered into a full and final compromise settlement. Later examinations by physicians showed that plaintiff's fall had aggravated his preexisting cerebral palsy condition. This information was not available to either party at the time the settlement was entered into. Both parties were mistaken as to a fact material to the contract. The court found that the need to fairly compensate the injured worker is the intent and purpose of the Workers' Compensation Act. The full and final compromise settlement was set aside for mutual mistake of a material fact as to the nature and extent of the injury caused by claimant's accident. The case was remanded to the Workers' Compensation Court to determine the extent of claimant's disability. Kienas v. Peterson, 191 M 325, 624 P2d 1, 37 St. Rep. 1747 (1980), followed in Weldele v. Medley Dev., 227 M 257, 738 P2d 1281, 44 St. Rep. 1062 (1987), and in Kimes v. Pac. Employers Ins. Co., 233 M 175, 759 P2d 986, 45 St. Rep. 1402 (1988).

Conscientious Administration in Award of Lump-Sum Payment: Although the favored method of paying benefits under worker's compensation is by regular periodic payments, the Division of Workers' Compensation (now State Fund) (in a pre-1985 amendment case) did not abuse its discretion in awarding a lump sum to a claimant to satisfy debts that have or will be incurred for basic necessities. A showing of exceptional circumstances must exist to justify such an award, but each case must be considered on its own merits. The Division (now State Fund) is in the best position to judge the needs of the claimant, and where their solution lies in conscientious administration, it will be affirmed unless there is an abuse of discretion or the evidence clearly preponderates against it. Willoughby v. Gen. Accident Fire & Life, 187 M 253, 609 P2d 700, 37 St. Rep. 620 (1980), followed in Ruple v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 209 M 276, 679 P2d 1252, 41 St. Rep. 704 (1984), Johnson v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. of New York, 227 M 464, 740 P2d 665, 44 St. Rep. 1236 (1987), Phelps v. Hillhaven Corp., 231 M 245, 752 P2d 737, 45 St. Rep. 582 (1988), Aetna Life & Cas. Co. v. Scribner, 253 M 236, 833 P2d 166, 49 St. Rep. 485 (1992), and Sullivan v. Aetna Life & Cas., 271 M 12, 894 P2d 278, 52 St. Rep. 296 (1995).

Submission of Fraudulent Petition for Workers' Compensation Settlements: Under the language of the former statute dealing with the preparation of false evidence, preparation of a petition for lump-sum and compromise settlements prepared after the death of the claimant and submitted to the Division of Workers' Compensation (now State Fund) for the purpose of obtaining money that defendant knew he was not entitled to constituted preparation of false evidence in violation of the statute. The petitions were a statutory prerequisite to the awarding of settlements. St. v. Bretz, 185 M 253, 605 P2d 974, 36 St. Rep. 1037 (1979).

Best Interest of Claimant (Pre-1985 Amendment Cases):

Lump-sum payments are not looked upon with disfavor although they are an exception to the general rule that payments awarded under this chapter are periodic. Determinative criteria as to the advisability of awarding a lump-sum payment include: (1) the best interests of the claimant, his family, or the public; or (2) the existence of a pressing need or outstanding indebtedness. Utick v. Utick, 181 M 351, 593 P2d 739, 36 St. Rep. 799 (1979), followed in Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981), and Belton v. Carlson Transp., 220 M 194, 714 P2d 148, 43 St. Rep. 286 (1986), distinguished in Krause v. Sears Roebuck & Co., 197 M 102, 641 P2d 458, 39 St. Rep. 394 (1982).

Where it was demonstrated by the claimant without dispute by the insurer or the Workers' Compensation Court that claimant could utilize a lump-sum award to assure a substantial source of regular income for himself, such a lump sum should have been granted. Utick v. Utick, 181 M 351, 593 P2d 739 (1979).

Compensation benefits are a substitute for wages of the injured employee, and thus periodic payments are provided for by law. The purpose is to preclude any possibility of an imprudent employee or dependent wasting the means for support and thereby becoming a burden upon society. However, lump-sum awards should be permitted where the best interest of the parties demand it. Laukaitis v. Sisters of Charity of Leavenworth, 135 M 469, 342 P2d 752 (1959).

Limit on Benefits Inapplicable: Under former law, the claimant was entitled to waiver of the 36-month limitation because of potential total disability and because the defendant was largely responsible for the delay in necessary treatment by his refusal to pay benefits. Hutchison v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 178 M 81, 582 P2d 1203, 35 St. Rep. 1126 (1978).

Lump-Sum Advance — Lump-Sum Settlement Distinguished: The Workers' Compensation Division (now State Fund) did not abuse its discretion in ordering a "lump-sum advance" as distinguished from a "lump-sum settlement", since the advance was not a calculation of the present worth of the deferred payments (decided prior to the 1985 amendment). This section is not applicable to the "lump-sum advance". Brurud v. Judge Moving & Storage, Inc., 172 M 249, 563 P2d 558 (1977).

Discretion of Division (Now State Fund): Discretion of Division (now State Fund) will not be disturbed in denying lump-sum settlement unless claimant shows good cause and substantial evidence does not support Division (now State Fund). McAlear v. McKee, 171 M 462, 558 P2d 1134 (1976); Skrukrud v. Gallatin Laundry Co., Inc. & Employees Commercial Union Ins. Co., 171 M 217, 557 P2d 278, 33 St. Rep. 1191 (1976).

Lump-Sum Settlement as Exception to General Rule: It was the intent of the Legislature that periodic payments should be the rule, and lump-sum settlements the exception. Kuehn v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 164 M 303, 521 P2d 921 (1974); Kent v. Sievert, 158 M 79, 489 P2d 104 (1971); Laukaitis v. Sisters of Charity of Leavenworth, 135 M 469, 342 P2d 752 (1959); Moffett v. Indus. Accident Bd., 130 M 303, 301 P2d 340 (1956); Williams v. Indus. Accident Bd., 109 M 235, 97 P2d 1115 (1939); Davis v. Indus. Accident Bd., 92 M 503, 15 P2d 919 (1932).

Necessity for Lump-Sum Payment — Serious Debt Problem (Pre-1985 Amendment Cases):

It was proper to grant a lump-sum payment to a claimant who had past due indebtedness on installment payments on his home and pickup truck and miscellaneous bills, including attorney fees, and also where it could reasonably be inferred that if he were aided in becoming current on his various debts his prospects of sustaining himself on his workmen's compensation (now workers' compensation) and social security benefits would be improved. Kuehn v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 164 M 303, 521 P2d 921 (1974).

It was correct to deny a lump-sum payment of an open-end award where claimant established no pressing need or outstanding debt, except for legal fees incurred by pursuing a petition for lump-sum settlement, and the only anticipated use of a lump sum was to put it "on interest". Kent v. Sievert, 158 M 79, 489 P2d 104 (1971).

Where a compensation claimant made no request to the Industrial Accident Board (now State Fund) for a lump-sum settlement, and no evidence appeared in the record on appeal on the question of the necessity or advisability of such a settlement, the trial court properly declined to pass upon the question, and the Supreme Court on appeal to it will do likewise. O'Neil v. Indus. Accident Bd., 107 M 176, 81 P2d 688 (1938).

Burden of Proof on Claimant: Claimant bears the burden of justifying departure from periodic compensation payments, and any plan presented for betterment and rehabilitation should demonstrate some reasonable basis for successful fulfillment. Legowik v. Montgomery Ward, 157 M 436, 486 P2d 867 (1971); Malmedal v. Indus. Accident Bd., 135 M 554, 342 P2d 745 (1959).

Lump-Sum Award — Total Disability Rating: Where the evidence before the District Court was ample to sustain that court's judgment that the claimant should be awarded total disability rating and that a lump-sum award and payment be made to him, such judgment will be affirmed. Kustudia v. Indus. Accident Bd., 127 M 115, 258 P2d 965 (1953).

Compromise of Claim — Dispute Essential: Requirement of this section that compromise and settlement of a compensation claim be approved by the board does not apply where no claim of the worker had been definitely established. There was no compromise between claimant and employer, but a receipt in full settlement of claimant's demand after he had fully recovered and returned to work had been executed by him. The board approved the transaction and declared that claimant was entitled to what he had received and receipted for. Shugg v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 100 M 159, 46 P2d 435 (1935).

Amount of Lump-Sum Settlement — How Determined: In determining the amount of a lump-sum settlement under this section, the Industrial Accident Board (now State Fund) must ascertain the present worth of the claimant's right to compensation, taking into consideration his expectancy of life, and in case of a widow the added contingency of remarriage, the happening of either contingency destroying the right to continued periodical payments, and therefore the right of converting them into a lump sum. Cogdill v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 90 M 244, 2 P2d 292 (1931).

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

Case Notes

Workers' Compensation Benefits as Marital Assets — Error to Preclude as Matter of Law: The District Court found as a matter of law that workers' compensation benefits of the husband were not marital assets. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment, ordering an evidentiary hearing because it was unable to make an informed opinion from the record. At the hearing, findings should address the terms and purpose of the workers' compensation award. Blankenship v. Blankenship, 210 M 31, 682 P2d 1354, 41 St. Rep. 901 (1984).

Conversion of Benefits by Widow: The Industrial Accident Board (now State Fund) was in error in allowing a conversion of biweekly compensation benefits to a widow who had remarried and who had two minor children who continued to be beneficiaries. Under such circumstances, the only person authorized to sign an application for a lump-sum payment would be a duly appointed guardian of the minors. Davis v. Indus. Accident Bd., 92 M 503, 15 P2d 919 (1932).

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Attorney Fee Lien Applicable to Medical Benefits Received in Workers' Compensation Settlement: Lockhart moved for an order directing the insurer to pay attorney fees out of the medical benefits owing to Lockhart under his successful workers' compensation claim. The Workers' Compensation Court denied the attorney fees on grounds that medical benefits are not benefits, but rather an imposition of liability imposed on the insurer, and that because an award of medical benefits does not entitle a claimant to receipt of money, there is no property against which an attorney fee lien can attach. The court held that when a claim has been denied and later found compensable by the court without a separate award of attorney fees, a contingent attorney fee may be computed based on medical benefits, but the amount may not be deducted from the compensation payable to the medical providers. The Supreme Court disagreed. Medical benefits are not the property of the medical providers simply because the medical providers are the actual recipients of the money, nor are medical benefits simply an obligation of the insurer. Instead, medical benefits are the property of the individual claimant, and, as such, the claimant should be allowed to pay attorney fees out of medical benefits. In the context of workers' compensation cases, attorney fee liens attach as a matter of law to all compensation, including medical benefits, upon the filing of an attorney retainer agreement with the Department of Labor and Industry. To require a claimant to pay a disproportionate amount of attorney fees from the claimant's personal resources would be unfair and contrary to the fundamental purpose of workers' compensation laws. Lockhart v. N.H. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 205, 295 M 467, 984 P2d 744, 56 St. Rep. 800 (1999), following Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Disability Benefits Properly Included in Marital Estate: Disability benefits, including workers' compensation permanent total disability payments, may be properly included in the marital estate because they clearly come within the definition in 40-4-202 of property "however and whenever acquired". The provisions of this section that prohibit attachment or assignment of workers' compensation benefit payments do not bar classification of workers' compensation awards as marital property. In re Marriage of Schmitz, 255 M 159, 841 P2d 496, 49 St. Rep. 919 (1992).

Workers' Compensation — No Bankruptcy Exemption: Workers' compensation benefits are not exempt from federal bankruptcy. 42 St. Rep. 2043 (U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the District of Montana; order of Dec. 26, 1985).

Workers' Compensation Benefits as Marital Assets — Error to Preclude as Matter of Law: The District Court found as a matter of law that workers' compensation benefits of the husband were not marital assets. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment, ordering an evidentiary hearing because it was unable to make an informed opinion from the record. At the hearing, findings should address the terms and purpose of the workers' compensation award. Blankenship v. Blankenship, 210 M 31, 682 P2d 1354, 41 St. Rep. 901 (1984).

Exemption Absolute: Harry received $7,000 from the state Workers' Compensation Division (now State Fund) on June 10, 1980. The money was deposited in a bank and up until the date of this decision had never been commingled with any other funds. On November 5, 1981, Harry was charged with deliberate homicide. Counsel was appointed by the court in the homicide case with the proviso that he utilize the $7,000 to reimburse Glacier County for the cost of his defense. Harry objected to that proviso and appealed the order. The Supreme Court concluded that the exemption provided by 39-71-743 is absolute. State ex rel. Harry v. District Court, 192 M 332, 628 P2d 657, 38 St. Rep. 818 (1981).

1997 Amendment: Chapter 472 in first sentence substituted "a person with a disability" for "vocationally handicapped"; in second sentence, before "certification", deleted "vocationally handicapped"; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendment: Substituted last three sentences requiring application for certification before employment or within 60 days after becoming employed or reemployed and before an injury occurs, stating that the certification is effective on the date of employment or reemployment, and providing that failure to apply in time precludes the employer from the protection and benefits of this part for "An employee who is requesting reemployment may be certified as vocationally handicapped. An employee who is not employed at the time of application for certification must be certified as vocationally handicapped before entering new employment in order for the new employer to receive the benefits of this part." Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Applicability: Section 15, Ch. 558, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to injuries that occur on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective July 1, 1991.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1987 Amendment: In first sentence substituted "shall apply" for "may apply".

39-71-906. Employer hiring or retaining certified person with a disability to file information with department — effect of failure to file.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 214 in third sentence before "precludes" substituted "within 60 days of a current employee's certification as an individual with a disability" for "retention in employment". Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Severability: Section 25, Ch. 214, L. 2001, was a severability clause.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 472 in first sentence substituted "person with a disability" for "vocationally handicapped person"; and in third sentence, before "person's employment", deleted "vocationally handicapped".

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

39-71-907. Certified person with a disability to be compensated for injury as provided by chapter — insurer liability for compensation limited.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 389 deleted former (2) that read: "(2) The amounts necessary for the payment of benefits from this fund are statutorily appropriated, as provided in 17-7-502, from this fund"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1999.

1997 Amendments: Chapter 284 in first sentence in (1), after "who", substituted "receives an injury, as defined in 39-71-119, that results in death" for "receives a personal injury arising out of and in the course of employment and resulting in death"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 1998.

Chapter 472 in (1), near beginning, substituted "having a physical or mental disability that constitutes or results in a substantial impediment to employment" for "vocationally handicapped"; and made minor changes in style.

Transfer and Credit of Excess Subsequent Injury Funds: Section 6, Ch. 284, L. 1997, provided: "On or before September 1, 1997, the department of labor and industry shall transfer $3.5 million of the funds retained in the fund to the fund in 39-71-201 and credit the amount to offset the insurer's assessment for the administration fund as follows:

(1) plan No. 1, $490,000;
(2) plan No. 2, $612,500; and
(3) plan No. 3, $2,397,500."

1993 Amendment: Chapter 555 inserted (2) statutorily appropriating amounts necessary to pay benefits; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

1987 Amendment: Substituted second sentence concerning limit of 104 weeks of medical and burial benefits for former sentence that read: "The liability of the employer for payment of compensation, for furnished medical care, and burial as provided in this chapter is limited to those benefits occurring during the period of 104 weeks after the date of injury"; and inserted third sentence concerning limit of 104 weeks of benefits.

39-71-908. Notification of fund of its potential liability under part — review by fund.

Compiler's Comments

1989 Amendment: In two places substituted "insurer" for "employer, carrier, or the industrial insurance fund"; and made minor change in phraseology. Amendment effective on the earlier of signing of executive order creating state compensation mutual insurance fund (now state compensation insurance fund) or January 1, 1990.

39-71-909. Effect of fund's failure to give notification of its intent to dispute liability — subsequent notification by fund authorized.

Compiler's Comments

1987 Amendment: Throughout section changed "carrier" and "employer, carrier, or industrial insurance fund" to "insurer"; and at end of first sentence substituted "in excess of the insurer's liability" for "that pertain to the period beyond 104 weeks after the date of the injury".

39-71-911. Obligation to make payments on behalf of fund not an independent liability.

Compiler's Comments

1989 Amendment: In two places changed "employer, carrier, or industrial insurance fund" to "insurer". Amendment effective on the earlier of signing of executive order creating state compensation mutual insurance fund (now state compensation insurance fund) or January 1, 1990.

39-71-915. Assessment of insurer — employers — definition — collection.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 214 in (1) after "Compensation Act" inserted "and the Occupational Disease Act of Montana"; in (2) in first sentence after "each" inserted "employer insured by a", after "insurer" inserted "plan No. 3, the state fund, with respect to claims arising before July 1, 1990", and before "plan No. 3" inserted "each employer insured by" and in third sentence after "plan No. 2" substituted "employers" for "insurers", after "state fund" inserted "and plan No. 3 employers", and before "paid losses" inserted "a proportionate share of"; in (3) at beginning of first and third sentences substituted "April 30" for "March 31", in first sentence after "assessed" deleted "against the employer, plan No. 2 insurer, or the state fund" and after "for" substituted "the ensuing fiscal year" for "that calendar year", and inserted second sentence requiring amount assessed against state fund to separately identify amount attributed to certain claims arising before and after July 1, 1990; substituted language in (5) and (6) relating to assessments attributable to claims arising before and after July 1, 1990, for former (5) and (6) that read: "(5) The portion of the plan No. 2 assessment subject to premium surcharge for an individual plan No. 2 insured employer is a proportionate amount of total plan No. 2 paid losses during the preceding calendar year that is equal to the percentage that the total paid losses of the individual plan No. 2 insured employer bore to the total paid losses of all plan No. 2 insurers during the preceding calendar year.

(6) The portion of the state fund assessment subject to premium surcharge for a state fund insured employer is a proportionate amount of total state fund paid losses during the preceding calendar year that is equal to the percentage that the total paid losses of the individual state fund insured employer bore to the total paid losses of state fund insured employers during the preceding calendar year"; deleted former (7) that read: "(7) Payment of assessments due must be made to the department semiannually on June 30 and December 31 of the year following the calendar year on which the assessment is based"; throughout (7) inserted reference to assessment premium surcharge and inserted last sentence requiring partial amount of total premium and assessment premium surcharge received to be applied first to assessment premium surcharge with remainder to premium due; inserted (8)(b) through (8)(e) regarding timing of assessment payment by plan No. 1 employer, plan No. 2 insurer, and plan No. 3, the state fund, and authorizing administrative fine plus interest on delinquent amount; inserted (9) regarding yearly comparison of assessment collected and use of undercollected or overcollected amount for following year's premium surcharge assessment; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Severability: Section 25, Ch. 214, L. 2001, was a severability clause.

Effective Date — Retroactive Applicability: Section 26, Ch. 214, L. 2001, provided: "(1) [This act] is effective July 1, 2001.

(2) [Sections 5(7)(c) and (8) and 13(3)][39-71-201(7)(c) and (8) and 39-71-915(3)] apply retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to assessments and assessment premium surcharges calculated by the department of labor and industry before March 30, 2001."

1999 Amendment: Chapter 377 in (2) in two places substituted reference to plan No. 2 insurer for reference to plan No. 2 insured employer; in (3) in first sentence after "employer" inserted "plan No. 2 insurer" and in second sentence after "plan No. 2 insurers" inserted "and plan No. 3" and at end substituted "after July 1 in that year" for "after January 1 in that calendar year"; inserted (6) establishing calculation method for portion of state fund assessment subject to premium surcharge for state fund insured employer; in (8) in first sentence after "insurance" inserted "and plan No. 3, the state fund" and at end substituted "shall collect from its policyholders the assessment in subsection (2)" for "may collect from each of its policyholders an amount equal to the insured employer's fund assessment through a surcharge based on premium" and near end of third sentence substituted "workers' compensation subsequent injury fund surcharge" for "workers' compensation policyholder surcharge"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2000.

Severability: Section 24, Ch. 377, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

Transfer and Credit of Excess Subsequent Injury Funds: Section 6, Ch. 284, L. 1997, provided: "On or before September 1, 1997, the department of labor and industry shall transfer $3.5 million of the funds retained in the fund to the fund in 39-71-201 and credit the amount to offset the insurer's assessment for the administration fund as follows:

(1) plan No. 1, $490,000;

(2) plan No. 2, $612,500; and

(3) plan No. 3, $2,397,500."

Effective Date: Section 9(1), Ch. 284, L. 1997, provided that this section is effective January 1, 1998.

Part 10
Referral of Disabled Workers for Vocational Rehabilitation

Part Administrative Rules

Title 24, chapter 29, subchapter 17, ARM Rehabilitation.

Part Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER CURRENT LAW

Jurisdiction Declined — Review of Final Division Order Barred by Collateral Estoppel: The Workers' Compensation Court dismissed Martelli's petition for total disability benefits after Martelli failed to appeal the Employment Relations Division's final order within 10 working days of mailing. Because the interplay between the issue before the court and the issue previously litigated before the Division would have required relitigation of the issue of Martelli's disability that was decided by the Division, rehearing of the issue by the court was barred by collateral estoppel and jurisdiction by the court was properly declined. Martelli v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 258 M 166, 852 P2d 579, 50 St. Rep. 479 (1993).

Statutory Procedures Not Followed — Total Rehabilitation Benefits Payable During Review Period: A claimant who met the definition of a disabled worker under this part prior to 1987 amendment was entitled to total rehabilitation benefits from the date of remand, which was held to constitute the date notice was given to the Department by the insurer that a rehabilitation provider had been designated. Under the language of former 39-71-1023 (repealed, 1987), an insurer was required to pay total rehabilitation benefits to a worker during the review by the rehabilitation panel and the Department. Failure of the Department to conduct a hearing or issue an order of determination based on the rehabilitation panel report constituted reversible error. Higginbotham v. Stoltze-Connor Lumber Co., 248 M 161, 810 P2d 295, 48 St. Rep. 372 (1991).

Concurrent Payment of Disability and Rehabilitation Benefits Allowed: Plaintiff injured his back during the scope and course of his employment. Defendant accepted liability and began paying total disability benefits. Plaintiff entered a rehabilitation program, for which he began receiving rehabilitation benefits under Title 39, ch. 71, part 10. During his training, defendant wrote plaintiff that since his condition had stabilized, his benefits would be reduced to permanent partial benefits based on his impairment rate. Plaintiff appealed to the Workers' Compensation Court, which ruled claimant was entitled to receive benefits based on his impairment rating while concurrently receiving permanent total disability benefits during his retraining. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the term "classes" of disability referred to in 39-71-737 refers to all of the various benefits provided by the Workers' Compensation Act that are not otherwise specifically excepted. The rehabilitation benefits are distinguishable from all other benefits pursuant to 39-71-1003. The court held that the concurrent payment of two classes of benefits provided under Title 39, ch. 71, part 7, is prohibited (but see 1985 amendment notes under 39-71-737) and that the benefits provided by part 10 are not affected. (See 1985 amendment note under 39-71-1003.) Plaintiff was entitled to total disability benefits and rehabilitation benefits during his rehabilitation program. Rehabilitation benefits are totally separate from and not counted against benefits provided in Title 39, ch. 71, part 7. When plaintiff has completed his rehabilitation program, he will be entitled to his partial disability benefits. Grimshaw v. L. Peter Larson Co., 213 M 291, 691 P2d 805, 41 St. Rep. 2123 (1984).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Claimant Not Required to Be Totally Permanently Disabled or Without Job Prospects to Receive Benefits: State Fund contended that the claimant was not entitled to receive benefits during vocational rehabilitation because she was not totally permanently disabled and she was not without job prospects. The Supreme Court held that the pertinent pre-1987 statutes did not require the claimant to be totally disabled or unable to obtain employment and that therefore she was entitled to receive benefits during vocational rehabilitation. Peile v. Dept. of Highways, 250 M 81, 817 P2d 1149, 48 St. Rep. 853 (1991), followed in Briceno v. Cereal Food Processors, Inc., 250 M 362, 820 P2d 1310, 48 St. Rep. 1031 (1991).

Permanent Total Disability — Nonmedical Components — Burden of Proof: Claimant injured her back in a fall from a ladder. The Workers' Compensation Court found that she had a 15% whole person impairment and that she was permanently totally disabled, until vocationally retrained, based on her medical condition and the presence of nonmedical elements of disability such as her lack of specialized training and limited work experience. The Supreme Court affirmed on the basis that there was substantial evidence to support the decision, particularly in light of the court's referral of the claimant for vocational rehabilitation. Once a claimant presents evidence showing there is no reasonable prospect of employment, the burden of proof shifts to the employer to show that suitable work is available. The employer failed to carry this burden when it did not introduce any evidence to establish that suitable work was available. Coles v. Seven Eleven Stores, 217 M 343, 704 P2d 1048, 42 St. Rep. 1238 (1985), followed in Madill v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 280 M 450, 930 P2d 665, 54 St. Rep. 4 (1997).

Employer's Waiver of Right to Contest Claimant's Actions to Start Occupational Retraining: Claimant requested occupational retraining from the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) at a time when he was not being paid workers' compensation benefits, since his claim for them had been denied. In connection with the Department's evaluation of claimant for retraining, it had him examined by Dr. Gilboy. The employer and claimant stipulated at trial before the Workers' Compensation Court that Dr. Gilboy's medical report could be considered on the nature and extent of claimant's disability claim. The employer claimed that the Supreme Court should nullify claimant's occupational training program because he should have started it with the Workers' Compensation Division (now State Fund) rather than with the Department. The Supreme Court first stated that it did not read 39-71-1001 (now repealed) in the same manner as did the employer and ruled that in any event the employer had waived its right to complain by agreeing to the use of the medical report obtained by claimant at the outset of his occupational training program. McCormack v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 210 M 156, 682 P2d 1357, 41 St. Rep. 979 (1984).

1997 Amendment: Chapter 122 at beginning substituted "For injuries occurring on or before June 30, 1997" for "Upon certification by the department of public health and human services"; and deleted (2) that read: "(2) The appeal process provided for in 53-7-106 is the exclusive remedy for an injured worker aggrieved in the receipt of vocational rehabilitation services provided by the department of public health and human services." Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Saving Clause: Section 9, Ch. 122, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 546 in two places substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of social and rehabilitation services". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Saving Clause: Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1991 Amendment: Inserted (2) relating to the appeal process for an injured worker. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Severability: Section 15, Ch. 574, L. 1991, was a severability section.

1987 Amendment: Substituted text allowing payment of vocational rehabilitation benefits upon certification by Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services for former text that read: "The eligibility of any injured worker to receive other benefits under the Workers' Compensation Act is in no way affected by his entrance upon a course of vocational rehabilitation as herein provided. A person undergoing vocational rehabilitation must be paid temporary total disability benefits. In addition thereto, he may be paid, upon the certification of the department of social and rehabilitation services from funds herein provided:

(1) his actual and necessary travel expenses from his place of residence to the place of training and return;

(2) his living expenses while in training in an amount not in excess of $50 per week; and

(3) his expenses for tuition, books, and necessary equipment in training."

1985 Amendment: In introductory language inserted second sentence requiring payment of temporary total benefits to person in vocational rehabilitation and made minor changes in phraseology.

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Appeal Process Related to Denial of Department Services Not Applicable to Denial of Funds From IAR Account: An injured worker who was denied funds from the industrial accident rehabilitation (IAR) account did not have adequate remedy at law and was entitled to a writ of mandate requiring payment of funds from the account. The appeal process provided for in 53-7-106 pertains only to relief for a party actually applying for services that are provided by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) and does not apply to a party who was improperly denied payment of funds from the IAR account. (See 1997 amendment.) State ex rel. Cobbs v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 274 M 157, 906 P2d 204, 52 St. Rep. 1166 (1995).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1983 Amendment: In introductory clause of (1) and in (2), substituted "state special revenue fund" for "agency fund"; and in (1)(c), substituted "expendable trust fund" for "account in the agency fund" twice.

39-71-1006. Rehabilitation benefits.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendments: Chapter 122 in (1)(b), (1)(c), and (2), before references to worker, deleted "injured"; in (1)(c), in first sentence after "insurer", substituted "and a written copy of the plan is provided to the worker" for "is filed with the department" and substituted third sentence concerning costs of tuition, fees, books, and expenses for former sentence that read: "If the plan calls for the expenditure of funds under 39-71-1004, the department shall authorize the department of public health and human services to use the funds"; at beginning of (2) deleted "After filing the rehabilitation plan with the department"; inserted (3) concerning payments in addition to rehabilitation benefits; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Chapter 276 at beginning of (1) substituted "A worker is eligible" for "A disabled worker as defined in 39-71-1011 is eligible"; in (1)(a)(i) substituted "worker meets the definition of a disabled worker as provided in 39-71-1011" for "worker has an actual wage loss as a result of the injury"; inserted (1)(a)(ii) providing that a worker with a medically established impairment rating of 15% or greater and with no wage loss is eligible for rehabilitation benefits; in first sentence of (1)(b), before "reemployment", inserted "reasonable", inserted second sentence referring to a worker who, as a result of a 15% impairment rating and with rehabilitation, will have a reasonable increase in wage compared to the time of injury, and at beginning of third sentence inserted "If eligible because of a wage loss"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Saving Clause: Section 9, Ch. 122, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, it is the intent of the state compensation insurance fund to assist all Montanans by reducing the unfunded liability of the old fund, terminating the old fund liability tax when the old fund is adequately funded, which is currently estimated to occur as early as June 30, 1999, providing for the payment of dividends to policyholders, and maintaining a viable state compensation insurance fund; and

WHEREAS, there was an unfunded liability of $355 million as of June 30, 1996, for claims for workers' compensation injuries occurring before July 1, 1990, in the old fund, which included $129 million in outstanding bond debt; and

WHEREAS, the old fund is funded with the old fund liability tax paid by employers, employees, and self-employed persons, generating as much as $50 million each year; and

WHEREAS, the surplus of $231 in the new fund as of June 30, 1996, allowed the Board of Directors of the State Fund to declare a dividend of up to $109 million to retire the outstanding bond debt in the old fund; and

WHEREAS, the unfunded liability in the old fund will be an estimated $200 million deficit by June 30, 1997, and the surplus or the excess of assets above the reserves that are set aside to meet the claim liability in the new fund will be an estimated $127 million by June 30, 1997; and

WHEREAS, current state law requires the State Fund to use dividends to be applied first to old fund outstanding liability rather than paying dividends directly to policyholders, the State Fund shall, no later than June 30, 1998, transfer $63.8 million to the old fund account to pay old fund claims to allow direct payment of dividends to policyholders; and

WHEREAS, the $20 million appropriation received by the State Fund from the general fund during the June 1989 Special Session partially addressed the unfunded liability issue existing at that time in the old fund and canceled a planned 22% rate increase; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund now agrees to repay the $20 million appropriation to the general fund by June 30, 1999, in lieu of transferring additional funds to the old fund account to provide the general fund with additional revenue and to remove any perception that the State Fund remains a burden on the general fund; and

WHEREAS, because decreases in premium rates totaled 35% in fiscal years 1996 and 1997 and legislative changes in benefit levels have resulted in the return of private carriers, the 15% limitation on administration expenses as a percent of the prior year's premium will significantly impact the State Fund's ability to provide service to policyholders and their injured workers; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund seeks to improve the level of services provided to customers without increasing existing State Fund staffing levels by working with private sector-licensed insurance producers; and

WHEREAS, in response to Haag v. Montana Schools Group Insurance Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P.2d 693 (1995), in which the Montana Supreme Court ruled that an insurer's failure to comply with the time limitations for accepting or denying a workers' compensation claim constituted acceptance of the claim, current law needs to be clarified to provide that the failure to comply with the time limitations does not constitute acceptance of the claim."

Severability: Section 32, Ch. 276, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 34(2), Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "[Sections 7, 12 through 14 [section 14 is 39-71-1006] and 29] are effective July 1, 1997, and apply to claims for injuries occurring on or after [the effective dates of sections 7, 12 through 14 and 29]."

1995 Amendments: Chapter 243 in (1) substituted "A disabled worker as defined in 39-71-1011" for "An injured worker"; substituted (1)(a) concerning actual wage loss as a result of injury for "the injury results in permanent partial disability or permanent total disability as defined in 39-71-116"; deleted former (1)(b) requiring physician to certify that worker is unable to work at job held at time of injury; at beginning of (1)(b) deleted "a rehabilitation plan completed by" and near end, after "reemployment", substituted "opportunity and will have a reasonable reduction in the worker's actual wage loss" for "and wage potential"; in (1)(c), after "plan", substituted "agreed upon" for "between" and inserted second full sentence requiring beginning and completion date; in (2), in first sentence, substituted "disabled" for "injured" and after "receive" substituted "biweekly compensation" for "rehabilitation", substituted third sentence requiring plan to be completed within 26 weeks for former third sentence that read: "Rehabilitation benefits must be paid during a reasonable period, not to exceed 10 weeks, while the worker is waiting to begin the agreed upon rehabilitation plan", in fourth sentence, after "paid", inserted "biweekly" and substituted "progressing in" for "completing", and inserted last sentence excepting benefits from lump-sum provision; deleted former (3) requiring job placement assistance and benefits to be paid during assistance and prohibiting crediting against maximum period of 104 weeks of rehabilitation benefits (see 1995 Session Law for text); deleted former (4) requiring evaluation of whether worker could return to job held at time of injury (see 1995 Session Law for text); in (3), after "temporary total", deleted "or biweekly permanent partial disability" and substituted "the benefits under subsection (2)" for "rehabilitation benefits"; in (4), after "continue to", deleted "work with and"; inserted (5) requiring eligibility by beginning the rehabilitation plan within 78 weeks of maximum healing; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 in (1)(c) substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of social and rehabilitation services". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Rehabilitation Benefits Provided Under Workers' Compensation Act Inapplicable to Occupational Disease Act: Loss suffered from carpal tunnel syndrome and filed an occupational disease claim, which was paid by the insurer. Later, Loss sought total rehabilitation benefits pursuant to 39-71-2001 (renumbered 39-71-1006), which were denied by the insurer, and the denial was affirmed by the Workers' Compensation Court. The Supreme Court held that rehabilitation benefits payable under the Workers' Compensation Act pursuant to 39-71-2001 (renumbered 39-71-1006) are not available to a claimant proceeding under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana. The Supreme Court noted in response to Loss's argument that 39-71-2001 (renumbered 39-71-1006) is a "stand alone" section that just happens to be codified in Title 39, ch. 71, but that applies with equal force to Title 39, ch. 72; that the Legislature had directed that 39-71-2001 (renumbered 39-71-1006) be codified as an integral part of Title 39, ch. 71; and that the provisions of Title 39, ch. 71, should apply to that section. The Supreme Court also distinguished Ingbretson v. La. Pac. Corp., 272 M 294, 900 P2d 912 (1995), by noting that 39-72-402, the section relied on by the Supreme Court in that case to apply Title 39, ch. 71, procedural sections to Title 39, ch. 72, stated that the "practice and procedure" of one act applied to the other. The Supreme Court concluded that a substantive section such as 39-71-2001 (renumbered 39-71-1006) dealing with benefits did not fall within the "practice and procedure" language of 39-72-402 to be applied to the Occupational Disease Act of Montana. Loss v. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co., 282 M 80, 936 P2d 313, 54 St. Rep. 251 (1997).

Absence of Reasonableness of Rehabilitation Plan: Although this section encourages rehabilitation training for persons injured on the job, it does not obligate an insurer to pay for every rehabilitation plan that might be conceived by a qualified injured worker. The purpose of this section to return a worker to work as soon as possible after a work-related injury or disease would not be furthered when, as in this case, removal of the worker from the workplace for a 2-year "educational rehabilitation" involving getting a master's degree in counseling would not put the worker in a better position to obtain employment. The Supreme Court thus affirmed the Workers' Compensation Court's decision that the worker's proposed rehabilitation plan did not represent reasonable vocational goals and a reemployment and wage potential with rehabilitation as required under this section. Reeves v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 275 M 152, 911 P2d 839, 53 St. Rep. 88 (1996).

IAR Account Funds Not Limited to Department-Provided Services — Duty of Department to Disburse Funds: An injured worker settled a claim with the employer's insurer by agreeing to a rehabilitation plan that was approved by the Department of Labor and Industry and the Workers' Compensation Court. The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) refused to disburse the funds from the industrial accident rehabilitation (IAR) account based on its conclusion that the injured worker did not qualify for that Department's rehabilitation services. The worker applied for a writ of mandate, which was denied by the District Court. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the Department has a clear legal duty to distribute funds from the IAR account when the Department of Labor and Industry authorizes the distribution and that the worker was entitled to a writ of mandate requiring payment from the IAR account. State ex rel. Cobbs v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 274 M 157, 906 P2d 204, 52 St. Rep. 1166 (1995).

plan; in definition of rehabilitation provider, near beginning after "rehabilitation counselor", deleted "other than the department of social and rehabilitation services" and inserted last phrase relating to a Department counselor when a worker has been certified by the Department; deleted (7) that read: "(7) (a) "Worker's job pool" means those jobs typically available for which a worker is qualified, consistent with the worker's age, education, vocational experience and aptitude and compatible with the worker's physical capacities and limitations as the result of the worker's injury. Lack of immediate job openings is not a factor to be considered.

(b) A worker's job pool may be either local or statewide, as follows:

(i) a local job pool is the job service office area that includes the worker's residence; and

(ii) the statewide job pool is the state of Montana"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Severability: Section 15, Ch. 574, L. 1991, was a severability section.

1989 Amendment: Chapter 333 in definition of worker's job pool, in (b)(i), substituted "a local job pool is the job service office area that includes the worker's residence" for former language that read: "a local job is one either in a central city that has within its economically integrated geographical area a population of less than 50,000 or in a city with a population of more than 50,000 as determined by the division" and in (b)(ii) substituted "the statewide job pool is the state of Montana" for "a statewide job is one anywhere in the state of Montana". Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". 39-71-1032. Termination of benefits for noncooperation with rehabilitation provider — appeal.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 442 substituted (2) concerning dispute over termination of benefits for former text that read: "(2) The worker may contest the insurer's termination of benefits by filing a written exception to the department within 20 working days after the date of the 14-day notice. The worker or insurer may request a hearing before the department. The department shall hold a hearing within 30 days of receipt of the request. The department shall issue an order within 15 days of the hearing"; and deleted former (3) and (4) that read: "(3) If the worker prevails at a hearing before the department, it may award attorney fees and costs to the worker under 39-71-612.

(4) Within 30 days after the department mails its order to the party's last-known address, a party may appeal to the workers' compensation court." Amendment effective April 23, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's current employment statutes constitute a complex and often confusing body of law requiring specialized skills and knowledge to interpret; and

WHEREAS, most employers in the private sector employ 10 or fewer employees and function without the assistance of personnel officers or in-house legal staff; and

WHEREAS, employment-related disputes are currently heard in many different forums, including the Board of Personnel Appeals for wage and hour issues, the Board of Labor Appeals for unemployment insurance issues, the Workers' Compensation Court for workers' compensation issues, the Commission for Human Rights for discrimination issues, and District Courts for the resolution of wrongful discharge conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the 1997 Legislature enacted House Joint Resolution No. 10, which directed the Department of Labor and Industry to convene a group of interested parties to explore, investigate, and report to the 1999 Legislature optional approaches to an integrated dispute resolution process for employment-related issues; and

WHEREAS, members of the Legislature and interest groups, including employers and employees from the private and public sectors, formed the House Joint Resolution No. 10 work

Case Notes

Statutory Limitation on Workers' Compensation Family Member Domiciliary Care Benefits Justified — Not Violative of Equal Protection or Substantive Due Process: Plaintiff, injured in a vehicle accident in the scope of his employment, received disability benefits and payments for domiciliary care provided at home by his wife at the maximum rate permitted by this section. Plaintiff challenged the constitutionality of the limits on benefits for 24-hour care provided by a family caregiver, arguing that the cap violated his right to equal protection because it forced him to choose between being placed in a nursing home or having his wife assist him. His wife received less compensation as a result of his choice to live at home rather than at a skilled nursing facility. Additionally, plaintiff alleged that establishment of different benefit limits for family and nonfamily caregivers violates his right to substantive due process because it arbitrarily and unfairly balances cost containment with plaintiff's personal choice of who acts as his care provider. In affirming the District Court decision, the Supreme Court ruled that the differences in care provided by family member caregivers and nonfamily member caregivers offer significant justification for limiting compensation to family care member caregivers. As a result, family member caregivers and nonfamily caregivers are not similarly situated for purposes of equal protection, and the difference in family caregiver compensation is not arbitrary and capricious in violation of substantive due process, but is reasonably related to a permissible legislative objective. Power of Fund to Prevent Sole Exercise of Departmental Powers: When presented with the question of interpretation of the phrase "with the concurrence of the Montana self-insurers guaranty fund", or equivalent phrase, used throughout the law governing the fund, the Attorney General held that the power to concur, by irresistible implication, also carries with it the power to withhold concurrence, but implies no power to initiate action. The Legislature gave the fund, through the power of concurrence, the power to prevent the sole exercise of discretion of statutory powers by the Department of Labor and Industry. 46 A.G. Failure to Review Application for Self-Insurance — Quasi-Judicial Immunity Not Applicable: The Division of Workers' Compensation (now State Fund) admitted negligence for failing to conduct an adequate review of a corporation's financial ability to self-insure under plan No. 1, but claimed immunity under the rationale of Koppen v. Bd. of Medical Examiners, 233 M 214, 759 P2d

173, 45 St. Rep. 1433 (1988), for its acts as a government agency. The Supreme Court, noting that for immunity to apply, the function of the Division (now State Fund) must be quasi-judicial rather than administrative or ministerial, distinguished Koppen based on the lack of discretion necessary for the Division (now State Fund) to perform its statutory duty. Because simply performing this duty did not involve the use of quasi-judicial discretion, the act was purely ministerial and not protected by quasi-judicial immunity. The discretionary function exemption will not apply when a statute, regulation, or policy specifically prescribes a course of action for an employee to follow and the employee has no rightful option but to adhere to the directive. Such change was made in this section.

1985 Amendment: Inserted (2) requiring self-insured employer in group to be jointly and severally liable for all claims against group and to maintain excess coverage for such liability.

Statement of Intent: Chapter 480, L. 1985, which enacted subsection (2) of this section and subsection (2) of 39-71-117, included the following statement of intent: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it requires the adoption of rules by the workers' compensation division of the department of labor and industry.

The legislature intends that the division adopt only those rules required by section 4 of this bill (an uncodified extension of existing rulemaking authority).

The rules adopted by the division to implement section 4 should require the submission of information regarding the following:

(1) the requirements for formation and certification of an association, corporation, or organization of employers to operate as a group self-insured employer, including provisions for the addition of new members and the withdrawal of existing members;

(2) requirements for proof of solvency of the group self-insurer and to maintain security to insure payment of obligations under the act;

(3) requirements for an indemnity agreement and power of attorney between the individual employers within the group, including the requirement that all members of the group remain jointly and severally liable;

(4) requirements for and confirmation of excess liability insurance;

(5) requirements for management of the association and annual reports to the division;

(6) requirements for auditing the group self-insurer to determine that it is meeting its obligations under the Workers' Compensation Act;

(7) provisions for the termination of group self-insurance by the group on request and for termination by the division upon determination that the group no longer meets the requirements for certification as self-insured and for determining responsibility for pending claims.

The legislature intends that all group self-insured employers must comply with the provisions of the act and rules enacted thereunder. In developing rules, the legislature intends that employees of the group self-insurer have as much assurance as reasonably possible of the benefits to which they are entitled under the act."

Power of Fund to Prevent Sole Exercise of Departmental Powers: When presented with the question of interpretation of the phrase "with the concurrence of the Montana self-insurers guaranty fund", or equivalent phrase, used throughout the law governing the fund, the Attorney General held that the power to concur, by irresistible implication, also carries with it the power to withhold concurrence, but implies no power to initiate action. deleted "a bondsman or", and after "account for the" substituted "security deposits" for "deposits or securities and the earnings of the deposits or securities"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 7, 1995.

1993 Amendments: Chapter 150 in (1)(a), (1)(b), (2)(a), and (2)(b), near beginning after "department", inserted "with the concurrence of the Montana self-insurers guaranty fund"; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 555 inserted second sentence of (1)(a) that read: "All securities of the United States treasury must be in book-entry form"; near beginning of (2)(a)(i), before "lacks", deleted "is insolvent or" and near middle, before "year", deleted "fiscal"; near beginning of (2)(a)(ii) substituted "a group" for "an association, corporation, or organization"; at end of first sentence of (3)(a) deleted "and may be either an estimated percent of the employer's last preceding annual payroll or a percent of the established amount of his annual payroll for the fiscal year"; near beginning of (3)(a)(i), after "bond", deleted "or undertaking", near middle substituted "a surety" for "two or more sufficient sureties", and near end, before "year", deleted "fiscal"; inserted (3)(a)(iii) that read: "(iii) other security deposits allowed in subsection (1)(a)"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Saving Clause: Section 3, Ch. 150, L. 1993, provided: "The department of labor and industry may require an employer, without concurrence of the Montana self-insurers guaranty fund, to give security in addition to the requirements described in 39-71-2105 and 39-71-2106 for workers' compensation liabilities that the employer accrued prior to July 1, 1989."

1991 Amendments: Chapter 120 in (1)(a), at end of first sentence, inserted "in accordance with rules adopted by the department" and in second sentence inserted "certificate of deposit"; substituted present (2), describing when and in what amount additional security is required, for former (2) that read: "(2) If the department finds that an employer has lost his solvency or financial ability to pay the compensation herein provided to be paid which might reasonably be expected to be chargeable to the employer during the fiscal year to be covered by the permission or that the employer is an association, corporation, or organization of individual employers seeking permission to operate under compensation plan No. 1, the department must require the employer, before granting to him permission or before continuing or engaging in such employment subject to the provisions of compensation plan No. 1, to give security in addition to the security described in subsection (1) for the payment of compensation, which security must be in such an amount as the department finds is reasonable and necessary to meet all liabilities of the employer which may reasonably and ordinarily be expected to accrue during the fiscal year"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 20, 1991.

Chapter 558 in (1)(a), at beginning of second sentence, inserted exception clause; and inserted (1)(b) allowing Department to require a larger deposit as additional evidence of financial ability to pay. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 120, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent has been prepared for this bill because it amends 39-71-2106 to expressly authorize the department of labor and industry to adopt rules governing security deposits required from employers who elect to be self-insured under workers' compensation plan No. 1.

It is the intent of the legislature that, in adopting rules, the department allow self-insured employers to provide a security deposit as provided in 39-71-2106 that must be:

(1) automatically renewable;

(2) accompanied by a properly executed security instrument that must be filed of record to protect against employer bankruptcy and other insolvency; and

(3) filed with any other information or documentation necessary to protect the department."

Saving Clause: Section 2, Ch. 120, L. 1991, was a saving clause.

Applicability: Section 15, Ch. 558, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to injuries that occur on or after [the effective date of this act] [July 1, 1991]."

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 2, Ch. 131, L. 1999, provided: "[This act] is effective July 1, 1999, and applies to premium rates computed for the construction industry beginning July 1, 2000."

1995 Amendment: Chapter 186 in (1) substituted "advisory organization designated under 33-16-1023" for "rating organization described in 33-16-1005"; in (3), before "organization", substituted "advisory" for "rating" and after "policies" deleted "by July 1, 1992"; and in (4), before "organization", substituted "designated advisory" for "rating".

Saving Clause: Section 32, Ch. 186, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 33, Ch. 186, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 34, Ch. 186, L. 1995, provided: "[This act] applies to rate filings by the advisory organization on or after [the effective date of this act] [effective October 1, 1995] and to rates filed by insurers on or after the effective date of the advisory organization's initially approved loss cost filing."

1993 Amendment: Chapter 224 in second sentence in (2) inserted multiplier of one and one-half. Amendment effective July 1, 1994.

Name Change — Directions to Code Commissioner: Section 14, Ch. 630, L. 1993, provided: "Wherever the name "state compensation mutual insurance fund", meaning the fund established in 39-71-2313, appears in the Montana Code Annotated or in legislation enacted by the 1993 legislature, the code commissioner is directed to change the name to "state compensation insurance fund"." The phrase appeared in this section and was changed by the Code Commissioner as directed.

Effective Date: Section 12, Ch. 480, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] is effective July 1, 1992."

1990 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 4, Sp. L. May 1990, provided: "The legislature recognizes that the unfunded liability currently existing in the state fund cannot be fully addressed at this time. The legislature further recognizes that the unfunded liability will have to be addressed from time to time in future legislative sessions; that other sources of revenue may have to be obtained from time to time to assist in reducing the unfunded liability; and that because of the current state of the economy and because of the current premium rates being charged employers, there should not be a substantial increase in premium rates at this time."

Initial Operating Expenses: Section 3, Ch. 4, Sp. L. May 1990, provided: "During the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1990, the state fund shall transfer $12 million from money deposited under 39-71-2321 in the state fund before July 1, 1990, to the account created by 39-71-2321 for the administration and payment of claims for injuries resulting from accidents that occur on or after July 1, 1990."

Coordination With Occupational Disease Act of Montana: Section 18, Ch. 4, Sp. L. May 1990, provided: "For purposes of [this act] and the administration of Title 39, chapter 72, a reference in [this act] to an injury resulting from an accident or to a claim for an injury resulting from an accident includes a disablement as defined in 39-72-102(4)."

Settlement of Claims: Section 20, Ch. 4, Sp. L. May 1990, provided: "(1) If funds are available, the state fund may offer a negotiated claim settlement to each person who has a claim that arose before July 1, 1990, for which the state fund has accepted liability, other than liability for medical benefits, and has fixed benefits. Each settlement offer must contain a provision granting the state fund a full and unconditional release of liability, other than liability for medical benefits, in exchange for accepting the negotiated claim settlement. The claimant shall accept a negotiated claim settlement in writing before November 1, 1990, or the settlement offer is void. The negotiated claim settlement may be paid in a fixed amount without any justification by the claimant.

(2) If the negotiated claim settlement offer made pursuant to subsection (1) is not accepted, the lump-sum law in effect on the date of the injury applies."

Request for Proposals for Claim Settlement: Section 21, Ch. 4, Sp. L. May 1990, provided: "The state fund may prepare a request for proposals for contracting with private claims adjusters for settling the claims of persons whose benefits have not been determined under a claim that arose before July 1, 1990. The request for proposals may be based upon a dollar amount of unsettled claims or upon a percentage of claims for which benefits have not been determined. The state fund may not enter into a contract based upon a proposal until it has reported the results of the proposals to the 52nd legislature and has received legislative authorization to enter into a contract based upon a proposal."

Saving Clause: Section 26, Ch. 4, Sp. L. May 1990, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 4, Sp. L. May 1990, was a severability clause.

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 8] [39-71-2316] grants rulemaking authority to the newly created state fund to adopt or repeal rules or amend existing rules to implement the new state compensation mutual insurance fund [now state compensation insurance fund]. The chief purposes of creating the state fund as a mutual insurer and placing it in a department other than the department of labor are:

(1) to remove the inherent conflict between the interests of the workers' compensation division in regulating all workers' compensation insurers in this state, including the state compensation insurance fund, and the interests of the state fund as a workers' compensation insurer; and

(2) to ensure the solvency of the new state fund.

The legislature recognizes that the fund actuary has determined that at June 30, 1988, a full funding deficiency of $157.3 million existed for the present state compensation insurance fund. The legislature intends that the new state compensation mutual insurance fund [now state compensation insurance fund] adopt rules in a manner that will assure the solvency of the new fund. Rates must be set on an actuarially sound basis as required by state law. The new state fund would be bound to insure all employers who apply to it for workers' compensation coverage and shall insure state agencies.

As the primary means of ensuring the solvency of the state fund, it must institute safety programs and set rates in a manner that awards employers who provide a safe working environment and penalizes employers who do not.

The legislature further intends that the new state fund institute programs to automate the processing of claims and payment of benefits. The state fund may contract out to the private sector certain claims administration and servicing functions if the state fund determines it to be cost-effective.

The legislature intends that the governor shall implement staggered terms in naming the initial members of the board."

Reorganization Procedure: Section 62, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided: "(1) The provisions of sections 2-15-132 through 2-15-137 govern the creation of the state compensation mutual insurance fund [now state compensation insurance fund] and the transfer of the various functions contained in [this act] from the state compensation insurance fund to the state compensation mutual insurance fund [now state compensation insurance fund].

(2) It is intended that current employees of the division of workers' compensation whose functions are transferred to the state compensation mutual insurance fund [now state compensation insurance fund] shall retain employment rights consistent with their positions at the time of transfer."

Implementation: Section 63, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided: "(1) The governor shall by executive order implement the provisions of [this act].

(2) The governor may by executive order assign to the state compensation mutual insurance fund [now state compensation insurance fund], in a manner consistent with [this act], functions allocated to the workers' compensation state fund provided for in Title 39, chapter 71, part 23, by the 51st legislature and not transferred by [this act]."

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided: "(1) In the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division", meaning the division of workers' compensation, are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry".

(2) The code commissioner shall designate, in a manner consistent with [this act], workers' compensation insurance regulatory functions allocated to the division of workers' compensation by the 51st legislature to the department of labor and industry that are not so designated by [this act].

(3) Wherever it appears in 39-71-205, 39-71-222 through 39-71-224, 39-71-613, 39-71-902 [now repealed], 39-71-904, 39-71-910 [now repealed], or in law enacted by the 51st legislature, the code commissioner is directed to change the term "administrator" or "his" to "department", meaning the department of labor and industry."

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Claims Examiner Not Authorized to Make Final Workers' Compensation Settlement for State Fund: Claimant was injured at work in 1973. Her employer was enrolled under Workers' Compensation Plan No. 3. State fund accepted liability and paid some compensation to claimant. For 1 ½ years state fund negotiated with claimant to reach a final settlement of claimant's disability benefits. Claimant was represented by counsel, and the negotiations were conducted through a claims examiner with state fund who was supervised by the state fund bureau chief. In March 1981, the parties reached a tentative settlement. Claimant and her lawyer signed a petition for full and final compromise settlement. When the petition was presented to the state fund bureau chief, he rejected it as being excessive and beyond the liability of the state as an insurer. Claimant brought the matter to the Workers' Compensation Court where she claimed that she had entered into a binding final agreement with state fund. The Supreme Court affirmed the Workers' Compensation Court ruling that no binding contract was created because the state fund bureau chief had not consented to the terms and the claims examiner had neither actual nor ostensible authority to bind the state fund to a settlement contract. Christenson v. Billings Livestock Comm'n Co., 201 M 207, 653 P2d 492, 39 St. Rep. 2060 (1982).

OPINIONS PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Unfunded Liability in Industrial Insurance Expendable Trust Fund Not State Debt: To the extent an unfunded liability may exist in the industrial insurance expendable trust fund, it has arisen not by conscious act of the Legislature but from a combination of circumstances that resulted in a mismatch between liability incurred and trust fund deposits. Further, no claim was made that the trust fund's corpus would be inadequate to satisfy accrued benefit payment obligations. For these reasons, the unfunded liability was not considered a "state debt" within the meaning of Art. VIII, sec. 8, Mont. Const. 42 A.G. Op. 46 (1987).

2001 Amendment: Chapter 314 in (1) in last sentence substituted "the board of directors may implement multiple rating tiers as provided in 39-71-2330 and may assess an expense constant, a minimum premium, or both" for "the state fund shall implement variable pricing levels as provided in 39-71-2341 and the board of directors may, in its discretion, assess a policy charge, a minimum premium, or both"; and inserted (2) defining expense constant. Amendment effective July 1, 2002.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 305 in first sentence substituted "coverage with the state fund" for "coverage with a mutual insurance fund"; deleted former second sentence that read: "The state fund is required to insure any employer in this state requesting coverage, and it may not refuse coverage for an employer"; at end inserted language authorizing Board to assess policy charge, minimum premium, or both; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 295 in second sentence, after "for an employer", deleted "unless an assigned risk plan established under 39-71-431 is in effect" and at end of section, after "variable pricing levels", substituted "as provided in 39-71-2341" for "within individual rate classifications to reward an employer with a good safety record and penalize an employer with a poor safety record. An employer's payroll reporting and premium history and other relevant factors may also be considered in implementing variable pricing levels." Amendment effective January 1, 1994.

1991 Amendment: Inserted last sentence regarding factors that may be considered in implementing variable pricing levels. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

1990 Special Session Amendment: At end of first sentence substituted "mutual insurance fund" for "nonprofit, independent public corporation"; in fourth sentence, after "must be set", inserted "at least annually", after "level sufficient to" substituted "ensure the adequate funding of" for "fund", and at end inserted "during and at the end of the period for which the rates will be in effect"; and inserted fifth through seventh sentences providing procedure State Fund must follow in determining premium rates that adequately predict future costs and providing for refund of unnecessary surpluses. Amendment effective July 1, 1990.

House Bill No. 2 Clarification: In sec. 7 of HB No. 2 (Ch. 4, Sp. L. May 1990), at end of first sentence, the phrase "nonprofit, independent public corporation" was deleted but was not shown as stricken and "mutual insurance fund" was added but was not underlined.

Payment of All Potential Claims Under Plan No. 1 Not Ensured: Nothing in the law governing the self-insurers guaranty fund provides a mechanism that legally ensures that the fund will pay all covered workers' compensation claims against a fund member who becomes insolvent. The law only requires that the fund assume the workers' compensation obligations or liabilities of insolvent self-insurers. 46 A.G. Op. 1 (1995).

No Requirement That State Fund Provide Employers' Liability Insurance Coverage: Under 39-71-2316, the State Compensation Mutual Insurance Fund is authorized but not required to provide its policyholders with employers' liability insurance in connection with workers' compensation coverage and occupational disease coverage. 45 A.G. Amendment effective July 1, 1998.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, it is the intent of the state compensation insurance fund to assist all Montanans by reducing the unfunded liability of the old fund, terminating the old fund liability tax when the old fund is adequately funded, which is currently estimated to occur as early as June 30, 1999, providing for the payment of dividends to policyholders, and maintaining a viable state compensation insurance fund; and

WHEREAS, there was an unfunded liability of $355 million as of June 30, 1996, for claims for workers' compensation injuries occurring before July 1, 1990, in the old fund, which included $129 million in outstanding bond debt; and

WHEREAS, the old fund is funded with the old fund liability tax paid by employers, employees, and self-employed persons, generating as much as $50 million each year; and

WHEREAS, the surplus of $231 in the new fund as of June 30, 1996, allowed the Board of Directors of the State Fund to declare a dividend of up to $109 million to retire the outstanding bond debt in the old fund; and

WHEREAS, the unfunded liability in the old fund will be an estimated $200 million deficit by June 30, 1997, and the surplus or the excess of assets above the reserves that are set aside to meet the claim liability in the new fund will be an estimated $127 million by June 30, 1997; and

WHEREAS, current state law requires the State Fund to use dividends to be applied first to old fund outstanding liability rather than paying dividends directly to policyholders, the State Fund shall, no later than June 30, 1998, transfer $63.8 million to the old fund account to pay old fund claims to allow direct payment of dividends to policyholders; and

WHEREAS, the $20 million appropriation received by the State Fund from the general fund during the June 1989 Special Session partially addressed the unfunded liability issue existing at that time in the old fund and canceled a planned 22% rate increase; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund now agrees to repay the $20 million appropriation to the general fund by June 30, 1999, in lieu of transferring additional funds to the old fund account to provide the general fund with additional revenue and to remove any perception that the State Fund remains a burden on the general fund; and

WHEREAS, because decreases in premium rates totaled 35% in fiscal years 1996 and 1997 and legislative changes in benefit levels have resulted in the return of private carriers, the 15% limitation on administration expenses as a percent of the prior year's premium will significantly impact the State Fund's ability to provide service to policyholders and their injured workers; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund seeks to improve the level of services provided to customers without increasing existing State Fund staffing levels by working with private sector-licensed insurance producers; and

WHEREAS, in response to Haag v. Montana Schools Group Insurance Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P.2d 693 (1995), in which the Montana Supreme Court ruled that an insurer's failure to comply with the time limitations for accepting or denying a workers' compensation claim constituted acceptance of the claim, current law needs to be clarified to provide that the failure to comply with the time limitations does not constitute acceptance of the claim."

Severability: Section 32, Ch. 276, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Termination: Section 35(2), Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided that the temporary version of 39-71-2316 terminates June 30, 1998.

1995 Amendments — Composite Section — Coordination: Chapter 26 in fifth sentence of (5), after "compensation insurance and", substituted "may" for "shall"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective February 2, 1995. This chapter was voided by sec. 30, Ch. 186, and sec. 5, Ch. 305, L. 1995, both coordination sections.

Chapter 186 in (5), in fifth sentence after "belong to", substituted "a licensed workers' compensation advisory organization or a licensed workers' compensation rating organization under Title 33, chapter 16, part 4" for "the national council on compensation insurance", substituted "may" for "shall", and substituted "designated workers' compensation advisory organization, as provided in Title 33, chapter 16, part 10" for "national council" and inserted last sentence prohibiting use, sale, or distribution of payroll or loss information without employer's prior written approval; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 305 in (1), after "state", inserted language authorizing State Fund to provide related employers' liability insurance upon Board approval and deleted second sentence that read: "The state fund may charge a minimum yearly premium to cover its administrative costs for coverage of a small employer"; in fourth sentence in (5) substituted language requiring State Fund to belong to licensed workers' compensation advisory organization or licensed workers' compensation rating organization for "state fund must belong to the national council on compensation insurance" and at end substituted language authorizing use of classifications adopted by workers' compensation advisory organization for former language requiring State Fund to "use the classifications of employment adopted by the national council" and inserted last sentence prohibiting, except as provided by law, use, sale, or distribution by advisory or rating organization of employer's payroll or loss information without prior written permission; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the most appropriate.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 630 at end of first sentence of (1), after "state", deleted "and, in connection with the coverage, provide employers' liability insurance"; deleted former (3) that read: "(3) adopt, amend, and repeal rules relating to the conduct of its business"; and near middle of (9) substituted "private insurance carrier" for "domestic mutual insurer". Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Severability: Section 15, Ch. 630, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

Saving Clause: Section 16, Ch. 630, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

1990 Special Session Amendment: In (4) inserted exception clause; in (6) inserted second through fourth sentences providing that rates must be adopted following rulemaking procedures under Montana Administrative Procedure Act, exempting State Fund from following Act when changing classifications and rates, and providing that contested case procedures do not apply to classification or premium rate; and in (9), in second sentence after "may not be paid", substituted "until adequate actuarially determined reserves are set aside" for "until the unfunded liability of the state fund is eliminated and adequate actuarially determined reserves are determined" and inserted third and fourth sentences providing that after reserves have been set aside, dividends may not be paid until claims for injuries resulting from accidents that occurred before July 1, 1990, have been paid. Amendment effective July 1, 1990.

Exemption From Notice Requirement: Section 12, Ch. 9, Sp. L. June 1989, provided: "The 30-day notice requirement imposed under 39-71-2304(1) does not apply to rate changes effective July 1, 1989, made in response to the provisions of [this act]."

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 8] [39-71-2316] grants rulemaking authority to the newly created state fund to adopt or repeal rules or amend existing rules to implement the new state compensation mutual insurance fund [now state compensation fund]. would be bound to insure all employers who apply to it for workers' compensation coverage and shall insure state agencies.

As the primary means of ensuring the solvency of the state fund, it must institute safety programs and set rates in a manner that awards employers who provide a safe working environment and penalizes employers who do not.

The legislature further intends that the new state fund institute programs to automate the processing of claims and payment of benefits. The state fund may contract out to the private sector certain claims administration and servicing functions if the state fund determines it to be cost-effective.

The legislature intends that the governor shall implement staggered terms in naming the initial members of the board."

DECISIONS AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

State Fund Subject to MAPA Unless Changing Classifications or Rates — Formal Rule Adopting General Rules of Manual and Association Plans Not Required: After the State Fund published notice of its intent to adopt rules establishing classification rates, the Montana Health Care Association filed an action alleging that the State Fund had violated the Montana Administrative Procedure Act (MAPA) by not formally adopting the "General Rules" section of the Underwriting Manual or criteria for association plans. The Supreme Court upheld the lower court's decision. The State Fund is required to follow MAPA in establishing rates, but MAPA does not require the State Fund to adopt by formal rule either the Underwriting Manual or association plan criteria. Mont. Health Care Ass'n v. St. Fund, 256 M 146, 845 P2d 113, 50 St. Rep. 1 (1993).

No Requirement That State Fund Provide Employers' Liability Insurance Coverage: Under this section, the State Compensation Mutual Insurance Fund (now State Compensation Insurance Fund) is authorized but not required to provide its policyholders with employers' liability insurance in connection with workers' compensation coverage and occupational disease coverage. 1997 Amendment: Chapter 276 at beginning of (1) inserted exception clause; inserted (2) requiring the State Fund to pay $10 million to the general fund by the end of fiscal years 1998 and 1999; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, it is the intent of the state compensation insurance fund to assist all Montanans by reducing the unfunded liability of the old fund, terminating the old fund liability tax when the old fund is adequately funded, which is currently estimated to occur as early as June 30, 1999, providing for the payment of dividends to policyholders, and maintaining a viable state compensation insurance fund; and

WHEREAS, there was an unfunded liability of $355 million as of June 30, 1996, for claims for workers' compensation injuries occurring before July 1, 1990, in the old fund, which included $129 million in outstanding bond debt; and

WHEREAS, the old fund is funded with the old fund liability tax paid by employers, employees, and self-employed persons, generating as much as $50 million each year; and

WHEREAS, the surplus of $231 in the new fund as of June 30, 1996, allowed the Board of Directors of the State Fund to declare a dividend of up to $109 million to retire the outstanding bond debt in the old fund; and

WHEREAS, the unfunded liability in the old fund will be an estimated $200 million deficit by June 30, 1997, and the surplus or the excess of assets above the reserves that are set aside to meet the claim liability in the new fund will be an estimated $127 million by June 30, 1997; and

WHEREAS, current state law requires the State Fund to use dividends to be applied first to old fund outstanding liability rather than paying dividends directly to policyholders, the State Fund shall, no later than June 30, 1998, transfer $63.8 million to the old fund account to pay old fund claims to allow direct payment of dividends to policyholders; and

WHEREAS, the $20 million appropriation received by the State Fund from the general fund during the June 1989 Special Session partially addressed the unfunded liability issue existing at that time in the old fund and canceled a planned 22% rate increase; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund now agrees to repay the $20 million appropriation to the general fund by June 30, 1999, in lieu of transferring additional funds to the old fund account to provide the general fund with additional revenue and to remove any perception that the State Fund remains a burden on the general fund; and

WHEREAS, because decreases in premium rates totaled 35% in fiscal years 1996 and 1997 and legislative changes in benefit levels have resulted in the return of private carriers, the 15% limitation on administration expenses as a percent of the prior year's premium will significantly impact the State Fund's ability to provide service to policyholders and their injured workers; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund seeks to improve the level of services provided to customers without increasing existing State Fund staffing levels by working with private sector-licensed insurance producers; and

WHEREAS, in response to Haag v. Montana Schools Group Insurance Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P.2d 693 (1995), in which the Montana Supreme Court ruled that an insurer's failure to comply with the time limitations for accepting or denying a workers' compensation claim constituted acceptance of the claim, current law needs to be clarified to provide that the failure to comply with the time limitations does not constitute acceptance of the claim."

Severability: Section 32, Ch. 276, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 424 in (1) of contingent version inserted last sentence concerning investment in common stocks; and inserted (2) concerning limit on investment in common stocks. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Coordination Instruction: Section 5, Ch. 424, L. 1995, provided: "If House Bill No. 463 is not passed and approved by the electorate, then [section 3 of this act] [amending 39-71-2320] is void." House Bill No. 463, authorizing investment in common stocks, was submitted to the electorate as C-31 in the general election in November 1996. C-31 was not approved by the electorate.

1999 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 184 in (1) in first sentence after "money" deleted "taxes collected under 39-71-2503 and 39-71-2505" and at beginning of second sentence inserted exception clause; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 26, 1999.

Chapter 389 at end of (2) substituted "may be spent as provided in 17-8-101(2)(b)" for "are statutorily appropriated as provided in 17-7-502"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1999.

1997 Amendment: (Temporary version) Chapter 276 in (1), in first sentence after "money", inserted "taxes collected under 39-71-2503 and 39-71-2505, and the interest and penalties on the taxes in accordance with 15-1-501"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997, and terminates on the date that the old fund liability tax is terminated pursuant to 39-71-2505 (now repealed).

(Version effective on occurrence of contingency) Chapter 276 in (1), in first sentence after "money", inserted "taxes collected under 39-71-2503 and 39-71-2505, and the interest and penalties on the taxes in accordance with 15-1-501"; deleted former (2) that read: "(2) The proceeds of bonds issued and loans given to the state fund under 39-71-2354 and 39-71-2355 must be deposited in the account for claims for injuries resulting from accidents that occurred before July 1, 1990"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective on the date that the budget director certifies that the old fund liability tax is terminated pursuant to 39-71-2505 (now repealed).

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, it is the intent of the state compensation insurance fund to assist all Montanans by reducing the unfunded liability of the old fund, terminating the old fund liability tax when the old fund is adequately funded, which is currently estimated to occur as early as June 30, 1999, providing for the payment of dividends to policyholders, and maintaining a viable state compensation insurance fund; and

Severability: Section 11, Ch. 797, L. 1991, was a severability section.

1990 Special Session Amendment: In (1) inserted second sentence requiring separation into accounts of amounts relating to claims for injuries resulting from accidents that occurred before July 1, 1990, and claims for injuries resulting from accidents occurring on or after that date; and inserted (2) providing that loan proceeds under 39-71-2353 (now repealed) must be deposited in account for claims for injuries resulting from accidents that occurred before July 1, 1990. Amendment effective July 1, 1990.

1989 Amendment: At end changed "industrial insurance expendable trust fund" to "state fund"; and made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective on the earlier of signing of executive order creating state compensation mutual insurance fund (now state compensation insurance fund) or January 1, 1990.

1983 Amendment: At end of section, substituted "expendable trust fund" for "account in the agency fund".

Severability Clause: Section 23, Ch. 329, L. 1969, was a severability clause.

Attorney General's Opinions

Unfunded Liability in Industrial Insurance Expendable Trust Fund Not State Debt: To the extent an unfunded liability may exist in the industrial insurance expendable trust fund, it has arisen not by conscious act of the Legislature but from a combination of circumstances that resulted in a mismatch between liability incurred and trust fund deposits. Further, no claim was made that the trust fund's corpus would be inadequate to satisfy accrued benefit payment obligations. For these reasons, the unfunded liability was not considered a "state debt" within the meaning of Art. VIII, sec. 8, Mont. Const. 42 A.G. Op. 46 (1987).

ARM 24.29.3504 and 24.29.3505 Policy and declarations, termination.

Case Notes

When Coverage Effective: An application for workers' compensation plan No. 3 coverage was made on an obsolete form, six entities were listed on the form rather than one as required by administrative rule, and the application had not been processed by the Workers' Compensation Division (now State Fund) and approved or disapproved prior to the time of a claim under the policy. The court held that coverage was effective as of the date the Division (now State Fund) received the application in the mail, pursuant to ARM 24.29.3501. Reiser v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 230 M 340, 750 P2d 109, 45 St. Rep. 256 (1988).

Failure to Adopt Procedural Rules — Coverage Mandatory: Defendant established Bennett Well Service in 1975 and enrolled in the Workers' Compensation program, including an election to cover himself as a sole employer. In June 1979, his son began work for him. On June 26, the son fractured his leg. An injury report was filed July 2, 1979. On July 13, 1979, defendant elected coverage for his son and on July 31, 1979, the end of the quarter, sent in quarterly reports and premiums, including a premium for his son. Section 39-71-203 gives the Division (now State Fund) the authority to administer the Workers' Compensation Act. This section orders the Division (now State Fund) to prescribe procedures by which employers may elect to be bound by compensation plan No. 3, including the effective time of the election. The Division (now State Fund) failed to adopt rules prescribing the proper procedure other than reporting and paying procedures, which defendant followed. Because it had not adopted rules governing the election procedure, the Division (now State Fund) could not deny coverage of plaintiff. Bennett v. Bennett, 196 M 22, 637 P2d 512, 38 St. Rep. 2091 (1981).

39-71-2351. Purpose of separation of state fund liability as of July 1, 1990, and of separate funding of claims before and on or after that date.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: (Version effective on occurrence of contingency) Chapter 276 deleted (2)(b) that read: "(b) create an old fund liability tax provided for in 39-71-2503 and dedicate the tax money first to the repayment of bonds issued under 39-71-2354 and 39-71-2355 and then to the repayment of loans given under 39-71-2354 and 39-71-2355 and the direct payment of the costs of administering and paying claims for injuries from accidents that occurred before July 1, 1990"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective on the date that the budget director certifies that the old fund liability tax is terminated pursuant to 39-71-2505 (now repealed).

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, it is the intent of the state compensation insurance fund to assist all Montanans by reducing the unfunded liability of the old fund, terminating the old fund liability tax when the old fund is adequately funded, which is currently estimated to occur as early as June 30, 1999, providing for the payment of dividends to policyholders, and maintaining a viable state compensation insurance fund; and

WHEREAS, there was an unfunded liability of $355 million as of June 30, 1996, for claims for workers' compensation injuries occurring before July 1, 1990, in the old fund, which included $129 million in outstanding bond debt; and

WHEREAS, the old fund is funded with the old fund liability tax paid by employers, employees, and self-employed persons, generating as much as $50 million each year; and

WHEREAS, the surplus of $231 in the new fund as of June 30, 1996, allowed the Board of Directors of the State Fund to declare a dividend of up to $109 million to retire the outstanding bond debt in the old fund; and

WHEREAS, the unfunded liability in the old fund will be an estimated $200 million deficit by June 30, 1997, and the surplus or the excess of assets above the reserves that are set aside to meet the claim liability in the new fund will be an estimated $127 million by June 30, 1997; and

WHEREAS, current state law requires the State Fund to use dividends to be applied first to old fund outstanding liability rather than paying dividends directly to policyholders, the State Fund shall, no later than June 30, 1998, transfer $63.8 million to the old fund account to pay old fund claims to allow direct payment of dividends to policyholders; and

WHEREAS, the $20 million appropriation received by the State Fund from the general fund during the June 1989 Special Session partially addressed the unfunded liability issue existing at that time in the old fund and canceled a planned 22% rate increase; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund now agrees to repay the $20 million appropriation to the general fund by June 30, 1999, in lieu of transferring additional funds to the old fund account to provide the general fund with additional revenue and to remove any perception that the State Fund remains a burden on the general fund; and

WHEREAS, because decreases in premium rates totaled 35% in fiscal years 1996 and 1997 and legislative changes in benefit levels have resulted in the return of private carriers, the 15% limitation on administration expenses as a percent of the prior year's premium will significantly impact the State Fund's ability to provide service to policyholders and their injured workers; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund seeks to improve the level of services provided to customers without increasing existing State Fund staffing levels by working with private sector-licensed insurance producers; and

WHEREAS, in response to Haag v. Montana Schools Group Insurance Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P.2d 693 (1995), in which the Montana Supreme Court ruled that an insurer's failure to comply with the time limitations for accepting or denying a workers' compensation claim constituted acceptance of the claim, current law needs to be clarified to provide that the failure to comply with the time limitations does not constitute acceptance of the claim."

Severability: Section 32, Ch. 276, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Delayed Effective Date — Contingency: Section 34(3), Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "[Sections 8, 19, 22 [39-71-2351], 24, and 31(2)] are effective on the date that the budget director certifies that the old fund liability tax is terminated pursuant to [section 28] [39-71-2505, now repealed]." On September 16, 1998, the budget director certified that the old fund liability tax terminates effective January 1, 1999.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 637 in (2)(b), before "39-71-2503", substituted "create an old fund liability tax provided for in" for "extend the payroll tax imposed by". Amendment effective May 13, 1993.

Severability: Section 10, Ch. 637, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 14, Ch. 637, L. 1993, provided: "The workers' compensation old fund liability tax imposed on sole proprietors, subchapter S. corporation shareholders, partners of partnerships, and members and managers of limited liability companies applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to tax years beginning after December 31, 1992."

1991 Amendment: In (2)(b), after "repayment of", substituted "bonds issued under 39-71-2354 and 39-71-2355" for "loan given under 39-71-2353 [now repealed]" and after "then to the" inserted "repayment of loans given under 39-71-2354 and 39-71-2355 and the". Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Part Case Notes

Retroactive Application of Mediation Procedure — Unconstitutional Impairment of Contracts: The 1987 amendments to the Workers' Compensation Act concerning dispute resolution and mediation may not be applied retroactively to cases in which a petition was filed prior to July 1, 1987, because such application would unconstitutionally impair a contractual obligation. In analyzing a contract clause challenge, the court adopted a three-tier analysis: (1) Is the state law a substantial impairment of contractual relationship? (2) Does the state have a significant and legitimate purpose for the law? (3) Does the law impose reasonable conditions reasonably related to achieving a legitimate and public purpose? The court held that the delay occasioned by the requirement to mediate a dispute represents a substantial impairment of the employee's contractual rights under the insurance policy, that the state has a legitimate and significant purpose for the law because it is intended to encourage out-of-court settlements and lessen the volume of cases in the Workers' Compensation Court, and that there is insufficient evidence to show that the mediation process would achieve a more manageable caseload for the Workers' Compensation Court. Carmichael v. Workers' Comp. Court, 234 M 410, 763 P2d 1122, 45 St. Rep. 2012 (1988), distinguished in Synek v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 272 M 246, 900 P2d 884, 52 St. Rep. 651 (1995). (2) The remaining portions of this act apply only to injuries, diseases, and events occurring after June 30, 1987."

Case Notes

Failure to Exercise Statutory Procedural Right Held Not to Violate Due Process: Grooms filed a workers' compensation claim with her insurer, the State Fund, alleging that she suffered from a skin allergy condition. The State Fund denied liability under the Workers' Compensation Act and requested the Department of Labor and Industry to process the claim under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana. Subsequently, Grooms claimed that the decision to process her claim under the Occupational Disease Act rather than the Workers' Compensation Act denied her due process of law by denying her notice and an opportunity to be heard. The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that when her claim was denied under the Workers' Compensation Act, Grooms retained the statutory rights to have her claim resolved by mediation and to have her claim heard by the Workers' Compensation Court and, therefore, Grooms was not denied due process of law. The Supreme Court affirmed the Workers' Compensation Court, holding that Grooms still had available to her various statutory remedies that she chose not to pursue after her claim was denied by the State Fund. The Supreme Court held that her failure to pursue those remedies did not result in a denial of due process. Grooms v. Ponderosa Inn, 283 M 459, 942 P2d 699, 54 St. Rep. 725 (1997).

Jurisdiction of Court to Award Penalty: Lovell, who was a painter, roofer, and lawn mower, stopped by the Oak Room Bar for a drink after work and was asked by the owner to help unload a truck. In the process, Lovell injured his knee and was found by the State Fund to be temporarily totally disabled. The Workers' Compensation Court later awarded a penalty against the State Fund for miscalculating mileage benefits owed Lovell and for incorrectly reducing his benefit payments. The State Fund argued that the Workers' Compensation Court had no jurisdiction to award the penalties because the parties had not complied with the dispute resolution process and mediation requirements and because Lovell had not included the issue of his social security payments offset in his petition. The Supreme Court noted that the State Fund had included the satisfaction of the dispute resolution requirements in a pretrial order, which the fund had signed, and that the pretrial order also included the issue of whether the fund had unreasonably delayed or denied payment of Lovell's benefits. The Supreme Court held that for these reasons, there was substantial evidence to support the Workers' Compensation Court's findings of unreasonableness and that therefore the Workers' Compensation Court had jurisdiction to apply the penalties. Lovell v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 260 M 279, 860 P2d 95, 50 St. Rep. 1043 (1993).

Applicability: Section 72, Ch. 464, L. 1987, provided: "(1) Sections 8 [39-71-2401] and 52 through 57 [39-71-2406 through 39-71-2411] apply retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to all injuries and diseases, regardless of the date of occurrence. With respect to rehabilitation disputes, sections 8 [39-71-2401] and 52 through 57 [39-71-2406 through 39-71-2411] apply retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, unless the division had jurisdiction over the dispute under the law in effect at the time of injury.

Severability: Section 26, Ch. 516, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1989 Amendment: Chapter 427 in (3) and (5) substituted "argument" for "evidence"; in middle of (4), after "argument", substituted "must fully present the party's case" for "must include the evidence the party would present if the case were being presented to the worker's compensation judge"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

Self-Insurers Guaranty Fund

Part Compiler's Comments

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 244, L. 1989, provided: "A statement of intent accompanies this bill because [section 6] [39-71-2610] delegates to the newly established board of directors of the Montana self-insurers guaranty fund rulemaking authority to administer the guaranty fund.

The fund is a private, nonprofit legal entity. The members of the board of directors must be elected by members of the fund, except for the initial appointments, which must be made by the governor.

It is the intent of [section 4] [39-71-2604] that the governor have the authority to implement staggered terms for board members during the initial appointing process.

It is the intent of [section 6] [39-71-2610] that the board of directors of the Montana self-insurers guaranty fund have the general authority to adopt rules to implement and enforce [this act] [Title 39, Ch. 71, part 26]. The rules should provide:

(1) a process for electing members and officers of the board;
(2) a method for filling any vacancy on the board;
(3) a description of the duties of board members;
(4) a method of keeping records of the board;
(5) a method for transacting the business of the board; and
(6) a description of the banking and investment policy of the board.

The rules should also establish the general duties and powers of operation of the fund. These include establishing a method of assessing contributions to the fund and a method of prorating payment if available funds are not sufficient to pay all claims."

Effective Date: Section 16, Ch. 244, L. 1989, provided: "(1) [Section 14] [a noncodified extension of rulemaking authority] and [this section] are effective on passage and approval.

(2) [Sections 1 through 13] [39-71-2601 through 39-71-2604, 39-71-2609 through 39-71-2611, and 39-71-2615 through 39-71-2620] and [section 15] [a noncodified codification instruction] are effective July 1, 1989." Approved March 22, 1989.

Attorney General's Opinions

Payment of All Potential Claims Under Plan No. 1 Not Ensured: Nothing in the law governing the self-insurers guaranty fund provides a mechanism that legally ensures that the fund will pay all covered workers' compensation claims against a fund member who becomes insolvent. The law only requires that the fund assume the workers' compensation obligations or liabilities of insolvent self-insurers. 46 A.G. Op. 1 (1995).

39-71-2609. Establishment of fund — employer participation required.

Compiler's Comments

1991 Amendment: Deleted (3) that read: "(3) The department shall consult with the board regarding the suitability of allowing an employer to self-insure or to continue as a self-insured employer".

Attorney General's Opinions

Proceedings of Workers' Compensation Board of Directors Subject to Montana Administrative Procedure Act: The Board of Directors of the Montana self-insurers guaranty fund fits the definition of "agency" in state law. The fund is considered a public organization because it a public purpose and because it has been granted statutory authority to adopt public rules and to enter public contracts. Therefore, when the Board adopts rules or resolves contested cases, it must comply with the provisions of the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. 46 A.G. Op. 1 (1995).

Payment of All Potential Claims Under Plan No. 1 Not Ensured: Nothing in the law governing the self-insurers guaranty fund provides a mechanism that legally ensures that the fund will pay all covered workers' compensation claims against a fund member who becomes insolvent. Power of Fund to Prevent Sole Exercise of Departmental Powers: When presented with the question of interpretation of the phrase "with the concurrence of the Montana self-insurers guaranty fund", or equivalent phrase, used throughout the law governing the fund, the Attorney General held that the power to concur, by irresistible implication, also carries with it the power to withhold concurrence, but implies no power to initiate action. The Legislature gave the fund, through the power of concurrence, the power to prevent the sole exercise of discretion of statutory powers by the Department of Labor and Industry. 46 A.G. INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Exercise of Court's Discretion in Failure to Award Nominal Benefit Award — Proposed Conclusion of Law Not Judicial Admission: In a proposed conclusion of law, the insurer restated its position that claimant had sustained no loss of earning capacity as a result of his industrial injury and recommended award of a nominal disability payment under former 39-71-2906. This did not have the effect of a confessory pleading or evidentiary admission and could not be used as a substitute for legal evidence at trial. Further, it was within the court's discretion, after considering the actual facts and observing the character and demeanor of witnesses, to decline to grant even a nominal disability award. White v. Ford, Bacon & Davis Tex., Inc., 256 M 9, 843 P2d 787, 49 St. Rep. 1117 (1992).

Jurisdiction and Nature of Workers' Compensation Court: A driver was injured while operating a tractor-trailer owned by one company and leased to another company that was in turn a division of a third company. The driver was awarded workers' compensation benefits. When the Workers' Compensation Uninsured Employers' Fund sought to collect the amount of the benefits from the company that owned the rig and from the third company, both companies denied any responsibility for the employment of the injured man. The Workers' Compensation Court and the Fund could not agree on the court's jurisdiction, and the instant appeal followed. The Supreme Court determined that the dispute involved benefits payable to the claimant, the Workers' Compensation Court has exclusive jurisdiction, the legislative history relied upon by the Fund and the history of the court indicated that the jurisdiction of the Workers' Compensation Court went beyond adjudication of workers' claims only when a dispute is related to benefits payable to a claimant, and that the Workers' Compensation Court has declaratory power under the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. State ex rel. St. Uninsured Employers' Fund v. Hunt, 191 M 514, 625 P2d 539, 38 St. Rep. 421 (1981).

Incomplete Conclusions of Law: A Workers' Compensation Court conclusion that "claimant is totally disabled within the meaning of the Workers' Compensation Law" and that insurer "is liable to the claimant for all compensation provided by the Workers' Compensation Laws of the state of Montana" is incomplete and fails to provide the Supreme Court with a final judgment capable of being reviewed on appeal. Case Notes

Court's Discretion in Reopening Case: The Workers' Compensation Court has discretion under ARM 24.5.316 to reopen a case and to allow additional evidence. It was not an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse to allow additional evidence when it had sound reasons for refusal. Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Deposing of Nonresident Claims Adjuster: A nonresident claims adjuster can be compelled by the Workers' Compensation Court to be deposed in Montana as a logical extension of an insurer's obligation to designate a resident adjuster under ARM 24.29.804. Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Pretrial Order Construed to Include Issue of Whether Additional Workers' Compensation Benefits Payable: Garcia claimed that in holding that she was not entitled to any benefits beyond the amount paid, the Workers' Compensation Court exceeded the issue of whether or not she was injured, depriving her of her right to notice and opportunity to be heard. However, Garcia's first contention in the pretrial order was that of whether she was entitled to temporary total disability payments. The court had wide discretion in determining that the issue of compensation was within the scope of the pretrial order. The Supreme Court found that Garcia was adequately advised by the pretrial order of the presence of the disability issue and could not claim surprise on appeal. Garcia v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 253 M 196, 832 P2d 770, 49 St. Rep. 440 (1992).

Reversal of Hearing Examiner's Findings — Power of Workers' Compensation Court to Order New Trial: The Workers' Compensation Court appointed a hearing examiner to hear evidence in an injury case, but it was for the court to make the final decision. The examiner's findings, conclusions, and proposed decision were submitted to the court for approval. It was within the court's power to order a new trial on the ground that the examiner apparently disregarded or was not aware of evidence crucial to the case. Gould v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 233 M 494, 766 P2d 213, 45 St. Rep. 1671 (1988), distinguishing Walter v. Evans Prod. Co., 207 M 26, 672 P2d 613 (1983).

Employees of Office of Workers' Compensation Judge — Exempt From Classification Plan: The question of whether or not the employees of the office of the Workers' Compensation Judge are exempt from the state classification plan (Title 2, ch. 18) depended upon whether the office was part of the judicial branch or the executive branch. The similarities to state courts, the qualifications for office, the statutory provisions regarding the Judge and the court, statutory construction, and the legislative intent derived from the history supported the conclusion that the office performs a judicial function. Therefore, the employees are employees of the judicial branch and exempt from the state classification plan. 38 A.G. Op. 27 (1979).

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Admissibility of Unsworn Medical Reports: Under the rationale of ARM 24.5.317, adopted in 1990, medical records based on an examination of the claimant and exchanged between the parties are admissible without the necessity of foundation testimony. Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994), overruling Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 178 M 355, 584 P2d 656 (1978).

Court's Discretion in Reopening Case: The Workers' Compensation Court has discretion under ARM 24.5.316 to reopen a case and to allow additional evidence. It was not an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse to allow additional evidence when it had sound reasons for refusal. Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Pretrial Disclosure of Videotape Proof of Material Issue: A workers' compensation claimant who worked as a dog groomer claimed a shoulder injury. The Workers' Compensation Court properly excluded State Fund's videotape showing claimant grooming her horses because the state violated ARM 24.5.318(5)(g), requiring pretrial disclosure of substantive exhibits intended to prove a material point in issue. State Fund's argument that disclosure was not required because the tape impeached the claimant's shoulder injury claim failed because the tape showed the claimant engaged in activity she had said she could perform, but only on a limited basis. State Fund intended to use the tape to contradict other testimony, and the tape thus was direct evidence and subject to the pretrial disclosure rule. Simons v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 262 M 438, 865 P2d 1118, 50 St. Rep. 1628 (1993).

Relaxation of Evidentiary Rules Because of Prevalence of Procedural Irregularities — Failure to Lay Adequate Foundation for Evidence: It is not within the purview of the Supreme Court to allow a relaxation of the order of presentation of evidence in the Workers' Compensation Court on the ground that procedural irregularities often occur there. The Legislature has directed that the Workers' Compensation Court is bound by the common law and statutory rules of evidence. Therefore, the exclusion of State Fund's offered videotape that the Workers' Compensation Court ruled was direct evidence subject to the pretrial disclosure rule would not be overturned on the argument that the tape was rebuttal evidence for which State Fund had laid an inadequate foundation because of time constraints. Simons v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 262 M 438, 865 P2d 1118, 50 St. Rep. 1628 (1993).

Adoption by Workers' Compensation Court of Claimant's Proposed Findings, Conclusions, and Judgment: Appellant claimed reversible error by the Workers' Compensation Court's substantial, although not verbatim, adoption of claimant's proposed findings, conclusions, and judgment. Although under this section that court is governed by the Montana Administrative Procedure Act rather than by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, there is nothing in the Montana Administrative Procedure Act or the rules of the Workers' Compensation Court that prohibits the verbatim adoption of the prevailing party's proposed findings, conclusions, and judgment in a manner similar to that allowed for District Courts under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). Wolfe v. Webb, 251 M 217, 824 P2d 240, 49 St. Rep. 1 (1992).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Lack of Substantial Credible Evidence — Workers' Compensation Court's Findings Reviewed De Novo: Citing McIntyre v. Glen Lake Irrigation District, 249 M 63, 813 P2d 451 (1991), and White v. Ford, Bacon & Davis Tex., Inc., 256 M 9, 843 P2d 787 (1992), the Supreme Court held that to the extent that the Workers' Compensation Court's findings of fact are based upon deposition testimony, the Supreme Court sits in as good a position as the Workers' Compensation Court to review the evidence de novo. The Supreme Court therefore reviewed the deposition testimony of the physicians and rehabilitation counselors and found that there was insufficient evidence from which the Workers' Compensation Court could determine that Larson had a reasonable prospect for employment. Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 276 M 283, 915 P2d 863, 53 St. Rep. 394 (1996).

Claimant's Witness Qualified as Expert Over Defendant's Objection: The lower court's decision to allow the claimant's medical witness to be qualified as an expert witness was affirmed on appeal on the basis that prior to the 1987 revision, the Workers' Compensation Judge was not bound by common law or statutory rules of evidence. Roadarmel v. Royal Ins. Co., 237 M 163, 772 P2d 1259, 46 St. Rep. 705 (1989).

Relitigation Denied for Undiscovered Facts: An insurer who initially failed to conduct proper discovery and who had constructive notice of the claimant's self-employment may not relitigate the same liability issue based upon the discovery of the self-employment issue several years later. Res judicata may not be avoided on discovery of a fact or event involved in the original action that, had it been discovered earlier, may have resulted in a different legal situation. Rightnour v. Intermtn. Ins. Co., 236 M 108, 768 P2d 871, 46 St. Rep. 220 (1989).

Pretrial Discovery of Medical Information in Workers' Compensation Court — Source of Rules: Pretrial discovery of medical information in a workers' compensation case is governed by statutes applicable to the Workers' Compensation Court and by the Procedural Rules of the Workers' Compensation Court found in the Montana Rules of Court (1987 Desk Copy), published by West Publishing Company, beginning at page 245. Bowen v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 229 M 84, 745 P2d 330, 44 St. Rep. 1799 (1987).

Decedent's Statements About His Stress Not Hearsay: Workers' Compensation Court did not err in admitting testimony about statements decedent made on the day of his death. The statements allegedly showed decedent's job-related mental and emotional stress. The court is not bound by common law or statutory rules of evidence, and even if it were, the statements were not hearsay. Their purpose was to show what decedent thought and felt shortly before he died of heart failure. Tocco v. Great Falls, 220 M 221, 714 P2d 160, 43 St. Rep. 310 (1986).

Application of MAPA to Workers' Compensation Court — Court to Be Guided by Rules of Civil Procedure: Proceedings in the Workers' Compensation Court are governed not by the Rules of Civil Procedure but by the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. The Workers' Compensation Court may, however, be guided by the Rules of Civil Procedure to the extent that reference to those rules lies within the discretion of the court under ARM 2.52.224. Moen v. Peter Kiewit & Sons' Co., 201 M 425, 655 P2d 482, 39 St. Rep. 2209 (1982).

Hearsay Evidence Admissible in Workers' Compensation Court: On appeal from the Workers' Compensation Court, appellant contended opinion evidence of a real estate appraiser not qualified as an expert was hearsay and should not have been admitted. The Supreme Court noted that the Workers' Compensation Court was not bound by common law or statutory rules of evidence and found that the lower court in its findings did not unduly rely on the questionable hearsay evidence offered. Krause v. Sears Roebuck & Co., 197 M 102, 641 P2d 458, 39 St. Rep. 394 (1982), followed in Brown v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 231 M 158, 752 P2d 171, 45 St. Rep. 508 (1988).

Evidence — Lack of Injury: An employee had severe back pain at work and went home at the end of his shift. He later called his supervisor and stated he had hurt his back and was going to see a doctor and would not be at work for his next shift. Evidence that he failed to notify his employer at that time that he had been injured in an accident on the job was evidence that employee may not have believed he had suffered an on-the-job injury but was not evidence that employee did not suffer an on-the-job injury. Employee had 60 days to give employer notice of an on-the-job injury; that requirement was met by employee's written notice less than 3 weeks after the alleged injury, and there was no requirement that he notify employer of an accident or injury within hours or days of its occurrence. Jones v. St. Regis Paper Co., 196 M 138, 639 P2d 1140, 38 St. Rep. 2201 (1981).

Applicability of Rules of Civil Procedure to Workers' Compensation Court: Since the Workers' Compensation Court is expressly made subject to the Montana Administrative Procedure Act and the Act allows each agency subject to the Act to promulgate its own procedural rules, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure are not directly applicable to the court. Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981).

Jurisdiction and Nature of Workers' Compensation Court: A driver was injured while operating a tractor-trailer owned by one company and leased to another company that was in turn a division of a third company. The driver was awarded workers' compensation benefits. When the Workers' Compensation Uninsured Employers' Fund sought to collect the amount of the benefits from the company that owned the rig and from the third company, both companies denied any responsibility for the employment of the injured man. The Workers' Compensation Court and the Fund could not agree on the court's jurisdiction, and the instant appeal followed. The Supreme Court determined that the dispute involved benefits payable to the claimant, the Workers' Compensation Court had exclusive jurisdiction, the legislative history relied upon by the Fund and the history of the court indicated that the jurisdiction of the Workers' Compensation Court went beyond adjudication of workers' claims only when a dispute is related to benefits payable to a claimant, and that the Workers' Compensation Court had declaratory power under the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. State ex rel. St. Uninsured Employers' Fund v. Hunt, 191 M 514, 625 P2d 539, 38 St. Rep. 421 (1981).

Harmless Error — Consideration of Records Not Presented at Hearing: Where no timely objection was made at the time the Workers' Compensation Judge made known that he would consider an additional physical examination of the claimant after the close of the hearing, it was not error to include the results of the examination in the findings and conclusions filed by the Judge. The Judge also considered claimant's Veterans' Administration (now Veterans Affairs) medical records, which were not presented at the hearing. Since these records corroborated claimant's testimony, however, it was harmless error to consider them. Hume v. St. Regis Paper Co., 187 M 53, 608 P2d 1063, 37 St. Rep. 378 (1980).

Computation of Time Limit for Appeal in Workers' Compensation Case — Civil Procedure Rules Applied: A person who appeals from a final decision of the Workers' Compensation Court should in all fundamental fairness be given the benefit of that provision of Rule 5, M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.), which states that ". . . except that in cases where service of notice of entry of judgment is required by Rule 77(d) of the M.R.Civ.P. the time shall be 30 days from the service of notice of entry of judgment". When service of notice of the final decision is made as mandated by 2-4-623 and that service is made by mail, the provisions of Rule 21(c), M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.), are automatically put into play adding 3 days to the prescribed 30-day time limit for filing the notice of appeal set by Rule 4(a), M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.). However, when the final day of the period falls on a Sunday, Rule 21(a), M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.), comes into play extending the time limit to the next day. Dumont v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 183 M 190, 598 P2d 1099, 36 St. Rep. 1471 (1979).

Cross-Examination and Evidence: Parties before the Workers' Compensation Court have a right to cross-examination, which is a fundamental right and not an evidentiary rule. Statements contained in documents which are part of the case file, either before the Division of Workers' Compensation (now Department of Labor and Industry) or the court, cannot be considered by the court unless offered in evidence at the hearing, unless it is material of which the court may take judicial notice. Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 179 M 160, 587 P2d 11 (1978), clarifying and denying rehearing of Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 178 M 355, 584 P2d 656 (1978). Hert was held to no longer be authority for admissibility of medical records, in light of the 1990 adoption of ARM 24.5.317, in Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Evidence That May Be Considered — Judicial Notice: The Montana Rules of Evidence are more relaxed in an administrative proceeding than in a court of law, but due process will not be disregarded. The right to cross-examine is a constitutionally protected fundamental right and not an evidentiary rule. Section 2-4-612(5) makes this right absolute. The Workers' Compensation Judge may only consider evidence which is offered at the hearing or of which he may take judicial notice. A judicially noticed fact must be one not subject to reasonable dispute. Disputed medical conclusions by doctors contained in medical reports cannot be judicially noticed. Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 179 M 160, 587 P2d 11, 35 St. Rep. 1345 (1978), distinguishing Stevens v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 176 M 61, 575 P2d 1326 (1978), and clarifying and denying rehearing of Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 178 M 355, 584 P2d 656 (1978). Hert was held to no longer be authority for admissibility of medical records, in light of the 1990 adoption of ARM 24.5.317, in Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Medical Reports Considered: The Workers' Compensation Court properly considered unsworn written medical reports without violating Montana Rules of Evidence regarding hearsay, since the court is not bound by common law and statutory rules of evidence, and without violating claimant's right to cross-examination because she had the opportunity at the hearing to present rebutting medical evidence. Stevens v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 176 M 61, 575 P2d 1326, 35 St. Rep. 278 (1978).

Proceedings Administrative and Quasi-Judicial: Workers' Compensation Court proceedings are administrative in nature and quasi-judicial. Skrukrud v. Gallatin Laundry Co., Inc. & Employees Commercial Union Ins. Co., 171 M 217, 557 P2d 278 (1976).

Case Notes

Standard of Review for Factfindings Made by Workers' Compensation Court: The following are principles applicable to a Supreme Court review of findings of fact made by the Workers' Compensation Court: (1) the Supreme Court cannot substitute its judgment for that of the trial court regarding the weight of evidence on questions of fact; (2) when there is substantial evidence to support the Workers' Compensation Court, the Supreme Court cannot overturn the decision; (3) the Supreme Court will not substitute its judgment for that of the Workers' Compensation Court in matters of witness credibility and the weight of witness testimony; and (4) it is not the responsibility of the Supreme Court to determine whether sufficient evidence supports a contrary finding—rather, review entails a determination of whether substantial evidence supports the decision of the Workers' Compensation Court. Stevens v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 268 M 460, 886 P2d 962, 51 St. Rep. 1396 (1994). See also Wood v. Consol. Freightways, Inc., 248 M 26, 808 P2d 502 (1991), Nave v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 54, 835 P2d 706 (1992), and Houts v. Kare-Mor, Inc., 257 M 65, 847 P2d 701 (1993).

Substantial Credible Evidence:

The Workers' Compensation Court's findings regarding the evidence were supported by substantial evidence. The testimony of claimant and his wife contained numerous inconsistencies, which the court noted, and the court rejected some of their testimony on credibility grounds. The record also contained conflicting medical evidence. Burns v. Plum Creek Timber Co., 268 M 82, 885 P2d 508, 51 St. Rep. 1175 (1994), followed in EBI/Orion Group v. Blythe, 1998 MT 90, 288 M 356, 957 P2d 1134, 55 St. Rep. 359 (1998).

Decisions of the Workers' Compensation Court will not be overturned if there is substantial evidence to support its findings and conclusions. Strickland v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 273 M 254, 901 P2d 1391, 52 St. Rep. 962 (1995); Smith v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 254 M 71, 835 P2d 717, 49 St. Rep. 629 (1992); Wolfe v. Webb, 251 M 217, 824 P2d 240, 49 St. Rep. 1 (1992); Giacoletto v. Indus. Indem. Co., 231 M 191, 751 P2d 1059, 45 St. Rep. 536 (1988); Tenderholt v. Travel Lodge Int'l, 218 M 523, 709 P2d 1011, 42 St. Rep. 1792 (1985); Head v. Missoula Serv. Co., 181 M 129, 592 P2d 507 (1979); Close v. St. Regis Paper Co., 175 M 158, 573 P2d 163 (1977); Ramsey v. Argonaut NW. Ins. Co., 174 M 438, 571 P2d 384 (1977); Flansburg v. Pack River Co., 172 M 163, 561 P2d 1329 (1977); Skrukrud v. Gallatin Laundry Co., Inc. & Employees Commercial Union Ins. Co., 171 M 217, 557 P2d 278 (1976).

In ruling that substantial evidence supported the Workers' Compensation Court's decision, the Supreme Court noted: (1) the claimant, the decedent's surviving spouse, was found to be a credible witness; (2) the claimant's hypothetical question presented to each party's expert was found to be accurate; (3) the claimant's medical expert was found to be more qualified and his opinion was accorded greater weight; and (4) the nature of decedent's work and the particular activity he was engaged in at the time the initial heart attack occurred supported the Workers' Compensation Court's order. Davis v. Jones, 216 M 300, 701 P2d 351, 42 St. Rep. 840 (1985).

The Supreme Court cannot substitute its judgment for that of the Workers' Compensation Court, and its function on review of a decision of that court is to determine whether there is substantial evidence to support the findings and conclusions of the court. Where there is substantial evidence to support the findings and conclusions of the court, the Supreme Court cannot overturn the decision. Keene v. Anaconda Co., 201 M 102, 652 P2d 216, 39 St. Rep. 1982 (1982); Green v. C. R. Anthony Co., 194 M 102, 634 P2d 629, 38 St. Rep. 1638 (1981).

On appeal, where essentially the only question of liability is as between two insurers and where the claimant is assured of compensation, it is unnecessary for him to make an appearance other than the filing of a short brief stating his position and that he will not appear. Therefore, claimant will not be awarded attorney fees or costs for the appeal. Little v. Structural Systems, 188 M 482, 614 P2d 516, 37 St. Rep. 1187 (1980).

Where the only credible substantial evidence in the entire record concerning causation and injury supports the claimant, the findings, conclusions, and judgment of the Workers' Compensation Court to the contrary are not supported by the record. Termination of claimant's benefits was improper, and the decision was reversed. Hume v. St. Regis Paper Co., 187 M 53, 608 P2d 1063, 37 St. Rep. 378 (1980).

Where there is sufficient credible evidence in the record to support the decision of the Workers' Compensation Court, the Supreme Court on appeal is bound by the Workers' Compensation Court's decision on the facts. Catteyson v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 183 M 284, 599 P2d 341, 36 St. Rep. 1443 (1979), following McGee v. Bechtel Corp., 182 M 149, 595 P2d 1156, 36 St. Rep. 220 (1979).

Testimony Solely by Deposition — Court May Assess Evidence More Closely:

Although the Supreme Court reviews findings and conclusions of the Workers' Compensation Court by determining whether substantial credible evidence exists to support them, the Supreme Court may review and reweigh medical testimony offered by deposition. It was not error for the Workers' Compensation Court to give greater weight to the treating physician's testimony than it gave to that of State Fund's physician. State Fund's physician had treated claimant, a dog groomer, for a prior injury to the same part of the body as that injured in this case, and State Fund argued that its physician had greater knowledge of claimant's medical background, physical condition and abilities, and job duties. However, the initial opinion of State Fund's physician agreed with that of the treating physician, and he changed it to disagree only after he viewed a videotape of the claimant grooming her horses, which was properly excluded at trial because of State Fund's failure to disclose it prior to trial, and a videotape of a person who was not the claimant, but who he assumed was the claimant, grooming a dog. Simons v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 262 M 438, 865 P2d 1118, 50 St. Rep. 1628 (1993).

When testimony in the Workers' Compensation Court was solely by deposition, the Supreme Court was free to examine the lower court's findings more closely because the Supreme Court was in the same position as the lower court in assessing the evidence. Scyphers v. H&H Lumber, 237 M 424, 774 P2d 393, 46 St. Rep. 919 (1989).

"Clearly Erroneous" Test Applicable to Review of Agency Decision: In reviewing the findings of a trial court sitting without a jury, the Supreme Court will apply the following three-part test to determine if the trial court's findings on an agency decision are clearly erroneous: (1) the record will be reviewed to see if the findings are supported by substantial evidence; (2) if the findings are supported by substantial evidence, it will be determined whether the trial court misapprehended the effect of evidence; and (3) if substantial evidence exists and the effect of evidence has not been misapprehended, the Supreme Court may still decide that a finding is clearly erroneous when, although there is evidence to support it, a review of the record leaves the court with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Lee Rost Logging, 252 M 97, 827 P2d 5, 49 St. Rep. 102 (1992), following Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285, 48 St. Rep. 986 (1991), and overruling any conflicting standard delineated in Billings v. Billings Firefighters Local No. 521, 200 M 421, 651 P2d 627 (1982).

Issue Not Raised by Appellant: The appellant's workers' compensation benefits had been terminated on the basis that his conviction for growing marijuana demonstrated that his injury was not permanent. The State Fund argued that the appellant should have been ordered to reimburse the fund for all payments received. The Supreme Court held that the issue had not been raised by cross-appeal and therefore was not properly before the court. Baldwin v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 242 M 373, 791 P2d 49, 47 St. Rep. 810 (1990).

Appeal of Hearings Examiner's Decision to Supreme Court — No Jurisdiction: Where a workers' compensation claimant appealed an order of a hearings examiner directly to the Supreme Court, the case was remanded because this section and 39-71-2907 are unequivocally clear that the court only has jurisdiction to consider an appeal from an order of the Workers' Compensation Judge, not from an order of a hearings examiner. O'Donnell v. Ryans, Inc., 227 M 48, 736 P2d 965, 44 St. Rep. 883 (1987).

Causal Relationship Found on Undisputed Evidence: The record on appeal supported the lower court's finding and conclusion that a causal relationship between the accident and resulting physical disability was sufficiently established where testimony of the worker's physician set forth medical symptomatology from which the court could fairly conclude that claimant suffered an injury causing the physical disability, the employer failed to produce any evidence as to the specific cause of the injury or to disprove causation, and the court rightfully relied upon the worker's testimony. Frost v. Anaconda Co., 216 M 387, 701 P2d 987, 42 St. Rep. 889 (1985).

Substantial Evidence That Industrial Accident Caused Seizures: The Supreme Court upheld the Workers' Compensation Court's decision that claimant's epileptic seizures stemmed from an industrial accident which also resulted in a brain concussion. The Supreme Court reviewed critical medical testimony entered through depositions and found substantial evidence to support the Workers' Compensation Court's findings of fact. The Supreme Court declined appellant's directive to accord greater weight to one witness as the most qualified expert witness. Where findings are based on conflicting evidence, the Supreme Court's function on review is confined to determining whether there is substantial evidence to support the findings and not to determining whether there is sufficient evidence to support contrary findings. Lamb v. Universal Ins. Co., 211 M 360, 684 P2d 498, 41 St. Rep. 1414 (1984), followed in Hengel v. Pac. Hide & Fur Depot, 224 M 525, 730 P2d 1163, 43 St. Rep. 2387 (1986).

Redetermination — Remanded to Workers' Compensation Court for Review of Oral Testimony: When the medical evidence concerning claimant's ability to return to work was in conflict, the Workers' Compensation Court resolved the conflict in the testimony by finding as facts those medical opinions that would substantiate claimant's claim for compensation. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that this disregarding of evidence by the Workers' Compensation Court was error and remanded the case for redetermination. The Supreme Court stated that it could not review the medical evidence because, in addition to depositions, there had been oral testimony in the Workers' Compensation Court. Soelter v. Aetna Life & Cas. Co., 211 M 50, 683 P2d 480, 41 St. Rep. 1205 (1984).

Lack of Medical Evidence on Cause of Disability — Burden of Proof in Light of Purposes of Act — Standard of Appellate Review: Where the claimant and insurer presented medical evidence as to the uncertainty of the cause of the claimant's multiple sclerosis (MS) but it was shown that the onset of claimant's MS coincided with a job-related injury, the Supreme Court held that there was substantial evidence to support the findings of the Workers' Compensation Court that the claimant's MS was caused by that injury. Under the rationale of Moffett v. Bozeman Canning Co., 95 M 347, 26 P2d 973 (1933), the Workers' Compensation Court properly considered the timing of the claimant's traumatic injury and the purposes of the Workers' Compensation Act along with the evidence of a lack of medical certainty as to the cause of the claimant's disease. Given all these factors and the standard of appellate review of decisions of the Workers' Compensation Court established in McGee v. Bechtel Corp., 182 M 149, 595 P2d 1156 (1979), the Supreme Court could not conclude that the Workers' Compensation Court was clearly erroneous. Conway v. Missoula Serv. Co., 205 M 459, 669 P2d 225, 40 St. Rep. 1427 (1983), followed in Hengel v. Pac. Hide & Fur Depot, 224 M 525, 730 P2d 1163, 43 St. Rep. 2387 (1986).

Evidence of Injury — Claimant's Prior Denial of Injury: Employee's alleged denial of on-the-job accident causing injury was not necessarily inconsistent with conclusion of Supreme Court, on appeal from denial of workers' compensation benefits, that the clear preponderance of evidence indicated employee suffered a series of small on-the-job injuries during the year preceding his final breakdown, which were attributable to his work and aggravated a preexisting back condition and resulted in a herniated disc, total disability, a subsequent spinal fusion, and a disabled condition the extent of which had not yet been determined. Jones v. St. Regis Paper Co., 196 M 138, 639 P2d 1140, 38 St. Rep. 2201 (1981).

Review of Critical Deposition Evidence — Reversal for Direct Conflict With Medical Depositions: Ordinarily, the Supreme Court will defer to the Workers' Compensation Court's assessment of the demeanor and credibility of witnesses and will not substitute its judgment for that of the Workers' Compensation Court in determining the weight and credibility to be given testimony. However, where critical evidence, particularly medical evidence, was entered by deposition, the Supreme Court was in as good a position as the Workers' Compensation Court to judge the weight to be given it and reversed the judgment that compensable injury was not suffered where it was evident that the Workers' Compensation Court paid little heed to the evidence of claimant's doctors and where the findings and conclusions were directly contradicted by a preponderance of the evidence. Jones v. St. Regis Paper Co., 196 M 138, 639 P2d 1140, 38 St. Rep. 2201 (1981), followed in Shupert v. Anaconda Alum. Co., 215 M 182, 696 P2d 436, 42 St. Rep. 277 (1985), and Frost v. Anaconda Co., 216 M 387, 701 P2d 987, 42 St. Rep. 889 (1985).

Finding of Aggravation of Preexisting Disease Sustained: Where the Workers' Compensation Court finding that preexisting spinal disease was aggravated or accelerated by the accident was based on conflicting evidence, the Supreme Court's function on review was confined to determining whether there was substantial evidence on the whole record supporting the finding. The finding was supported and was upheld where the evidence consisted of claimant's testimony that he received a back injury and production of shirt showing holes where tines of a front-end loader pinned him between the loader and the steering wheel of tractor he was operating, nurse's notes and charts indicating claimant had complained about his back following the accident, and the depositions of the attending physician and another physician stating they found no aggravation by the accident of the preexisting spinal disease. Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., Inc., 194 M 109, 634 P2d 1189, 38 St. Rep. 1632 (1981).

Appeal From Lump-Sum Advance — Standards of Review: Wide discretion will be afforded Workers' Compensation Court determination regarding lump-sum settlements, and the decision will not be interfered with by the Supreme Court unless there is an abuse of discretion. The court will be presumed correct and affirmed if supported by substantial evidence and reversed only if the evidence clearly preponderates against the findings. The Supreme Court is required to look to all evidence properly before the court below in deciding whether there is substantial evidence to support the lower court's findings and conclusions. Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981).

Standards for Review of Lump-Sum Settlement: Findings of a lower tribunal in deciding a petition for conversion of future periodic workers' compensation payments into a lump-sum payment will be presumed correct and affirmed if supported by substantial evidence. Such tribunal is in a better position than the Supreme Court to learn petitioner's circumstances and to consider his needs and the results that would probably follow from a grant or denial of the petition. Polich v. Whalen's O.K. Tire Warehouse, 194 M 167, 634 P2d 1162, 38 St. Rep. 1572 (1981).

Computation of Time Limit for Appeal in Workers' Compensation Case — Civil Procedure Rules Applied:

For an appeal from a final decision of the Workers' Compensation Judge to be filed in the manner provided by law for appeals from the District Court in civil cases, there must be a date that is the starting point for the running of the period for filing notice of appeal under Rule 5, M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.). In that there is no judgment book in the Workers' Compensation Court in which to enter the judgment and therefore there can be no notice of entry of judgment, the court established, under the powers granted by Art. VII, sec. 2, Mont. Const., that the date on which a decision becomes final under ARM 2.52.222 shall be the starting point for the running of the period for filing the notice of appeal. McMahon v. The Anaconda Co., 194 M 546, 828 P2d 374, 38 St. Rep. 1233 (1981).

A person who appeals from a final decision of the Workers' Compensation Court should in all fundamental fairness be given the benefit of that provision of Rule 5, M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.). When service of notice of the final decision is made as mandated by 2-4-623 and that service is made by mail, the provisions of Rule 21(c), M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.), are automatically put into play adding 3 days to the prescribed 30-day time limit for filing the notice of appeal set by Rule 4(a), M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.). However, when the final day of the period falls on a Sunday, Rule 21(a), M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.), comes into play extending the time limit to the next day. Dumont v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 183 M 190, 598 P2d 1099, 36 St. Rep. 1471 (1979).

Scope of Review:

In an appeal from the award of workers' compensation benefits, where the only issue raised before the Workers' Compensation Court was whether there should be a trial de novo, the issue of sufficiency of the evidence to support the award could not be raised on appeal. Johnston v. Nat'l Auto. & Cas. Ins. Co., 184 M 538, 604 P2d 297, 36 St. Rep. 1871 (1979).

Review of Workers' Compensation Court proceedings under this section should be no different in scope from review of decisions of the Workmen's Compensation Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) under prior law; decisions of the court will not be disturbed if supported by substantial evidence. Skrukrud v. Gallatin Laundry Co., Inc. & Employees Commercial Union Ins. Co., 171 M 217, 557 P2d 278 (1976).

Standard of Review in Workers' Compensation Cases — Conflicting Evidence: Conflicting evidence was given in this case claiming death benefits under the Workers' Compensation Act.

One set of facts showed that death was caused by strenuous physical activity on the job prior to decedent's death, and the other testimony showed that decedent did nothing strenuous or unusual and that his activities on the job had no causal relationship to his death. The Workers' Compensation Court found the latter testimony more credible and entered findings accordingly. Where findings are based on conflicting evidence, the reviewing court's function is confined to determining whether there is substantial evidence supporting such findings. Following Jensen v. Zook Bros. Constr. Co., 178 M 59, 582 P2d 1191 (1978), substantial evidence supporting the findings existed here. It is not the court's function to determine whether there is sufficient evidence to support contrary findings. Stamatis v. Bechtel Power Corp., 184 M 64, 601 P2d 403, 36 St. Rep. 1866 (1979), followed in Wilson v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 206 M 63, 670 P2d 931, 40 St. Rep. 1509 (1983).

Appellate Reversal — Clear Preponderance Against Findings: The findings and conclusions of the Workers' Compensation Court, as in the case of District Courts, may not stand when there is a clear preponderance of the evidence against such findings or conclusions when viewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 179 M 160, 587 P2d 11 (1978), clarifying and denying rehearing of Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 178 M 355, 584 P2d 656 (1978). Hert was held to no longer be authority for admissibility of medical records, in light of the 1990 adoption of ARM 24.5.317, in Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Weight of Evidence: The Supreme Court will not substitute its judgment for that of the Workers' Compensation Court as to the weight of evidence on questions of fact. Robins v. Anaconda Aluminum Co., 175 M 514, 575 P2d 67 (1978); Brurud v. Judge Moving & Storage Co., 172 M 249, 563 P2d 558 (1977).

Incomplete Conclusions of Law: A Workers' Compensation Court conclusion that "claimant is totally disabled within the meaning of the Workers' Compensation Law" and that insurer "is liable to the claimant for all compensation provided by the Workers' Compensation Laws of the state of Montana" is incomplete and fails to provide the Supreme Court with a final judgment capable of being reviewed on appeal. Jensen v. Zook Bros. Constr. Co., 174 M 78, 568 P2d 555, 34 St. Rep. 1022 (1977).

1997 Amendment: Chapter 276 inserted (2) requiring that petition for hearing before Workers' Compensation Judge be filed within 2 years after denial of benefits. Amendments effective July 1, 1997.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, it is the intent of the state compensation insurance fund to assist all Montanans by reducing the unfunded liability of the old fund, terminating the old fund liability tax when the old fund is adequately funded, which is currently estimated to occur as early as June 30, 1999, providing for the payment of dividends to policyholders, and maintaining a viable state compensation insurance fund; and

WHEREAS, there was an unfunded liability of $355 million as of June 30, 1996, for claims for workers' compensation injuries occurring before July 1, 1990, in the old fund, which included $129 million in outstanding bond debt; and

WHEREAS, the old fund is funded with the old fund liability tax paid by employers, employees, and self-employed persons, generating as much as $50 million each year; and

WHEREAS, the surplus of $231 in the new fund as of June 30, 1996, allowed the Board of Directors of the State Fund to declare a dividend of up to $109 million to retire the outstanding bond debt in the old fund; and

WHEREAS, the unfunded liability in the old fund will be an estimated $200 million deficit by June 30, 1997, and the surplus or the excess of assets above the reserves that are set aside to meet the claim liability in the new fund will be an estimated $127 million by June 30, 1997; and

WHEREAS, current state law requires the State Fund to use dividends to be applied first to old fund outstanding liability rather than paying dividends directly to policyholders, the State Fund shall, no later than June 30, 1998, transfer $63.8 million to the old fund account to pay old fund claims to allow direct payment of dividends to policyholders; and

WHEREAS, the $20 million appropriation received by the State Fund from the general fund during the June 1989 Special Session partially addressed the unfunded liability issue existing at that time in the old fund and canceled a planned 22% rate increase; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund now agrees to repay the $20 million appropriation to the general fund by June 30, 1999, in lieu of transferring additional funds to the old fund account to provide the general fund with additional revenue and to remove any perception that the State Fund remains a burden on the general fund; and

WHEREAS, because decreases in premium rates totaled 35% in fiscal years 1996 and 1997 and legislative changes in benefit levels have resulted in the return of private carriers, the 15% limitation on administration expenses as a percent of the prior year's premium will significantly impact the State Fund's ability to provide service to policyholders and their injured workers; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund seeks to improve the level of services provided to customers without increasing existing State Fund staffing levels by working with private sector-licensed insurance producers; and

WHEREAS, in response to Haag v. Montana Schools Group Insurance Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P.2d 693 (1995), in which the Montana Supreme Court ruled that an insurer's failure to comply with the time limitations for accepting or denying a workers' compensation claim constituted acceptance of the claim, current law needs to be clarified to provide that the failure to comply with the time limitations does not constitute acceptance of the claim."

Severability: Section 32, Ch. 276, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 34(2), Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "[Sections 7, 12 through 14 and 29 [39-71-2905]] are effective July 1, 1997, and apply to claims for injuries occurring on or after [the effective date of sections 7, 12 through 14 and 29]."

1995 Amendment: Chapter 516 inserted second sentence allowing a District Court with jurisdiction over a pending action under 39-71-515 to request the Workers' Compensation Judge to determine the amount of recoverable damages due the employee; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 25, 1995.

Saving Clause: Section 25, Ch. 516, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 26, Ch. 516, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1987 Amendment: At end of first sentence, after "dispute", inserted "after satisfying dispute resolution requirements otherwise provided in this chapter", at beginning of fourth sentence inserted "After parties have satisfied dispute resolution requirements provided elsewhere in this chapter" and near end inserted reference to 39-71-317, and near end of fifth sentence, after "assessed", inserted "by the workers' compensation judge".

1985 Amendment: In fourth sentence, at end, inserted exception clause referring to 39-71-516.

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Workers' Compensation Court Without Power to Decide Common-Law Tort Actions: Liberty insured Brand S Lumber, which employed McNeilly Line Logging as an independent contractor. The State Fund sent a letter to Brand S Lumber informing it that McNeilly had applied for coverage for its workers and that the State Fund would inform Brand S Lumber if cancellation proceedings were initiated against McNeilly for any reason. One of McNeilly's employees was injured on the job, and it was discovered that McNeilly had not obtained coverage. As a result, Liberty began paying benefits to the employee because Montana law holds an employer (Brand S Lumber) that contracts with an independent contractor (McNeilly) liable for payment of benefits to the independent contractor's employees if the independent contractor has not complied with the coverage provisions of state law. Liberty sued the State Fund on the basis of the letter that it had written to Brand S lumber, arguing that the State Fund had a duty to inform the lumber company that McNeilly had not obtained coverage, that Brand S Lumber had a right to rely on the representations made by the State Fund, and that Liberty was entitled to be reimbursed by the State Fund for any losses that it incurred because of the State Fund's negligence. The Workers' Compensation Court granted the State Fund's motion to dismiss, stating that it had no jurisdiction over the controversy. The Supreme Court held that the Workers' Compensation Court was without jurisdiction to hear a common-law tort case for damages because its jurisdiction was limited to disputes payable under the Workers' Compensation Act. Liberty NW. Ins. Corp. v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 1998 MT 169, 289 M 475, 962 P2d 1167, 55 St. Rep. 684 (1998).

Failure to Exhaust Required Rehabilitation Services Administrative Remedy: Under the 1989 version of the Workers' Compensation Act, which contained rehabilitation services provisions in 39-71-1001 through 39-71-1033 that mandated participation in the rehabilitation procedures, the Workers' Compensation Court lacked jurisdiction to determine a disability status claim prior to the claimant's exhaustion of the rehabilitation panel procedures. Bare v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 1998 MT 106, 288 M 440, 958 P2d 71, 55 St. Rep. 405 (1998).

Failure to Exercise Statutory Procedural Right Held Not to Violate Due Process: Grooms filed a workers' compensation claim with her insurer, the State Fund, alleging that she suffered from a skin allergy condition. The State Fund denied liability under the Workers' Compensation Act and requested the Department of Labor and Industry to process the claim under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana. Subsequently, Grooms claimed that the decision to process her claim under the Occupational Disease Act rather than the Workers' Compensation Act denied her due process of law by denying her notice and an opportunity to be heard. The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that when her claim was denied under the Workers' Compensation Act, Grooms retained the statutory rights to have her claim resolved by mediation and to have her claim heard by the Workers' Compensation Court and, therefore, Grooms was not denied due process of law. The Supreme Court affirmed the Workers' Compensation Court, holding that Grooms still had available to her various statutory remedies that she chose not to pursue after her claim was denied by the State Fund. The Supreme Court held that her failure to pursue those remedies did not result in a denial of due process. Grooms v. Ponderosa Inn, 283 M 459, 942 P2d 699, 54 St. Rep. 725 (1997).

District Court Jurisdiction to Determine Unfair Trade Practices Alleged Before Workers' Compensation Settlement Agreement: Poteat brought a District Court complaint alleging unfair trade practices, breach of contract, and actual malice under 33-18-242. Because the underlying claim contained unresolved future workers' compensation medical benefits and the Workers' Compensation Court has exclusive jurisdiction over workers' compensation claims, the District Court determined that it had no jurisdiction to hear an unfair trade practices case until Poteat obtained a judgment or settlement of the entire underlying claim. The Supreme Court determined that counts one and four alleged actual malice and unfair trade practices before the settlement agreement, which were not based on an underlying claim that had not been settled or adjudicated, and that counts two and three alleged breach of contract and unfair trade practices after the settlement agreement, which concerned the unresolved issue of future medical benefits not yet adjudicated by the Workers' Compensation Court. The District Court erred in dismissing the entire case on grounds of lack of jurisdiction. The counts regarding unfair practices before settlement had their basis in a valid existing settlement agreement, and Poteat was therefore entitled to pursue the counts regarding presettlement trade practices. However, Poteat was not entitled to pursue the counts regarding unfair practices after settlement until the issue of future medical benefits was adjudicated. The case was thus affirmed regarding counts two and three and reversed regarding counts one and four. Poteat v. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co., 277 M 117, 918 P2d 677, 53 St. Rep. 568 (1996).

No Statutory Authority for Setting Aside Workers' Compensation Court Judgment: Although under some circumstances the Workers' Compensation Court may have inherent equitable power to set aside its judgment, under this section, the court's authority extends only to the initial resolution of disputes and provides no authority for setting aside a judgment entered by the court beyond whatever time period is provided in the court's rules or other applicable procedural rules. St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. Chapman, 267 M 484, 885 P2d 407, 51 St. Rep. 1070 (1994).

Uninsured Employer — Jurisdiction: Petitioner filed an independent cause of action against an employer not enrolled in a workers' compensation plan and then petitioned the Workers' Compensation Court for a hearing. The District Court stayed its proceedings pending a determination by the Workers' Compensation Court of the extent of injuries and calculation of damages. The Workers' Compensation Court dismissed the petition on the grounds that it lacked jurisdiction over the action. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The Workers' Compensation Court does not have jurisdiction over actions filed in the District Court, and the District Court's jurisdiction is not confined to liability issues. Bohmer v. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 266 M 289, 880 P2d 816, 51 St. Rep. 824 (1994).

Court's Authority to Determine Time and Manner of Determining Benefits: The Workers' Compensation Court's authority to fix and determine benefits extends to the authority to determine the time and manner in which the benefits will be determined. Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Burden of Proving That Injury on Job Caused Current Condition: A claimant has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the claimant sustained an injury, that the injury occurred while on the job, and that there is a causal connection between the injury and the claimant's current condition. Walker v. United Parcel Serv., 262 M 450, 865 P2d 1113, 50 St. Rep. 1634 (1993), followed in Briney v. Pac. Employers Ins. Co., 283 M 346, 942 P2d 81, 54 St. Rep. 608 (1997).

Standard of Review: The standard of review for a decision of the Workers' Compensation Court is whether there is substantial credible evidence to support the court's decision. However, when critical medical testimony is presented through depositions, the Supreme Court can assess that evidence as well as the lower court. Walker v. United Parcel Serv., 262 M 450, 865 P2d 1113, 50 St. Rep. 1634 (1993), followed in Briney v. Pac. Employers Ins. Co., 283 M 346, 942 P2d 81, 54 St. Rep. 608 (1997).

Jurisdiction Declined — Review of Final Division Order Barred by Collateral Estoppel: The Workers' Compensation Court dismissed Martelli's petition for total disability benefits after Martelli failed to appeal the Employment Relations Division's final order within 10 working days of mailing. Because the interplay between the issue before the court and the issue previously litigated before the Division would have required relitigation of the issue of Martelli's disability that was decided by the Division, rehearing of the issue by the court was barred by collateral estoppel and jurisdiction by the court was properly declined. Martelli v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 258 M 166, 852 P2d 579, 50 St. Rep. 479 (1993).

Authority of Workers' Compensation Court to Reopen Final Compromise Settlement Agreement Based on Mutual Mistake: Settlement agreements for workers' compensation benefits, like other agreements, are subject to the law of contracts. A Montana court that is not otherwise limited by statute, including the Workers' Compensation Court, has the authority to set those contracts aside based upon a mutual mistake regarding the nature and extent of a claimant's injuries even when express language in the settlement agreement purports to prohibit setting the agreement aside. Wolfe v. Webb, 251 M 217, 824 P2d 240, 49 St. Rep. 1 (1992), distinguishing Hutchinson v. Pierce Packing Co., 219 M 18, 710 P2d 64 (1985), and Bowen v. Anaconda Co., 220 M 185, 714 P2d 142 (1986).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Untimely Filed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law: The Workers' Compensation Court did not abuse its discretion in not considering claimant's proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law that were not timely filed. Smith v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 254 M 71, 835 P2d 717, 49 St. Rep. 629 (1992).

Jurisdiction Prior to Division Determination of Subrogation Rights: The claimant received $25,000 from his own insurer, and the State Fund ordered him to pay $12,500 of those funds over to the Fund under its subrogation rights. The Workers' Compensation Court ordered the money returned, stating that the Fund had no right to any of the money until the Division made a determination as to subrogation rights. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that although the Workers' Compensation Court did not have jurisdiction to determine subrogation rights, it did have jurisdiction to determine that the Fund had no right to claim any subrogation funds prior to a ruling by the Division. Malek v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 242 M 311, 790 P2d 965, 47 St. Rep. 568 (1990).

Amount Awarded Insufficient to Meet Need: Claimant originally sought a lump sum to pay for a car that was repossessed before he could pay it off. He then financed a new car for a higher amount than he had originally requested. His attorney failed to amend the petition to request the higher amount needed to finance the new car. It was an abuse of discretion for the Workers' Compensation Court to limit the lump-sum award to an amount that was insufficient to meet the need that the court identified as proper. Claimant should be allowed the larger amount in a lump sum. Hedegaard v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 238 M 290, 776 P2d 1225, 46 St. Rep. 1275 (1989).

Reversal of Hearing Examiner's Findings — Power of Workers' Compensation Court to Order New Trial: The Workers' Compensation Court appointed a hearing examiner to hear evidence in an injury case, but it was for the court to make the final decision. The examiner's findings, conclusions, and proposed decision were submitted to the court for approval. It was within the court's power to order a new trial on the ground that the examiner apparently disregarded or was not aware of evidence crucial to the case. Gould v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 233 M 494, 766 P2d 213, 45 St. Rep. 1671 (1988), distinguishing Walter v. Evans Prod. Co., 207 M 26, 672 P2d 613 (1983).

No Retroactive Applicability of 1987 Amendments: The 1987 amendments to the Workers' Compensation Act concerning dispute resolution and mediation do not apply retroactively to cases in which a petition was filed prior to July 1, 1987. State ex rel. Pac. Employers Ins. Co. v. Workers' Comp. Court, 230 M 233, 749 P2d 522, 45 St. Rep. 167A (1988).

Claimant's Bid to Submit New Evidence: The Workers' Compensation Court did not abuse its discretion in denying claimant's motion for a rehearing to submit additional medical evidence of claimant's condition. The court determined that the evidence presented at hearing was insufficient to prove claimant's claim, and that decision will not be overturned absent an abuse of discretion. Currey v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 226 M 445, 736 P2d 113, 44 St. Rep. 790 (1987).

Res Judicata Inapplicable — Issues Not Same: Plaintiff suffered a back injury in October 1980, underwent surgery, and was judged to have reached a stationary state. Plaintiff was given an impairment rating of 25% and in August 1981 entered a final settlement for 125 weeks of permanent and partial disability benefits. In June 1981, while employed by a different employer, plaintiff experienced a sexual incident which she characterized as a sexual assault. In September 1981, while employed by a third employer, plaintiff suffered an industrial accident. In March 1984, the Workers' Compensation Court determined that the sexual incident did not constitute a compensable injury and that plaintiff as of that date was entitled to temporary total disability benefits by reason of the September 1981 injury. The benefits were to continue until the disability ceased. In October 1984, plaintiff sought to have the settlement entered in August 1981 set aside, claiming mutual mistake of fact. The Workers' Compensation Court held that its March 1984 decision barred this issue as res judicata. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the issues were not identical so that res judicata was inapplicable. In the first case, the question was basically one of amount. In the second case, the question went to the validity of the settlement itself. The mistake plaintiff alleged was her total disability by reason of the second industrial accident. No ruling in the first case addressed whether the settlement had to be reopened in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Holton v. F.H. Stoltze Land & Lumber Co., 195 M 263, 637 P2d 10, 38 St. Rep. 1835 (1981). The court also noted that the question of mutual mistake of fact could not have been raised in the first case. The case was reversed and remanded with directions to hear the petition on its merits. Phelan v. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co. 220 M 296, 716 P2d 601, 43 St. Rep. 381 (1986).

Jurisdiction and Nature of Workers' Compensation Court:

Hospital brought an action against Angel for services rendered, and Angel admitted the essential allegations of the complaint. Angel then filed a third-party complaint alleging that the injuries were caused by an industrial accident while the employer was insured with Travelers Insurance Company and demanding judgment against Travelers for all sums that might be adjudged owing by her to the hospital. The same claim for payment was the subject of an action pending before the Workers' Compensation Court. The District Court dismissed Angel's third-party complaint. The Supreme Court upheld the dismissal on the grounds that the Workers' Compensation Court has exclusive jurisdiction to resolve the dispute under State ex rel. St. Uninsured Employers Fund v. Hunt, 191 M 514, 625 P2d 539, 38 St. Rep. 421 (1981). Under the provisions of 39-71-704, an insurer must furnish reasonable medical services, thus the services provided by the hospital in this case are benefits under the Workers' Compensation Act over which the Workers' Compensation Court has exclusive jurisdiction. Billings Deaconess Hosp. v. Angel, 219 M 490, 712 P2d 1323, 43 St. Rep. 115 (1986).

A driver was injured while operating a tractor-trailer owned by one company and leased to another company that was in turn a division of a third company. The driver was awarded workers' compensation benefits. When the Workers' Compensation Uninsured Employers' Fund sought to collect the amount of the benefits from the company that owned the rig and from the third company, both companies denied any responsibility for the employment of the injured man. The Workers' Compensation Court and the Fund could not agree on the court's jurisdiction, and the instant appeal followed. The Supreme Court determined that the dispute involved benefits payable to the claimant, the Workers' Compensation Court has exclusive jurisdiction, the legislative history relied upon by the Fund and the history of the court indicated that the jurisdiction of the Workers' Compensation Court went beyond adjudication of workers' claims only when a dispute is related to benefits payable to a claimant, and that the Workers' Compensation Court has declaratory power under the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. State ex rel. St. Uninsured Employers' Fund v. Hunt, 191 M 514, 625 P2d 539, 38 St. Rep. 421 (1981).

Preponderance of Medical Evidence Required to Prove Type of Disability: The claimant was injured in April 1981 and executed a final settlement in September 1981. In December 1982, he petitioned the Workers' Compensation Court for a rescission of the settlement agreement and reinstatement of benefits. The Workers' Compensation Court set aside the settlement and awarded the claimant permanent total disability benefits. The Supreme Court affirmed the rescission and remanded the cause for further proceedings on the issue of disability benefits because there was a lack of a preponderance of medical evidence as to permanent partial disability, temporary total disability, or permanent total disability. Hutchinson v. Pierce Packing Co., 219 M 18, 710 P2d 64, 42 St. Rep. 1810 (1985).

Technical Procedural Requirements — Workers' Compensation Court: The Supreme Court upheld a Workers' Compensation Court order that complied with the substance of Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), but not with the Rule's formal technical requirements. The Supreme Court reasoned that the primary purpose of the Rule's requirement is that of notice for res judicata, estoppel, and appeal and that it is not proper to require an administrative tribunal to conform strictly to technical requirements of the rules of practice. Wheeler v. Ins. Co. of N. Amer., 217 M 254, 704 P2d 49, 42 St. Rep. 1177 (1985).

Claimant's Proof of Injury and Proximate Cause: A claimant must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that he suffered an injury arising out of and in the course of his employment and that the injury was the proximate cause of his disabling condition. Frost v. Anaconda Co., 216 M 387, 701 P2d 987, 42 St. Rep. 889 (1985).

Domiciliary Care as Medical Expense — Jurisdiction: On remand from the Supreme Court to the Workers' Compensation Court for a determination of reasonable costs and attorney fees, the Workers' Compensation Court determined that domiciliary care provided by claimant's mother was necessary as a medical expense; however, the court ruled that it did not have jurisdiction to set a value on the services because they constituted "other treatment" that must be approved by the Division of Workers' Compensation (now Department of Labor and Industry). The Supreme Court reversed and held that once the Workers' Compensation Court has acquired jurisdiction of a dispute under the Workers' Compensation Act, it has jurisdiction to try and decide all of the issues that arise between the parties, and in this case the Workers' Compensation Court should have fixed a dollar amount on the domiciliary care. Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985).

Workers' Compensation Court — No Interest on Claimants' Judgments: On remand from the Supreme Court to the Workers' Compensation Court for a determination of reasonable costs and attorney fees, the Workers' Compensation Court determined that claimant was not entitled to interest based on past due compensation and medical benefits awarded by its earlier judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed. The penalties and assessments allowed against an insurer under the Workers' Compensation Act are the exclusive penalties and assessments that can be assessed against an insurer in absence of authorizing legislation. Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985).

Jurisdictional Authority of Workers' Compensation Court to Extend to Payment of Attorney Fees, Related Costs: Whenever a dispute is related to workers' compensation benefits payable to a claimant, the jurisdiction of the Workers' Compensation Court goes beyond merely providing a forum for adjudicating workers' claims. This extended jurisdictional authority includes the issue of payment of attorney fees and related costs. Kelleher Law Office v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 213 M 412, 691 P2d 823, 41 St. Rep. 2203 (1984).

State Fund Liable for Bad Faith in Settlement: Plaintiff suffered an injury compensable under the state Workers' Compensation Act. His employer was insured by the state fund in accordance with Plan III, under Title 39, ch. 71, part 23. After plaintiff achieved maximum healing, settlement negotiations were begun. After unsuccessful attempts at settlement, the state fund's counteroffer was reduced to writing and a formal petition for full and final settlement was submitted to plaintiff. Plaintiff's attorney, after initially rejecting the offer, waived his fees and drafted a cover letter accepting the terms of the petition. Plaintiff went to the state fund office to accept the offer, but the state fund withdrew its previous offer because it took exception to the language of the cover letter. Plaintiff filed suit alleging bad faith by the state fund. The District Court granted summary judgment to the state fund, relying on the exclusive remedy provisions of 39-71-411 and 39-71-2905. The Supreme Court reversed, relying on the reasoning of its opinions in Hayes v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 187 M 148, 609 P2d 257 (1980), and Vigue v. Evans Products Co., 187 M 1, 608 P2d 488 (1980), relating to Plan I and Plan II insurers. The court held that the tortious conduct did not arise within the employment relationship and was not work-related and was therefore not covered by the exclusive remedy provisions. The court said that since the insurance code played no part in the Hayes and Vigue cases, those decisions were equally applicable to the state fund. Birkenbuel v. Mont. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 212 M 139, 687 P2d 700, 41 St. Rep. 1647 (1984).

Surprise Medical Witness Who Did Not Examine Claimant: Workers' Compensation Court had broad discretion in deciding to disallow as evidence the deposition of a doctor where he was not listed as a witness in the pretrial order, no notice of desire to depose him was given until several months after the hearing, he had never seen or examined claimant, and the request was untimely and in violation of court rule. Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., Inc., 194 M 109, 634 P2d 1189, 38 St. Rep. 1632 (1981).

Exhaustion of Administrative Workers' Compensation Remedies: Where a claim for a $6,000 advance of workers' compensation benefits was made to the Workers' Compensation Division (now State Fund), upon a dispute between the Division (now State Fund) and the claimant, a petition for a hearing was made to the Workers' Compensation Court asking for a $19,622.72 advance, and the Division (now State Fund) argued an appeal from that court that the larger advance should not have been considered because it was not presented to the Division (now State Fund) and because the Workers' Compensation Court hearing was on appeal from an agency requiring claimant to raise all issues before the agency and exhaust administrative remedies before being heard in court, the court properly entertained the question of the $19,622.72 advance, because the Division (now State Fund) had stated that the dispute was over the method of repayment and not the amount of the advance. Therefore, a dispute as to repayment method did in fact exist. There was no failure to exhaust administrative remedies as the Workers' Compensation Court is an administrative court deciding benefits disputes in a de novo hearing, and the Division (now State Fund) had adequate notice and opportunity to defend. Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981).

Jurisdiction of Disputes and Issues: Workers' Compensation Court is an administrative law court with limited jurisdiction to decide disputes relating to benefits in a de novo proceeding, not a full-blown District Court acting in review of an agency decision. In order to obtain review by the court, it should be sufficient to present issues at any time before the agency or the court. Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981).

Workers' Compensation Court — Declaratory Judgment — Frivolous Appeal: The Workers' Compensation Court properly refused to take jurisdiction of a petition seeking, in essence, a declaratory judgment that petitioner, Raines, was an employee rather than an independent contractor so as to relieve him of liability in a wrongful death action filed in District Court. The decision was one for the District Court since the Workers' Compensation Court is not empowered to issue declaratory judgments. The insurance company and its counsel are charged with such minimum knowledge, and thus must pay a $500 penalty for filing a frivolous appeal. Alaska Pac. Assurance Co. v. L.H.C., Inc., 191 M 120, 622 P2d 224, 37 St. Rep. 1616 (1980).

Award of Lump-Sum Payment — Discretion of Judge: The Workers' Compensation Judge, being in the best position to judge the needs of the claimant, will be afforded wide discretion in determining whether a lump-sum settlement provided in 39-71-741 should or should not be granted even though it is an extraordinary type of payment. When the Judge awarded a lump sum for debts incurred or to be incurred for basic necessities of life, there was no abuse of discretion because his decision lay in conscientious administration. Willoughby v. Gen. Accident Fire & Life, 187 M 253, 609 P2d 700, 37 St. Rep. 620 (1980).

Exclusive Jurisdiction — Exception: A claimant who sustains an injury covered by the Workers' Compensation Act may assert a separate action for damages in District Court against an insurer and its adjuster for the commission of intentional torts in the processing and handling of a workers' compensation claim. Vigue v. Evans Prod. Co., 187 M 1, 608 P2d 488, 37 St. Rep. 474 (1980).

39-71-2907. Increase in award for unreasonable delay or refusal to pay.

Compiler's Comments

1991 Amendment: At beginning of (1) deleted "when payment of compensation has been unreasonably delayed or refused by an insurer, either" and inserted first phrase relating to powers of Workers' Compensation Judge; inserted (1)(a) relating to unreasonable delay or refusal in making payments; in (1)(b), after "claimant", deleted "compensation", after "benefits, the" deleted "full amount of the compensation benefits due a claimant between the time compensation benefits were delayed or refused and the date of the order granting a claimant compensation benefits may be increased by the workers' compensation judge by 20%", and inserted last phrase relating to unreasonable delay or refusal; and made minor changes in style.

Applicability: Section 2, Ch. 174, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to workers' compensation claims filed on or after October 1, 1991."

1987 Amendment: Inserted (2) providing that a finding of unreasonableness does not constitute bad faith or violation of unfair trade practices provisions.

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Denial of Payment for Medicine for Stress Based on Doctor's Statement That Stress Was Caused by Injury and by Proceedings in Case: A State Fund claims examiner's investigation into a doctor's prescription of medicine for exacerbated gastroesophageal reflux consisted solely of her reading of the doctor's notes, which stated that the exacerbation was caused by stress connected to her injury, subsequent problems, trial of the case, rehabilitation, and other matters connected to the case. She then denied payment for the medication. At least a minimal investigation of a claim's validity is necessary for denial to be reasonable. The payment was properly denied because there was evidence in the doctor's notes to support a reasonably debatable argument that the need for the medicine arose from the trial and matters associated with it, not from the injury itself. Therefore, the worker was not entitled to penalties or attorney fees for denial of the payment. S.L.H. v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 2000 MT 362, 303 M 364, 15 P3d 948, 57 St. Rep. 1543 (2000).

Penalty, Award of Attorney Fees, or Sanction for Settling on Courthouse Steps: State Fund, without investigating and with no factual or legal basis, claimed a $50,000 subrogation right during a 6-month period, taking the position that it was the worker's burden to prove that there was no subrogation right. A week before trial, State Fund conceded the issue. The lower court's holding that a claim for subrogation as to benefits already paid does not constitute benefits due and cannot give rise to penalties or attorney fees under 39-71-612 or this section was proper. "Benefits" and "compensation" do not include subrogation, and a judge awards no benefits or compensation in deciding a subrogation claim. The Supreme Court agreed with the lower court's opinion that State Fund's actions were worthy of sanctions. Section 39-71-2914 allows imposition of a sanction in a case such as this, and although the worker did not request a sanction, the lower court should have imposed one on its own initiative. However, because the worker did not raise the issue on appeal, the Supreme Court did not remand for imposition of a sanction. S.L.H. v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 2000 MT 362, 303 M 364, 15 P3d 948, 57 St. Rep. 1543 (2000).

Causation Disputable at Time of Trial — Case Remanded to Workers' Compensation Court for Determination of Statutory Penalty — Fees and Costs Awarded: Briney injured his back in 1981 in a work-related accident but was allowed by his physician to return to work the same year. In the years following the injury, Briney had good days and bad days, was treated by several physicians, and sometimes missed work. In 1993, he underwent unrelated surgery and, because he was inactive for a period of time following surgery, was not able to continue his exercise regimen to strengthen his back. Consequently, his back condition deteriorated and he was unable to return to work after the surgery. After his employer's workers' compensation insurer agreed to pay temporary total disability, Briney sought compensation for a permanent partial disability, but the Workers' Compensation Court Judge denied the claim, holding that Briney's current condition was not caused by the 1981 work-related injury but was caused by multiple injuries or aggravations over the years since 1981. The Supreme Court reversed, pointing to testimony linking Briney's current physical condition to his 1981 injury and relying upon its holding in Walker v. United Parcel Serv., 262 M 450, 865 P2d 1113 (1993), in which the Supreme Court held that once a worker has proved a work-related injury and produces evidence that the injury is the cause of the worker's present condition, the burden shifts to the insurer to prove that the worker's present condition is due to other injuries. Because the Supreme Court found that no such evidence had been presented by the insurer, it held that the Workers' Compensation Court erred in denying benefits. However, the Supreme Court refused to hold that, as a matter of law, causation was indisputable at the time that the trial before the Workers' Compensation Court began and that a penalty should therefore be awarded pursuant to Holton v. F.H. Stoltze Land & Lumber Co., 195 M 263, 637 P2d 10 (1981). The Supreme Court therefore remanded the case to the Workers' Compensation Court to determine whether Briney was entitled to the statutory penalty. However, the Supreme Court did award costs and attorney fees because the insurer denied that Briney's disability was related to his 1981 injury. Briney v. Pac. Employers Ins. Co., 283 M 346, 942 P2d 81, 54 St. Rep. 608 (1997).

Denial of Attorney Fees and Penalty Proper: Correspondence from a doctor created an issue with regard to petitioner's physical complaints. Therefore, it was not unreasonable for the insurer to rely on that information as a basis for termination of benefits. The Workers' Compensation Court did not err in its denial of attorney fees and a 20% penalty. Satterlee v. Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co., 280 M 85, 929 P2d 212, 53 St. Rep. 1310 (1996).

Employer Investigation of Injury — No Duty to Ignore Statements Employee Made While in Pain: A self-insured employer's duty to reasonably investigate and evaluate a claim would not be expanded by the court to require the employer to ignore the employee's initial statements to his supervisors and to doctors or to ignore the doctors' reports, on the basis that at the time of the employee's statements to the supervisors and doctors, he was, allegedly, in agonizing pain. Marcott v. La. Pac. Corp., 275 M 197, 911 P2d 1129, 53 St. Rep. 106 (1996).

Employer Investigation of Injury — No Duty to Try to Uncover Facts Conflicting With Initial Statements of Employee: A self-insured employer's duty to reasonably investigate and evaluate a claim would not be expanded by the court to require the employer to ask the employee followup questions to attempt to uncover any facts additional to or different from those that the employee initially provided. Marcott v. La. Pac. Corp., 275 M 197, 911 P2d 1129, 53 St. Rep. 106 (1996).

Leg Injury Occurring While Walking — Reasonableness of Denial of Claim: At the time that a torn leg muscle injury occurred, the employee told several supervisors and several examining doctors that it occurred while he was merely walking. The employer denied compensation on this basis and after obtaining legal advice. More than a month later, a letter from the employee's attorney, stating that the injury occurred when the employee turned sharply while walking quickly, caused the employer to reevaluate its denial. The employer again denied compensation, saying that a factual dispute requiring resolution by the Workers' Compensation Court had arisen as to the circumstances surrounding the injury and as to the employee's credibility. Substantial evidence supported that court's determination that the employer's denial of compensation based on the existence of a factual dispute was reasonable. That court's further decision, that the employer was not unreasonable in the employer's interpretation of the law as allowing the employer to claim that the injury was not compensable, was supported by the case law, a reading of which did not clearly show that there was no genuine doubt of compensability from a legal standpoint. Marcott v. La. Pac. Corp., 275 M 197, 911 P2d 1129, 53 St. Rep. 106 (1996).

No Duty to Accept Claim Merely Because One Doctor for Employee Says Injury Is Work-Related When Substantial Prior Evidence Shows It Is Not: The employer did not have a legal duty to accept a claim and pay compensation as of the time that the employer received from one of the employee's doctors an indication that the injury was work-related. Prior to that, the employer had received numerous indications from the employee and his doctors that the injury was not compensable, raising a genuine doubt over liability. Marcott v. La. Pac. Corp., 275 M 197, 911 P2d 1129, 53 St. Rep. 106 (1996).

Failure to Accept or Deny Claim Within Thirty Days Is Acceptance as Matter of Law — Solheim Reversed — Options for Insurer: After Haag injured his shoulder while working for a school district, he filed a timely claim with the district's workers' compensation insurer. More than 2 months later, the claims adjuster for the district's insurer denied the claim. The Workers' Compensation Court, relying upon Solheim v. Ranch, 208 M 265, 677 P2d 1034 (1984), held that the insurer's failure to respond within the 30-day time period provided in 39-71-606(1) was not an automatic acceptance of the claim. The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Solheim. The Supreme Court held that in deciding Solheim, it had exceeded its proper role as a court, that 39-71-608 provides an insurer with an alternative to admitting liability, and that 39-71-609 and 39-71-610 provide an insurer with a means to subsequently deny liability after accepting liability under 39-71-606 or beginning payments with a reservation of rights under 39-71-608. The Supreme Court also noted that in this case, the insurer could not later contest the claim on the basis of fraud because the issue of fraud was not properly before the Workers' Compensation Court. Haag v. Mont. Schools Group Ins. Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P2d 693, 52 St. Rep. 1146 (1995).

Penalty Not Limited to Cases Under Workers' Compensation Act: The Workers' Compensation Court had direct jurisdiction when the case was not an appeal from a final determination by the Department of Labor and Industry but was a benefits dispute in which it had already been established that the employee suffered an occupational disease. Because the Occupational Disease Act of Montana provides that practice and procedures prescribed in the Workers' Compensation Act apply to proceedings under the Occupational Disease Act, the court did not err in applying the penalty. Ingbretson v. Louisiana-Pacific Corp., 272 M 294, 900 P2d 912, 52 St. Rep. 764 (1995).

No Authority Under Occupational Disease Act for Award of Assessments and Penalties: The Workers' Compensation Act, Title 39, ch. 71, authorizes the Workers' Compensation Court to increase by 20% the full amount of benefits due a claimant if an insurer unreasonably delays or refuses to pay benefits. The Occupational Disease Act of Montana, Title 39, ch. 72, contains no similar penalty provision. The court's broad jurisdiction under the Workers' Compensation Act differs substantially under the Occupational Disease Act and cannot be superimposed upon and override the limited jurisdiction under the latter. Thus, the court did not err in denying a claimant's petition for a penalty based on an employer's unreasonable delay in accepting liability for an occupational disease claim. Wunderlich v. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co., 270 M 404, 892 P2d 563, 52 St. Rep. 251 (1995).

Loss of Part of Toe, Fracture of Another, and Resultant Sensitivity to Cold as Permanent Partial Disability — Justifiable Dispute as to Benefits: The insurer did not act unreasonably in denying permanent partial disability benefits. Therefore, the court properly denied claimant legal fees and a 20% penalty. There was a valid factual dispute and a valid question of legal interpretation of the pertinent statute. Claimant lost part of his fifth toe and had a fracture of his largest toe. Cold temperatures caused the foot and toes to ache. He was given an impairment rating of 1% of the whole man. The treating doctor's treatment notes did not indicate impairment of work, and the doctor's deposition was not clear on the issue. Claimant and the insurer disagreed on whether there was work impairment, and the Workers' Compensation Court found impairment. The pertinent statute had been amended in 1991 to provide that a claimant was not entitled to permanent partial disability benefits unless the medically determined physical restriction impaired the claimant's ability to work. Claimant's interpretation of the statute was justifiably disputed by the insurer, and there was no case law to aid in interpretation. Williams v. Plum Creek Timber Co., 270 M 209, 891 P2d 502, 52 St. Rep. 148 (1995).

Lack of Minimal Review and Evaluation of Validity of Claim as Unreasonable Conduct — Award of Fees Warranted: The Workers' Compensation Court held that a claimant's benefits were improperly terminated, but declined to award penalty fees and attorney fees to claimant. Issues of penalty and attorney fees must be decided based upon a determination of whether the insurer was unreasonable in terminating benefits. An insurer has a duty to make at least a minimal investigation of a claim's validity. Absent an investigation, denial of a claim for benefits is unreasonable. The failure to provide even a minimal review and evaluation once investigations are completed rises to the level of unreasonable conduct by State Fund, and the award of penalty fees and attorney fees is warranted. Stevens v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 268 M 460, 886 P2d 962, 51 St. Rep. 1396 (1994). See also Gaumer v. Dept. of Highways, 243 M 414, 795 P2d 77 (1990), Lovell v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 260 M 279, 860 P2d 95 (1993), and Stordalen v. Ricci's Food Farm, 261 M 256, 862 P2d 393 (1993).

Benefits Calculated Correctly — No Basis for Penalty: In a case in which the insurer did not deny the full amount of benefits but rather calculated the benefits correctly, there was no basis for a penalty award. David v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 267 M 435, 884 P2d 778, 51 St. Rep. 1105 (1994).

Refusal of Payments Reasonable — Penalty Properly Denied:

A finding by the Workers' Compensation Court that a legitimate dispute occurred between the parties and that evidence did not support a finding that the employer unreasonably delayed or denied claimant's benefits was sufficient to affirm refusal of a penalty pursuant to this section. Reeverts v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 266 M 509, 881 P2d 620, 51 St. Rep. 894 (1994).

The Workers' Compensation Court did not err in denying a penalty against an insurer whose actions in refusing to pay for unsupervised exercise were reasonable. Chapman v. Cottrell, 259 M 329, 856 P2d 234, 50 St. Rep. 819 (1993).

Finding of Not Unreasonable Not Amounting to Finding of Reasonable: Workers' compensation claimant who was successful in the Workers' Compensation Court and on appeal requested costs and attorney fees, claiming that State Fund was unreasonable in delaying and in the manner of handling the claim and benefits. The Supreme Court agreed with the lower court's finding that State Fund was not unreasonable but also stated that the finding was not the equivalent to a finding of reasonable conduct, quoting the Workers' Compensation Court's conclusion that "the Court has been hindered throughout this case by the convenient forgetfulness of the parties, disappearance of key bits of evidence and the self-serving testimony by the parties. The Court reaches the conclusion that neither party is credible and both parties have been less than candid with the Court. The present case epitomizes Webster's definition of a dog-and-pony show". Simons v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 262 M 438, 865 P2d 1118, 50 St. Rep. 1628 (1993).

Reasonableness to Include Delay or Refusal of Payment and Manner of Conducting Defense, but Not Difference Between Requested and Granted Amounts: A State Fund defense to a claim is not reasonable merely because State Fund believes it is necessary to defend the claim. Reasonableness also refers to the manner in which the defense is conducted and delay in or refusal to make payments. In addition, reasonableness had nothing to do with the amount of benefits claimant requested, the amount awarded by the Workers' Compensation Court, or whether claimant requested more than was awarded. Simons v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 262 M 438, 865 P2d 1118, 50 St. Rep. 1628 (1993).

Attorney Fees and Penalty to Be Imposed if State Fund Acted Unreasonably: The Workers' Compensation Court found that the State Fund acted unreasonably in denying Stordalen's request for a consultive examination but determined that Stordalen was not entitled to receive a penalty or attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that the Workers' Compensation Court should make an award when it determines that the State Fund acted unreasonably. Stordalen v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 261 M 256, 862 P2d 393, 50 St. Rep. 1311 (1993), followed in Taylor v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 275 M 432, 913 P2d 1242, 53 St. Rep. 201 (1996).

Duty of State Fund to Investigate Receipt of Collateral Benefits — Penalty for Unreasonable Termination of Benefits: Lovell, who was a painter, roofer, and lawn mower, stopped by the Oak Room Bar for a drink after work and was asked by the owner to help unload a truck. In the process, Lovell injured his knee and was found by the State Fund to be temporarily totally disabled. The State Fund paid disability benefits of $8.26 per week based upon the bar owner's testimony that he intended to pay Lovell $4.75 per hour for a 2-hour job. After receiving a computer printout showing that Lovell was receiving social security payments, the State Fund computed an offset against Lovell's benefits, reduced his payments to zero, and also erroneously reduced mileage payments to Lovell. The Workers' Compensation Court imposed a 20% penalty against the State Fund for these calculations and reductions. The Supreme Court found that the State Fund had a duty under 39-71-701 to investigate the reason for the social security payments and that had it done so, the State Fund would have discovered the payments were for alcoholism and not the knee injury. Thus, the action of the State Fund in miscalculating Lovell's benefits was unreasonable and the penalty applied was proper. Action by the State Fund to settle the disputed amounts "on the courthouse steps" does not negate liability for the penalty. Lovell v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 260 M 279, 860 P2d 95, 50 St. Rep. 1043 (1993), followed in Mintyala v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 276 M 521, 917 P2d 442, 53 St. Rep. 503 (1996).

Jurisdiction of Court to Award Penalty: Lovell, who was a painter, roofer, and lawn mower, stopped by the Oak Room Bar for a drink after work and was asked by the owner to help unload a truck. In the process, Lovell injured his knee and was found by the State Fund to be temporarily totally disabled. The Workers' Compensation Court later awarded a penalty against the State Fund for miscalculating mileage benefits owed Lovell and for incorrectly reducing his benefit payments. The State Fund argued that the Workers' Compensation Court had no jurisdiction to award the penalties because the parties had not complied with the dispute resolution process and mediation requirements and because Lovell had not included the issue of his social security payments offset in his petition. The Supreme Court noted that the State Fund had included the satisfaction of the dispute resolution requirements in a pretrial order, which the fund had signed, and that the pretrial order also included the issue of whether the fund had unreasonably delayed or denied payment of Lovell's benefits. The Supreme Court held that for these reasons, there was substantial evidence to support the Workers' Compensation Court's findings of unreasonableness and that therefore the Workers' Compensation Court had jurisdiction to apply the penalties. Lovell v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 260 M 279, 860 P2d 95, 50 St. Rep. 1043 (1993).

Insurer's Failure to Make Minimal Investigation: The insurer summarily denied benefits to the claimant on the grounds that the exact chemical agent that harmed the claimant was unknown. The Supreme Court held that an insurer has a duty to make at least a minimal investigation. Absent an investigation, the denial of a claim is unreasonable and the claimant is entitled to a penalty under the statute. Gaumer v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 243 M 414, 795 P2d 77, 47 St. Rep. 1202 (1990).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Assessment of Penalty on Entire Amount of Medical Expenses Unreasonably Delayed or Refused: Galetti suffered a compensable back injury in 1983 while employed by Montana Power Company (MPC), and MPC accepted liability for the injury. Following a snowmobile outing in 1994, Galetti suffered a flareup of the back injury. Galetti's medical costs were paid by his health insurance, and Galetti then sought recovery of expenses through workers' compensation. MPC offered Galetti a cash amount to settle without accepting liability, but Galetti declined and later filed this action. At a Workers' Compensation Court hearing, MPC accepted liability. The court assessed a 20% penalty against the portion of the payments attributable to Galetti's contribution to the health plan. Galetti appealed, asserting error in the court's failure to impose the penalty on all the medical benefits that MPC unreasonably delayed or refused. The Supreme Court concurred. Under this section, a penalty for unreasonable delay or refusal is limited to 20% of the full amount of benefits due a claimant, including medical expenses, and the full amount is the entire amount of compensable medical expenses unreasonably refused or delayed. The statute is not limited to only those compensable medical expenses that were personally paid by the claimant. Here, MPC unreasonably refused or delayed payment of all workers' compensation benefits associated with Galetti's back condition flareup. Thus, the Supreme Court concluded that the Workers' Compensation Court committed reversible error by not ordering a penalty on the entire amount of medical expenses incurred as a result of the flareup. Galetti v. Mont. Power Co., 2000 MT 234, 301 M 314, 8 P3d 812, 57 St. Rep. 971 (2000). See also Belton v. Carlson Transp., 220 M 194, 714 P2d 148 (1986).

Proper Termination of Benefits — Plaintiff Not Entitled to Attorney Fees, Costs, or Penalty: After Beery was injured in a fall from an oil rig in 1984, he was evaluated by a medical panel that concluded that he did not need domiciliary care. CNA Insurance Company, Beery's workers' compensation insurer, reviewed the findings of the panel and terminated coverage for domiciliary care in August of 1991. The Supreme Court found that because CNA had properly terminated domiciliary care benefits, Beery was not entitled to attorney fees, costs, or a penalty. Beery v. Grace Drilling, 260 M 157, 859 P2d 429, 50 St. Rep. 980 (1993).

When Penalty Available:

The statutory penalty applied when an insurer acted unreasonably by ignoring the opinion of claimant's treating physician and refusing to pay for prescribed medicine. The penalty was available even though the insurer conceded liability and agreed to pay for the medicine 8 days prior to trial. Plooster v. Pierce Packing Co., 256 M 287, 846 P2d 287, 50 St. Rep. 59 (1993), followed in Mintyala v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 276 M 521, 917 P2d 442, 53 St. Rep. 503 (1996).

The penalty under this section is available when an insurer unreasonably delays paying a claim until the claimant takes the case to trial. Further, the Workers' Compensation Court may award a penalty when payment of benefits has been unreasonably delayed until midtrial. Handlos v. Cyprus Indus. Minerals, 243 M 314, 794 P2d 702, 47 St. Rep. 1329 (1990), distinguishing Perry v. Tomahawk Transp., 226 M 318, 735 P2d 308 (1987), and followed in Jaenish v. EBI/Orion Group, 248 M 383, 812 P2d 1241, 48 St. Rep. 474 (1991), and Mintyala v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 276 M 521, 917 P2d 442, 53 St. Rep. 503 (1996), but see Field v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 257 M 81, 847 P2d 306, 50 St. Rep. 166 (1993). Field was overruled, to the extent limited in the opinion, by Madill v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 280 M 450, 930 P2d 665, 54 St. Rep. 4 (1997).

Nature of Injury Not Self-Evident and Medical Evidence Equivocal — Denial of Penalty Proper: Denial of a penalty against insurer was not unreasonable when it was not self-evident that a back injury was caused by accident and when medical evidence linking the injury to the accident was submitted 3 years after the accident and was somewhat equivocal. Weaver v. Buttrey Food & Drug, 255 M 90, 841 P2d 476, 49 St. Rep. 897 (1992).

Penalty Not Imposed Despite Lack of Proper Investigation: The lower court was justified in failing to assess a 20% penalty when, despite the fact that the State Compensation Mutual Insurance Fund failed to properly investigate and determine whether it was mistaken about the nature of claimant's injury, State Fund incurred medical expense to send claimant a considerable distance to a highly qualified specialist. Wolfe v. Webb, 251 M 217, 824 P2d 240, 49 St. Rep. 1 (1992).

Inability of Workers' Compensation Court to Decide on Disability and Benefits After Initial Hearing — Award of Penalty Properly Denied: Claimant asserted that she was entitled to a 20% penalty under this section, arguing that there was no legitimate dispute between the parties that justified rejection of her claim after payment of less than 1 month's benefits. Denial of the penalty was proper, however, in light of the Workers' Compensation Court's inability to come to a conclusion as to disability and benefits after the initial hearing. Winchell v. G&B Motors, Inc., 246 M 320, 805 P2d 1323, 47 St. Rep. 2070 (1990).

Worker's Condition as Far Restored as Permanent Character of Injury Permits: The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that substantial evidence existed to justify changing the claimant's benefits to those due under permanent partial disability. Sharkey v. Atl. Richfield Co., 238 M 159, 777 P2d 870, 46 St. Rep. 1169 (1989).

Failure of Insurer to Forward Letter to Subsequent Insurer — Not Unreasonable Delay: Claimant argued she was entitled to an award increase for unreasonable delay based on an insurer's failure to promptly forward to a subsequent insurer a letter it received from claimant's physician, causing claimant to needlessly prosecute claims against both insurers. The Supreme Court reviewed the letter and noted it did not set forth a medical opinion or diagnosis. The letter merely relayed claimant's belief that her current medical problem was related to a previous industrial injury. The court concluded that the letter did not constitute the type of evidence that could serve as a basis for a finding of unreasonable delay or refusal to pay. Guild v. Rockwood Ins. Co., 229 M 466, 747 P2d 217, 44 St. Rep. 2139 (1987).

Appeal of Hearings Examiner's Decision to Supreme Court — No Jurisdiction: Where a workers' compensation claimant appealed an order of a hearings examiner directly to the Supreme Court, the case was remanded because 39-71-2904 and this section are unequivocally clear that the court only has jurisdiction to consider an appeal from an order of the Workers' Compensation Judge, not from an order of a hearings examiner. O'Donnell v. Ryans, Inc., 227 M 48, 736 P2d 965, 44 St. Rep. 883 (1987).

Penalty Imposed Only on Benefits Due: The District Court erroneously imposed a 20% penalty on benefits that had been paid for 1 year prior to final judgment. This section clearly authorizes imposition of the penalty only on those benefits that are due, that is, owed and payable at the time the penalty is imposed. Perry v. Tomahawk Transp., 226 M 318, 735 P2d 308, 44 St. Rep. 686 (1987), cited in Thompson v. Cigna, 2000 MT 306, 302 M 399, 14 P3d 1222, 57 St. Rep. 1292 (2000) (affirming the Workers' Compensation Court's refusal to assess a 20% penalty for an unreasonable delay of a request for conversion from biweekly benefits to lump sum because only biweekly benefits were statutorily owed and payable).

Penalty Not Warranted — Legitimate Dispute as to Connection Between Injury and Disability: The Workers' Compensation Court did not err in refusing to assess a penalty against an insurer that claimed denial of benefits was reasonable in light of substantial credible evidence of a legitimate dispute as to the causal connection between the injury and claimant's disability. Hengel v. Pac. Hide & Fur Depot, 224 M 525, 730 P2d 1163, 43 St. Rep. 2387 (1986).

Litigation of Clearly Decided Issue as Grounds for Penalty: Assessment of a penalty was proper when insurer chose to litigate an issue clearly decided in a previous instance and insurer's attorney was aware of the former decision, having represented the claimant in the previous case. Hunter v. Gibson Prod. of Billings Heights, 224 M 481, 730 P2d 1139, 43 St. Rep. 2352 (1986).

Finding of Permanent Total Disability — Increase in Award Appropriate: Workers' Compensation Court concluded that claimant failed to meet the burden of establishing that he was entitled to permanent total disability and that respondent's actions in delay or refusal to pay benefits would have been unreasonable if "the record had not supported the conclusion that claimant was permanent partial, not permanent total". The Supreme Court found claimant had met his burden, reversed and remanded, and held that since the claimant was permanent total, he was entitled to the 20% penalty pursuant to this section. Brewington v. Employers' Fire Ins. Co., 222 M 505, 723 P2d 938, 43 St. Rep. 1458 (1986).

Reasonable Insurer and Unreasonable Claimant: Delay in payment of a workers' compensation insurance claim for permanent total disability benefits was not unreasonable when record showed that claimant unreasonably refused an early tender of partial payment, that much of the delay was due to claimant's repeated requests for extensions of time in which to complete depositions, that the insurer's initial denial of permanent total disability benefits was not unreasonable when the lower court at first agreed that the insurer was not liable for such benefits, and that generally the insurer was reasonable in the negotiations and conduct of the case. Shepard v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 219 M 124, 710 P2d 1355, 42 St. Rep. 1892 (1985).

Payment of Back Payments Before Trial: When the insurer terminated temporary total disability payments and refused to pay permanent total disability benefits but did pay back payments due just prior to hearing date, the Workers' Compensation Court found the insurer's actions unreasonable and assessed a penalty. The Supreme Court affirmed. Whether the insurer's conduct was unreasonable is a factual question, and, on appeal, a finding of unreasonableness will not be overturned if supported by substantial evidence. Coles v. Seven Eleven Stores, 217 M 343, 704 P2d 1048, 42 St. Rep. 1238 (1985).

Penalty When State Fund Incorrectly Canceled Coverage: Due to an error by the State Compensation Insurance Fund, when claimant filed a claim for coverage in October 1981, his lawyer was told that claimant's employer was uninsured. There was no further communication among any of the parties until March 1983, when claimant filed a petition for an emergency hearing. By July 1983, the state fund had learned of its error and admitted liability. At the time of oral argument before the Workers' Compensation Court in October 1983, the claimant still had not received any benefits. The lower court assessed a penalty only on the temporary total disability benefits due the claimant between July and October 1983. The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court was incorrect in its assumption that no part of the temporary total disability benefits or medical benefits already due in July 1983 could be subject to the statutory penalty, and remanded the case for a determination of the extent of the penalty, if any, to be charged on those benefits. Putnam v. Castle Mtn. Corp., 216 M 306, 702 P2d 333, 42 St. Rep. 833 (1985).

Penalty — Medical Payments Treated as Compensation Benefits: On remand from the Supreme Court to the Workers' Compensation Court for a determination of reasonable costs and attorney fees, the Workers' Compensation Court determined that it could not assess a penalty for unreasonable delay in payment of medical expenses because medical expenses are not "compensation benefits" within the meaning of the penalty statute. The Supreme Court reversed and held that for purposes of assessing a penalty for wrongful refusal or delay in payment, medical payments should be treated as a compensation benefit. It was irrelevant that payments were made directly to the medical providers and not to the claimant herself. Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985), followed in Belton v. Carlson Transp., 220 M 194, 714 P2d 148, 43 St. Rep. 286 (1986); Putnam v. Castle Mtn. Corp., 216 M 306, 702 P2d 333, 42 St. Rep. 833 (1985).

Workers' Compensation Court — Should Have Decided Penalty Issue: The Workers' Compensation Court properly ruled that the State Compensation Insurance Fund wrongfully terminated the claimant, but failed to rule on the necessary question of whether this constituted an unreasonable refusal to pay benefits. Therefore, the issue was remanded to the trial court for a determination of whether the 20% penalty should have been assessed. Moilanen v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 214 M 367, 694 P2d 485, 42 St. Rep. 25 (1985).

Penalty Increase Denied — Unreasonableness Question of Fact: The determination of what is unreasonable delay or refusal is a question of fact. When claimant received partial lump-sum advances totaling $6,000, plus overpayments totaling $7,287.97, and total disability payments up through the time of hearing, the Supreme Court affirmed trial court's determination that there was no basis for consideration of a penalty. Metzger v. Chemetron Corp., 212 M 351, 687 P2d 1033, 41 St. Rep. 1788 (1984).

Liability for Failure to Notify of Claim Denial Subject to Existence of Employer/Employee Relationship: The plaintiff owner of a semitrailer truck who was injured while unloading the defendant's hay brought an action in the Workers' Compensation Court for payment for his injuries. On appeal of that court's judgment, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the plaintiff's argument that the insurer was liable for benefits because of its failure to deny benefits within 30 days ignored the fact that there was no employer/employee relationship between the parties. The 20% penalty provided in 39-71-2907 for paying unreasonably delayed claims applies to delays in denial longer than the 30 days specified in 39-71-606 and provides sufficient protection for persons in the position of the plaintiff. That section is therefore inapplicable in the absence of the requisite employee relationship. Solheim v. Tom Davis Ranch, 208 M 265, 677 P2d 1034, 41 St. Rep. 326 (1984), overruled in Haag v. Mont. Schools Group Ins. Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P2d 693, 52 St. Rep. 1146 (1995).

Reasonableness of Withholding or Delay — Question of Fact: This section was not intended to eliminate the assertion of a legitimate defense by an insurer. To prevail under this section, a claimant must show that the withholding or delay of payment was unreasonable. The determination of what is unreasonable is a question of fact. In this case, claimant has alleged that her injury aggravated two preexisting medical conditions. Aggravation of a preexisting condition is well recognized as a compensable injury, but the question of whether there was an aggravation is one of fact. With respect to claimant's preexisting medical condition of multiple sclerosis, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's judgment that a 20% penalty should not be awarded. With respect to claimant's preexisting medical condition of spinal stenosis, the Supreme Court remanded the case for further factual findings on whether the insurance company's offers to claimant were reasonable in light of the medical verification that had been received by the insurance company. Paulson v. Bozeman Deaconess Foundation Hosp., 207 M 440, 673 P2d 1281, 41 St. Rep. 62 (1984), followed in Milender v. Carpenter, 230 M 1, 748 P2d 932, 44 St. Rep. 2204 (1987), and Taylor v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 275 M 432, 913 P2d 1242, 53 St. Rep. 201 (1996).

Unclear Medical Releases — Penalty Not Supported by Evidence: The claimant underwent surgery and hospitalization after a September 1978 industrial accident. Claimant's doctor, knowing that claimant intended to return to school and not to his job, released him to resume "full, normal activities and duties" in January of 1979. In March of 1979 claimant's surgical incision herniated, thereby necessitating corrective surgery. Claimant's doctor again released him for full activity in May of 1979. Claimant received his degree in August of 1979. The insurance carrier paid the claimant temporary total disability from the date of the accident until January of 1979 and from March of 1979 through May of 1979. The court awarded the claimant temporary total disability from the date of the accident until August of 1979 and imposed a penalty of 20% because of the insurance carrier's unreasonable delay and refusal to pay. Because it was not unreasonable for the insurance carrier to rely on the medical releases, the penalty was not supported by substantial evidence. Van Daveer v. Stauffer Chem. Co., 200 M 218, 657 P2d 1142, 39 St. Rep. 1698 (1982).

Refusal to Pay After Disability Found — Penalty Upheld: The plaintiff was injured on his job in August 1978, and after several physicians found no disability, a Dr. Peterson found a disability in December 1979. Plaintiff's employer refused to pay disability benefits, forcing plaintiff to file a claim with the Workers' Compensation Court in July 1980. Although the Supreme Court reversed the Workers' Compensation Court's finding of a permanent and total disability, it held that the employer's refusal to pay compensation after December 1979 was unreasonable and that upon remand, the Workers' Compensation Judge could apply the statutory penalty to whatever amount of disability was eventually awarded to the plaintiff. Keene v. Anaconda Co., 201 M 102, 652 P2d 216, 39 St. Rep. 1982 (1982).

Duty to Pay Undisputed Compensation — Failure as Triggering Penalty: Claimant injured his back on November 8, 1972. Claimant's physician reported to the insurer on March 29, 1974, that claimant had suffered a 5% impairment to the whole body. Sometime prior to March 31, 1975, the insurer's own physician estimated a 10% impairment to the whole body. The insurer took no action between April 4, 1975, when claimant rejected a 10% settlement and August 13, 1979, when claimant petitioned for a hearing. Although the total amount of compensation may be in dispute, the insurer has a duty to pay any undisputed compensation. The insurer in the instant case was at least responsible for payment of a 10% disability claim prior to the formal hearing. Once claimant has shown a delay in payment, the insurer has the burden of justifying the delay. The only legitimate excuse for delay is the existence of genuine doubt, from a medical or legal standpoint, that the liability exists. Here, both parties agreed that at least a 10% disability claim should have been paid. There was no legitimate excuse for the delay, and the penalty provided by this section was justified. Holton v. F. H. Stoltze Land & Lumber Co., 195 M 263, 637 P2d 10, 38 St. Rep. 1835 (1981), followed in Sampson v. Broadway Yellow Cab Co., 226 M 273, 735 P2d 298, 44 St. Rep. 649 (1987).

Benefits Improperly Terminated — Penalty and Fees Awarded: Plaintiff was injured when a refrigerator he was lifting fell and smashed his hand and wrist. Plaintiff received temporary total benefits from December 7, 1976, until terminated on May 2, 1979. Plaintiff had heart surgery in 1977. In 1979 defendant terminated plaintiff's benefits claiming that he had no permanent disability from the accident and that his medical problems were nonindustrially related. The Workers' Compensation Court found that plaintiff's benefits were improperly terminated. The letter to plaintiff terminating his benefits was not supported by medical evidence. The Workers' Compensation Court properly awarded plaintiff a penalty amount of 20% and attorney fees because his benefits were improperly terminated. Novak v. Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., 195 M 219, 638 P2d 390, 38 St. Rep. 1803 (1981).

Penalty Increase Denied Where Bona Fide Controversy: Substantial evidence to support the finding that the insurer unreasonably delayed or refused compensation benefits could not be found and the finding and statutory 20% penalty award based on it was set aside, where insurer promptly paid medical expenses and lost wages when the claim was submitted and discontinued payments when claimant returned to work, and some 2 years later claimant contended for the first time that he had become totally and permanently disabled as a result of the accident, insurer disputed and refused to honor the claim and went to hearing on the issue, there was a bona fide controversy on the issue, and claimant's physician and another physician supported the insurer. Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., Inc., 194 M 109, 634 P2d 1189, 38 St. Rep. 1632 (1981), followed in Meidinger v. W. Energy Co., 254 M 18, 834 P2d 1382, 49 St. Rep. 601 (1992). See also Garmann v. Employers Ins. Co. of Wausau, 226 M 432, 736 P2d 123, 44 St. Rep. 781 (1987).

Review of Fact Question of Unreasonableness: Whether the insured's action is unreasonable under this section is a question of fact and subject on appeal to the limited review of the substantial evidence test. If there is substantial evidence to support a finding of unreasonableness, the Supreme Court cannot overturn the finding. Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., Inc., 194 M 109, 634 P2d 1189, 38 St. Rep. 1632 (1981), followed in Johnson v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. of New York, 227 M 464, 740 P2d 665, 44 St. Rep. 1236 (1987).

Knowledge and Refusal of Defendant: The assessment of a statutory penalty of 10% (prior to 1979 amendment) was merited since Liberty Mutual denied the compensability of plaintiff's claim for 3 years, refused to pay weekly compensation and medical benefits after it had been ordered to do so, knew that claimant was entitled to the minimum compensation compelled by statute, and recognized certain medical bills as being related to the injury but refused to pay them. Hutchison v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 178 M 81, 582 P2d 1203, 35 St. Rep. 1126 (1978).

Substantial Evidence Supporting Award of Increase: Based upon the "substantial evidence" test, the Supreme Court upheld a finding of the Workers' Compensation Court that the insurer's actions constituted an "unreasonable delay or refusal" to make compensation payments, thus entitling claimant to a 10% (prior to 1979 amendment) increase in award pursuant to this section. Smith v. Pac. Ins. Co., 177 M 267, 581 P2d 834 (1978).

Penalty Justified: Sufficient evidence was present to support the finding and conclusion that compensation had been unreasonably delayed and the 10% (prior to 1979 amendment) penalty as provided for in this section was justified. Steffes v. USF&G Co., 177 M 83, 580 P2d 450 (1978).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

No Mutual Mistake of Fact — Insurance Compromise Settlement: The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that claimant had testified that his back was in much the same condition in 1982 as it had been on the date of his insurance compromise settlement in 1979. Accordingly, the parties to the settlement were not laboring under a mutual mistake of fact as to the nature and extent of injuries when they entered into a full and final compromise. This case was distinguished from Kienas v. Peterson, 191 M 325, 624 P2d 1, 37 St. Rep. 1747 (1980), in which it was held that the lack of knowledge that the industrial accident possibly aggravated preexisting cerebral palsy, leading to a worsening condition, was a mutual mistake of fact. The court reiterated in this instant case that 39-71-204 and 39-71-2908 (now repealed) preclude reopening of workers' compensation settlements. Sollie v. Travelers Indem. Co., 212 M 197, 686 P2d 920, 41 St. Rep. 1684 (1984).

Scope of Judicial Review Where Additional Evidence Presented: When the appeal to the court from the Workers' Compensation Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) is heard only on the certified record or when the court permits additional evidence that is not important or adds nothing new to the case, the findings and decision of the Division of Workers' Compensation (now Department) are presumed to be correct and, if supported by credible evidence, must be affirmed. Miller v. Billings, 171 M 91, 555 P2d 747 (1976).

Scope of Judicial Review: On appeal from the findings of the Workers' Compensation Division (now Department of Labor and Industry), the court is justified in reversing the findings only when there exists a clear preponderance of the evidence against the findings. Beatty v. Wellman Power & Gas, Inc., 167 M 271, 538 P2d 1 (1975).

1995 Amendment: Chapter 235 in first sentence, after "changed", inserted "or that the claimant received benefits through fraud or deception" and inserted second sentence requiring the filing of a petition within 2 years of discovery of fraud. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1987 Amendment: At end of section, after "judge", deleted "or benefits received by a claimant through settlement agreements. However, the judge may not change any final settlement or award of compensation more than 4 years after the settlement has been approved by the division or any order approving a full and final compromise settlement of compensation."

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Nine Elements of Fraud Applied in Workers' Compensation Case: Taylor submitted workers' compensation claims for three injuries that he alleged occurred in February and November of 1990 and in April of 1991. State Fund paid benefits but later asserted that the claims were fraudulent and then denied benefits. Taylor filed a petition to have the benefits reinstated, and the Workers' Compensation Court found that two of claims were fraudulent. The Supreme Court held that there was substantial credible evidence to support the Workers' Compensation Court's holding that State Fund proved the nine elements of fraud on two of Taylor's three claims. Taylor v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 275 M 432, 913 P2d 1242, 53 St. Rep. 201 (1996).

No Record or Evidence on Appeal of Failure Below to Set Aside Final Settlement: A petition to the Workers' Compensation Court requesting that a final settlement be set aside was decided by granting the insurer's motion for summary judgment on grounds of lack of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court had no record of facts and no evidence that would enable the Supreme Court to conclude whether the settlement should be set aside. The Supreme Court declined to set aside the settlement and to decide whether to grant claimant costs, attorney fees, and a statutory penalty. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Martin v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 275 M 190, 911 P2d 848, 53 St. Rep. 128 (1996).

Workers' Compensation Court Jurisdiction of Petition to Set Aside Final Settlement: The Workers' Compensation Court had jurisdiction to consider a January 1995 petition to set aside a final settlement. That court decided that provisions in 39-71-204 and this section, stating that the Workers' Compensation Court could not change a final settlement more than 4 years after the settlement, which provisions were deleted by 1987 amendments, were substantive rather than procedural in nature and acted as a statute of limitations, which could not be retroactively changed. The Supreme Court reversed the decision and barred the petition in this case. Martin v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 275 M 190, 911 P2d 848, 53 St. Rep. 128 (1996).

Lack of Mutual Mistake as to When Injury Occurred Supported by Substantial Credible Evidence: Claimant asserted that because evidence showed that, unknown to the parties, further injury (resulting from initial on-the-job injury) to his knee occurred before settlement with State Fund, the settlement should be set aside on grounds of mutual mistake of the parties. The Supreme Court would not do so because the evidence also showed that the further injury could have occurred after the settlement, that the existence of the further injury was implied in various doctors' diagnoses made before the settlement, and that the possibility of future further injury was included in the diagnoses. Sanford v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 268 M 8, 885 P2d 444, 51 St. Rep. 1187 (1994).

No Statutory Authority for Setting Aside Workers' Compensation Court Judgment: Although under some circumstances the Workers' Compensation Court may have inherent equitable power to set aside its judgment, under this section, the court's authority extends only to the review of a benefit award based on a finding that the disability of the claimant has changed. As a "change in condition" statute, this section serves a limited purpose and provides no authority for setting aside a judgment entered by the court. Thus, it was error for the court to set aside its previous judgment and require claimant's attorney to repay attorney fees and costs. St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. Chapman, 267 M 484, 885 P2d 407, 51 St. Rep. 1070 (1994).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

No Mutual Mistake in Workers' Compensation Settlement: Claimant sought to have his workers' compensation settlement reopened on grounds of mutual mistake. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's denial of the request after finding: (1) claimant was capable of understanding the terms of the settlement agreement; (2) although claimant may have experienced an increased level of pain, there was no evidence to indicate the parties were mutually mistaken about the condition of claimant's back at the time of settlement; (3) there was no evidence to link claimant's personality disorder to his back injury; and (4) the claim was barred by the statute of limitations. Whitcher v. Pac. Employers Ins. Co., 236 M 289, 769 P2d 1215, 46 St. Rep. 367 (1989).

Adequate Evidence of Impairment to Reopen Settlement Agreement: An impairment rating increase from 20% to 35%, together with lifting restrictions and testimony of a rehabilitation consultant, was sufficient evidence to enable the Workers' Compensation Court to reopen a settlement agreement within the 4-year time period authorized under a prior version of this section. Rightnour v. Intermtn. Ins. Co., 236 M 108, 768 P2d 871, 46 St. Rep. 220 (1989).

Res Judicata — Workers' Compensation Court: Claimant's lump-sum award was reduced to its present value. Subsequently the Supreme Court (prior to the 1985 amendment) decided, in a different case, that lump-sum awards cannot be discounted to present value. However, the doctrine of res judicata bars the reopening of claimant's case on the issue of the lump-sum award. Cole v. Greyhound Lines, Inc., 220 M 503, 716 P2d 611, 43 St. Rep. 562 (1986), followed in Wegmuller v. L.E. Myers Co., 224 M 69, 727 P2d 937, 43 St. Rep. 2024 (1986).

Full and Final Compromise Settlement — Effect of Annulment: Under 39-71-204 and 39-71-2909, the Workers' Compensation Court has no authority to rescind, alter, or amend a full and final settlement agreement except on a showing of fraud, mutual mistake of fact, or personal incapacity of claimant to make a binding contract. However, when the Division of Workers' Compensation (now Department of Labor and Industry), in entering an order approving the compromise settlement as required by 39-71-741, perceived an inconsistency in the settlement agreement as originally drafted by the parties and in its approval order revised the agreement, the Division (now Department) exceeded its authority under 39-71-741 and such order became a nullity, even though subsequently approved by the Workers' Compensation Court. In this situation, the Workers' Compensation Court is not precluded from reconsidering the settlement agreement and approving it as originally drafted. Bowen v. The Anaconda Co., 220 M 185, 714 P2d 142, 43 St. Rep. 278 (1986).

Final Settlement — Basis for Rescission: The claimant was injured in April 1981 and executed a final settlement in September 1981. In December 1982, he petitioned the Workers' Compensation Court for a rescission of the settlement agreement and reinstatement of benefits. The Workers' Compensation Court set aside the settlement on the basis of the doctrine of mutual mistake. The Supreme Court affirmed on different grounds, holding that a claimant has alternate theories available for rescission, i.e., for good cause under 39-71-204 and on the grounds that the disability has changed under 39-71-2909. The Supreme Court found that the findings of fact of the Workers' Compensation Court afforded a sufficient basis for rescission by the Workers' Compensation Judge under either theory. Hutchinson v. Pierce Packing Co., 219 M 18, 710 P2d 64, 42 St. Rep. 1810 (1985).

Medical Possibility Evidence — Weight: In claimant's appeal of a Workers' Compensation Court order dismissing his petition for a rehearing, he asserted that the standard for reopening a Workers' Compensation Act claim under 25-11-102 is that it was medically possible that an occupational injury aggravated a preexisting condition. The Supreme Court affirmed the order, stating that medical possibility evidence alone does not mandate a conclusion that the claimant has met his burden of proof under the Act; rather, medical possibility is to be weighed just as any other evidence. If supported by other independent evidence, it is acceptable for use by the court in making its determination. Wheeler v. Ins. Co. of N. Amer., 217 M 254, 704 P2d 49, 42 St. Rep. 1177 (1985). See also Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Reopening Limited: The Workers' Compensation Division (now State Fund) may reopen an award under this section only if it finds that the disability of the claimant has changed. Further, the reopening proceeding may not be used to retry issues settled in the original proceeding. Wheeler v. Ins. Co. of N. Amer., 217 M 254, 704 P2d 49, 42 St. Rep. 1177 (1985), followed in Wegmuller v. L.E. Myers Co., 224 M 69, 727 P2d 937, 43 St. Rep. 2024 (1986).

Workers' Compensation Settlement — Lack of Foresight of Future Symptoms Not Basis for Rescission: Claimant entered a final settlement agreement on September 8, 1981, and on December 27, 1982, petitioned the Workers' Compensation Court for rescission of the agreement. The District Court rescinded the agreement and awarded permanent total disability benefits on the ground of mistake. The Supreme Court reversed and stated that a mistake justifying rescission must be a mistake made in unconscious ignorance of a past or present fact and that because speculation as to later symptoms is a conscious ignorance of future fact, an error of foresight cannot justify a finding of rescission for mistake. The Supreme Court found claimant's reported symptoms were not credible evidence of past or present disability or a change in disability and distinguished Kienas v. Peterson, 191 M 325, 624 P2d 1, 37 St. Rep. 1747 (1980), in which medical evidence became available later as to true extent of injury at time of settlement. Supreme Court also held that claimant did not suffer economic duress in freely accepting offer of settlement. Claimant must rely on statutory scheme of award modification despite fact that he entered into settlement only months before Supreme Court ruling making tender of value of an undisputed impairment rating mandatory. Claimant could not claim detrimental reliance on "good cause" clause in agreement when agreement was a standard form prepared by the Workers' Compensation Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) and not the insurer. When there was no medical evidence in record that claimant's disability had changed, the Workers' Compensation Court was statutorily without power to reopen the settlement. Veterans' Administration (now Veterans Affairs) disability ratings are irrelevant under Montana workers' compensation laws. Hutchinson v. Pierce Packing Co., 41 St. Rep. 2298 (1984), opinion withdrawn and replaced by 219 M 18, 710 P2d 64, 42 St. Rep. 1810 (1985).

Reclassification — Pleading Requirement — Best Interests: Plaintiff was injured when a refrigerator he was lifting fell and smashed his hand and wrist. Plaintiff received temporary total benefits from December 7, 1976, until terminated on May 2, 1979. Plaintiff had heart surgery in 1977. In 1979 defendant terminated plaintiff's benefits claiming that he had no permanent disability from the accident and that his medical problems were nonindustrially related. The Workers' Compensation Court found that plaintiff's benefits were improperly terminated. Defendant alleged that because plaintiff failed to specifically plead for reclassification from temporary total disability to permanent partial disability, the Workers' Compensation Court could not reclassify him and award a lump-sum payment. The Supreme Court held that it was in the best interest of the plaintiff and judicial economy to resolve the entire matter. The Supreme Court declined to second-guess the Workers' Compensation Court's ruling as to the effect to be given to medical impairment ratings. Novak v. Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., 195 M 219, 638 P2d 390, 38 St. Rep. 1803 (1981). See also Nielsen v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 203 M 339, 661 P2d 47, 40 St. Rep. 489 (1983), and Wolfe v. Webb, 251 M 217, 824 P2d 240, 49 St. Rep. 1 (1992).

Finality of Workers' Compensation Decision — Grounds for Overturning: A full and final compromise settlement agreement between an injured worker and the Workers' Compensation State Fund was set aside because of mutual mistake of material fact by both parties. Kienas v. Peterson, 191 M 325, 624 P2d 1, 37 St. Rep. 1747 (1980), distinguished in Sollie v. Travelers Indem. Co., 212 M 197, 686 P2d 920, 41 St. Rep. 1684 (1984), and followed in Weldele v. Medley Dev., 227 M 257, 738 P2d 1281, 44 St. Rep. 1062 (1987). A petition for rehearing was filed. The Supreme Court reaffirmed the decision. The petitioner argued the Workers' Compensation Court had no power to alter or rescind the agreement 4 years after its execution. The Supreme Court pointed out that it, not the Workers' Compensation Court, set aside the agreement. It noted the scope of its appellate power and also the code provision on lack of consent through mutual mistake of material fact. The Supreme Court was not broadening the possibilities of reopening such settlements; it merely found that no contract existed initially. Kienas v. Peterson, 38 St. Rep. 320 (1981) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports or Pacific 2d Reporter), followed in Kimes v. Pac. Employers Ins. Co., 233 M 175, 759 P2d 986, 45 St. Rep. 1402 (1988).

Permanent Disability Award May Be Reviewed: The Workers' Compensation Court has continuing jurisdiction to review an award of permanent disability. Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 179 M 160, 587 P2d 11 (1978), clarifying and denying rehearing of Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 178 M 355, 584 P2d 656 (1978). Hert was held to no longer be authority for admissibility of medical records, in light of the 1990 adoption of ARM 24.5.317, in Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Case Notes

Penalty, Award of Attorney Fees, or Sanction for Settling on Courthouse Steps: State Fund, without investigating and with no factual or legal basis, claimed a $50,000 subrogation right during a 6-month period, taking the position that it was the worker's burden to prove that there was no subrogation right. A week before trial, State Fund conceded the issue. The lower court's holding that a claim for subrogation as to benefits already paid does not constitute benefits due and cannot give rise to penalties or attorney fees under 39-71-612 or 39-71-2907 was proper. "Benefits" and "compensation" do not include subrogation, and a judge awards no benefits or compensation in deciding a subrogation claim. The Supreme Court agreed with the lower court's opinion that State Fund's actions were worthy of sanctions. This section allows imposition of a sanction in a case such as this, and although the worker did not request a sanction, the lower court should have imposed one on its own initiative. However, because the worker did not raise the issue on appeal, the Supreme Court did not remand for imposition of a sanction. S.L.H. v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. CHAPTER 72
OCCUPATIONAL DISEASE ACT OF MONTANA

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Coordination With Occupational Disease Act of Montana: Section 18, Ch. 4, Sp. L. May 1990, provided: "For purposes of [this act] and the administration of Title 39, chapter 72, a reference in [this act] to an injury resulting from an accident or to a claim for an injury resulting from an accident includes a disablement as defined in 39-72-102(4)."

Chapter Case Notes

Failure to Provide Vocational Rehabilitation Benefits — Occupational Disease Act Violative of Equal Protection: Henry's on-the-job injury claim was accepted under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana, but his request for rehabilitation benefits after reaching maximum healing was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that providing rehabilitation benefits to workers covered by the Workers' Compensation Act, but not to workers covered by the Occupational Disease Act of Montana, was not rationally related to the legitimate government interest of returning workers to work as soon as possible after suffering a work-related injury. The historical justification for treating workers differently under the Workers' Compensation Act and the Occupational Disease Act of Montana no longer exists. Therefore, to the extent that it fails to provide vocational rehabilitation benefits as are provided under the Workers' Compensation Act, the Occupational Disease Act of Montana violates the equal protection clause, Art. II, sec. 4, of the Montana Constitution. Henry v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 1999 MT 126, 294 M 449, 982 P2d 456, 56 St. Rep. 506 (1999), distinguishing Eastman v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 237 M 332, 777 P2d 862, 46 St. Rep. 845 (1989).

No Authority Under Occupational Disease Act for Award of Assessments and Penalties: The Workers' Compensation Act, Title 39, ch. 71, authorizes the Workers' Compensation Court to increase by 20% the full amount of benefits due a claimant if an insurer unreasonably delays or refuses to pay benefits. The Occupational Disease Act of Montana, codified in this chapter, contains no similar penalty provision. The court's broad jurisdiction under the Workers' Compensation Act differs substantially under the Occupational Disease Act and cannot be superimposed upon and override the limited jurisdiction under the latter. Thus, the court did not err in denying a claimant's petition for a penalty based on an employer's unreasonable delay in accepting liability for an occupational disease claim. Wunderlich v. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co., 270 M 404, 892 P2d 563, 52 St. Rep. 251 (1995).

Late Claim Caused by Misstatement of Employer or Insurer — Equitable Estoppel Allows Claim: Affirming the legal maxim that no one can take advantage of his own wrong, the Supreme Court applied to the Occupational Disease Act of Montana the concept set out in Davis v. Jones, 203 M 464, 661 P2d 859 (1983), that when misstatements by an employer or insurer prevent a claimant from filing a claim in a timely manner or mislead the claimant into believing that no claim can or need be filed, the doctrine of equitable estoppel applies to toll the limitation period and allow filing of the claim. Mellem v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 237 M 439, 774 P2d 390, 46 St. Rep. 932 (1989), followed in Shelley v. USF&G, 252 M 106, 827 P2d 1288, 49 St. Rep. 277 (1992).

Occupational Disease Act — Equal Protection: Claimant, who has a history of asthma, was exposed to an unusually large and concentrated dose of fumes while working as a welder. He was hospitalized briefly, and, following treatment, his health was returned to its preexacerbation state. Claimant is not entitled to compensation under the Workers' Compensation Act for the injury he suffered during the incident in which he inhaled fumes because his health was returned to its preexacerbation state. However, he is entitled to compensation under the Occupational Disease Act. The Occupational Disease Act does not violate the equal protection clause of the state or federal constitution because there is a rational basis for the benefits awarded under the Act. Eastman v. Atl. Richfield Co., 237 M 332, 777 P2d 862, 46 St. Rep. 845 (1989), distinguished in Henry v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 1999 MT 126, 294 M 449, 982 P2d 456, 56 St. Rep. 506 (1999).

Claimant Not Eligible to Receive Benefits Under Both Workers' Compensation Act and Occupational Disease Act: As held in Ridenour v. Equity Supply Co., 204 M 473, 665 P2d 783, 40 St. Rep. 1012 (1983), an eligible claimant may seek benefits under the Workers' Compensation Act or the Occupational Disease Act; however, a claimant may not receive benefits under both Acts. Poppleton v. Rollins, Inc., 226 M 267, 735 P2d 286, 44 St. Rep. 644 (1987).

Allergic Contact Dermatitis as Injury and Disease — Claimant's Election of Remedy: Claimant developed allergic contact dermatitis unexpectedly after a single exposure to chemicals that triggered an immunological response creating antibodies that were his allergy, even though he had been exposed to the chemicals for many years without any response. This reaction met the tests of 39-71-119, constituting the allergy as an injury within the meaning of the Workers' Compensation Act, as well as an occupational disease within the meaning of the Occupational Disease Act. Claimant could elect his remedy between the Acts. Bremer v. Buerkle, 223 M 495, 727 P2d 529, 43 St. Rep. 1942 (1986).

Application of Certain Workers' Compensation Act Provisions to MODA: With respect to the Montana Occupational Disease Act (MODA), the same rationale that applies to workers' compensation cases should apply, specifically: (1) the MODA statutes in effect on the last actual day of work of claimant are controlling; (2) because both Acts involve the same employer-employee relationship, the same rules of liberal construction apply; (3) MODA is to be administered so as to give the employee the greatest possible protection within the purposes of the Act; and (4) when MODA statutes are open to more than one interpretation, one of which is favorable to the employee and another against him, the statutes may be properly construed in a manner most favorable to the employee. Therefore, in liberally construing the statute in effect on the last actual day of work of claimant in the present case, section 92-1331, R.C.M. 1947 (39-72-308, MCA, repealed L. 1979), allowed a common-law right of action although the claimant was not eligible for compensation under MODA. Gidley v. W.R. Grace & Co., 221 M 36, 717 P2d 21, 43 St. Rep. 616 (1986), overruling The Anaconda Co. v. District Court, 161 M 318, 506 P2d 81 (1973), and distinguished in Lockwood v. W.R. Grace & Co., 272 M 202, 900 P2d 314, 52 St. Rep. 705 (1995).

Election by Claimant Between Occupational Disease Act and Workers' Compensation Act Permissible: The fact that a person may have a compensable disease under the Occupational Disease Act does not preclude eligibility under the Workers' Compensation Act. Thus a claimant who meets the requirements of both acts may choose his remedy. The phrase "exclusive remedy" in 39-72-305 means that an employee does not have a common-law action against his employer. Ridenour v. Equity Supply Co., 204 M 473, 665 P2d 783, 40 St. Rep. 1012 (1983).

Purpose of Act: The purpose of the Occupational Disease Act of Montana is to compensate workers who contract a disease or have inert diseases when no "accident" is involved or when there is no "injury" as defined in 39-71-119. Greger v. St. Ins. Fund, 180 M 348, 590 P2d 1121, 36 St. Rep. 268 (1979), distinguished in Bremer v. Buerkle, 223 M 495, 727 P2d 529, 43 St. Rep. 1942 (1986).

Exposure to Phosphorous Fumes: Where employee's injuries alleged to have been suffered, in the course of his employment by defendant, as a result of exposure to phosphorous fumes constituted an occupational disease under the terms and provisions of this Act (Title 39, ch. 72), his action for personal injuries against his employer should not have been dismissed where the employer did not elect to come under nor was it covered by any plans set forth in this Act. Summer v. Victor Chem. Works, 298 F2d 66 (9th Cir. 1961).

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Failure to Provide Vocational Rehabilitation Benefits — Occupational Disease Act Violative of Equal Protection: Henry's on-the-job injury claim was accepted under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana, but his request for rehabilitation benefits after reaching maximum healing was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that providing rehabilitation benefits to workers covered by the Workers' Compensation Act, but not to workers covered by the Occupational Disease Act of Montana, was not rationally related to the legitimate government interest of returning workers to work as soon as possible after suffering a work-related injury. The historical justification for treating workers differently under the Workers' Compensation Act and the Occupational Disease Act of Montana no longer exists. Therefore, to the extent that it fails to provide vocational rehabilitation benefits as are provided under the Workers' Compensation Act, the Occupational Disease Act of Montana violates the equal protection clause, Art. II, sec. 4, of the Montana Constitution. Henry v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 1999 MT 126, 294 M 449, 982 P2d 456, 56 St. Rep. 506 (1999), distinguishing Eastman v. Allergy: When an individual allergy is aggravated by work experience in the ordinary course of work, the result is an occupational disease. Greger v. St. Ins. Fund, 180 M 348, 590 P2d 1121, 36 St. Rep. 268 (1979).

Definition of Occupational Disease: If a disease is caused by the conditions of employment and these conditions carry with them a risk of incurring the disease greater than that which prevails in employment and living conditions in general, then such disease is an occupational disease within the scope of this chapter. Compensation is not to be barred because the risk is not generally recognized or because only those unusually susceptible or predisposed to a given disease will contract it. Greger v. St. Ins. Fund, 180 M 348, 590 P2d 1121, 36 St. Rep. 268 (1979), distinguished in Bremer v. Buerkle, 223 M 495, 727 P2d 529, 43 St. Rep. 1942 (1986).

Radiation Injury — Exclusive Remedy: Plaintiff's injuries caused as a result of his exposure to electromagnetic pulses and laser radiations while employed with the defendant were compensable under this act, and common-law remedies were barred under this section. Dayton v. Boeing Co., 389 F. Supp. 433 (D.C. Mont. 1975).

Silicosis: Determination by Industrial Accident Board (now State Fund) that worker was not entitled to benefits for silicosis was not an exclusion of him from the act but was a finding he had not proved his claim. The Anaconda Co. v. District Court, 161 M 318, 506 P2d 81 (1973).

Hydrocarbon Inhalation: Evidence was insufficient to sustain automobile mechanic's allegation that his exposure to concentration of diesel smoke resulted in his contracting emphysema or aggravating a preexisting emphysema condition because of hydrocarbon inhalation. Failure to Provide Vocational Rehabilitation Benefits — Occupational Disease Act Violative of Equal Protection: Henry's on-the-job injury claim was accepted under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana, but his request for rehabilitation benefits after reaching maximum healing was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that providing rehabilitation benefits to workers covered by the Workers' Compensation Act, but not to workers covered by the Occupational Disease Act of Montana, was not rationally related to the legitimate government interest of returning workers to work as soon as possible after suffering a work-related injury. Atlantic Richfield Co., 237 M 332, 777 P2d 862, 46 St. Rep. 845 (1989).

Occupational Disease Act — Equal Protection: Claimant, who has a history of asthma, was exposed to an unusually large and concentrated dose of fumes while working as a welder. He was hospitalized briefly, and, following treatment, his health was returned to its preexacerbation state. Claimant is not entitled to compensation under the Workers' Compensation Act for the injury he suffered during the incident in which he inhaled fumes because his health was returned to its preexacerbation state. However, he is entitled to compensation under the Occupational Disease Act. The Occupational Disease Act does not violate the equal protection clause of the state or federal constitution because there is a rational basis for the benefits awarded under the Act. Eastman v. Atl. Richfield Co., 237 M 332, 777 P2d 862, 46 St. Rep. 845 (1989), distinguished in Henry v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 1999 MT 126, 294 M 449, 982 P2d 456, 56 St. Rep. 506 (1999).

Severability Clause: Section 8, Ch. 190, L. 1971, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Last Injurious Exposure Rule: As set out in Caekaert v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 268 M 105, 885 P2d 495 (1994), Montana statutorily recognizes a version of the last injurious exposure rule in occupational disease cases. This section provides that when compensation is payable for an occupational disease, the only employer liable is the employer in whose employment the employee was last injuriously exposed to the hazard of the disease. For the rule to apply, there must be evidence of a second injury or injurious exposure that materially or substantially contributed to the injury. In the present case, Deschamps injured his back while in the employ of Champion International and eventually returned to work with no restrictions. The Champion International mill was subsequently purchased by Stimson Lumber Company, and Deschamps continued to work at the mill under changed work activities that resulted in further injury to his back. Deschamps sought additional benefits from Champion International, which denied liability. The Workers' Compensation Court properly held that Deschamps' back disease was significantly aggravated by his employment at Stimson Lumber Company and, pursuant to the last injurious exposure rule, correctly assigned liability to Stimson, the employer for whom Deschamps was working at the time of the last injurious exposure. Liberty NW. Ins. Corp. v. Champion Int'l Corp., 285 M 76, 945 P2d 433, 54 St. Rep. 1051 (1997).

39-72-305. Right to compensation exclusive remedy — uninsured employers.

Case Notes

Exclusive Remedy Provisions Precluding Negligence Suit Following Successful Remedy Under Occupational Disease Act: Torres was injured by chemicals while pursuing a doctorate of philosophy in chemistry at Montana State University. She filed a workers' compensation claim, which was denied, but the parties later entered into a disputed liability settlement under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana. Torres then brought suit against the state for negligence. The District Court correctly dismissed the negligence claim, holding that the exclusivity provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act and the Occupational Disease Act of Montana precluded pursuit of the tort claim. The only exception to the exclusivity provisions is in 39-71-413, regarding intentional or malicious acts or omissions by the employer or a coemployee. Torres v. St., 273 M 83, 902 P2d 999, 52 St. Rep. 833 (1995).

Election by Claimant Between Occupational Disease Act and Workers' Compensation Act Permissible: The fact that a person may have a compensable disease under the Occupational Disease Act does not preclude eligibility under the Workers' Compensation Act. Thus a claimant who meets the requirements of both acts may choose his remedy. The phrase "exclusive remedy" in 39-72-305 means that an employee does not have a common-law action against his employer. Ridenour v. Equity Supply Co., 204 M 473, 665 P2d 783, 40 St. Rep. 1012 (1983).

Radiation Injury — Exclusive Remedy: Plaintiff's injuries caused as a result of his exposure to electromagnetic pulses and laser radiations while employed with the defendant were compensable under this act, and common-law remedies were barred under this section. Dayton v. Boeing Co., 389 F. Supp. 433 (D.C. Mont. 1975).

Proof of Claim: Determination by Industrial Accident Board (now State Fund) that worker was not entitled to benefits for silicosis was not an exclusion of him from the act but was a finding he had not proved his claim. The Anaconda Co. v. District Court, 161 M 318, 506 P2d 81 (1973).

Case Notes

Rehabilitation Benefits Provided Under Workers' Compensation Act Inapplicable to Occupational Disease Act: Loss suffered from carpal tunnel syndrome and filed an occupational disease claim, which was paid by the insurer. Later, Loss sought total rehabilitation benefits pursuant to 39-71-2001 (renumbered 39-71-1006), which were denied by the insurer, and the denial was affirmed by the Workers' Compensation Court. The Supreme Court held that rehabilitation benefits payable under the Workers' Compensation Act pursuant to 39-71-2001 (renumbered 39-71-1006) are not available to a claimant proceeding under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana. The Supreme Court noted in response to Loss's argument that 39-71-2001 (renumbered 39-71-1006) is a "stand alone" section that just happens to be codified in Title 39, ch. 71, but that applies with equal force to Title 39, ch. 72; that the Legislature had directed that 39-71-2001 (renumbered 39-71-1006) be codified as an integral part of Title 39, ch. 71; and that the provisions of Title 39, ch. 71, should apply to that section. The Supreme Court also distinguished Ingbretson v. La. Pac. Corp., 272 M 294, 900 P2d 912 (1995), by noting that this section, the section relied on by the Supreme Court in that case to apply Title 39, ch. 71, procedural sections to Title 39, ch. 72, stated that the "practice and procedure" of one act applied to the other. The Supreme Court concluded that a substantive section such as 39-71-2001 (renumbered 39-71-1006) dealing with benefits did not fall within the "practice and procedure" language of this section to be applied to the Occupational Disease Act of Montana. Loss v. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co., 282 M 80, 936 P2d 313, 54 St. Rep. 251 (1997).

Award of Costs and Attorney Fees Proper: When the Workers' Compensation Court did not err in finding that the employee was entitled to benefits, substantial credible evidence supported the conclusion that denial of benefits was unreasonable and that the employee was entitled to costs and attorney fees. Ingbretson v. Louisiana-Pacific Corp., 272 M 294, 900 P2d 912, 52 St. Rep. 764 (1995).

Penalty Not Limited to Cases Under Workers' Compensation Act: The Workers' Compensation Court had direct jurisdiction when the case was not an appeal from a final determination by the Department of Labor and Industry but was a benefits dispute in which it had already been established that the employee suffered an occupational disease. Because the Occupational Disease Act of Montana provides that practice and procedures prescribed in the Workers' Compensation Act apply to proceedings under the Occupational Disease Act, the court did not err in applying the penalty. Ingbretson v. Louisiana-Pacific Corp., 272 M 294, 900 P2d 912, 52 St. Rep. 764 (1995).

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 442 near beginning of (2) substituted "insurer" for "department"; and inserted (3) concerning dispute regarding claim. Amendment effective April 23, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's current employment statutes constitute a complex and often confusing body of law requiring specialized skills and knowledge to interpret; and

WHEREAS, most employers in the private sector employ 10 or fewer employees and function without the assistance of personnel officers or in-house legal staff; and

WHEREAS, employment-related disputes are currently heard in many different forums, including the Board of Personnel Appeals for wage and hour issues, the Board of Labor Appeals for unemployment insurance issues, the Workers' Compensation Court for workers' compensation issues, the Commission for Human Rights for discrimination issues, and District Courts for the resolution of wrongful discharge conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the 1997 Legislature enacted House Joint Resolution No. 10, which directed the Department of Labor and Industry to convene a group of interested parties to explore, investigate, and report to the 1999 Legislature optional approaches to an integrated dispute resolution process for employment-related issues; and

WHEREAS, members of the Legislature and interest groups, including employers and employees from the private and public sectors, formed the House Joint Resolution No. 10 work group, which convened in September 1997 to begin studying the issues related to the employment dispute resolution process; and

WHEREAS, after approximately 10 meetings during the 1997 interim, the work group issued its report in November 1998, recommending that legislation be prepared for consideration by the 1999 Legislature to revise the dispute resolution process for employment-related issues."

Severability: Section 28, Ch. 442, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 31(2), Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided that this section applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to occupational diseases occurring before April 23, 1999, unless a party elects, after notification by the department of labor and industry, to remain in the contested case process.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 243 in (1), in middle of first sentence, reduced 2 years to 1 year and near end, after "known that", deleted "total disability"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 243, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1985 Amendment: In first sentence of (1) changed "1 year" to "2 years"; and deleted former (3) that read: "Notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (1) and (2) of this section, no claim to recover benefits under this chapter may be maintained unless the claim is properly filed within 3 years after the last day upon which the claimant or the deceased employee actually worked for the employer against whom compensation is claimed."

Applicability: Section 6, Ch. 112, L. 1985, provided: "This act applies to claims arising from exposures occurring on or after the effective date of this act." The act became effective October 1, 1985.

Case Notes

Occupational Disease Claim Barred by Statute of Limitations: Grenz filed an occupational disease claim in 1992, seeking benefits for degenerative arthritis in his hands, wrists, shoulders, elbows, ankles, and knees. The hearings examiner found, and the Supreme Court affirmed, that Grenz knew as early as 1988 that he was suffering from degenerative arthritis and that his total disability was caused by an occupational disease. The 1992 claim was thus time-barred by the statute of limitations in this section. Grenz v. Fire & Cas. of Conn., 278 M 268, 924 P2d 264, 53 St. Rep. 898 (1996).

1999 Amendment: Chapter 377 deleted former (1) that read: "(1) Compensation may not be paid when the last day of the injurious exposure of the employee to the hazard of the occupational disease has occurred prior to July 1, 1959"; near beginning of first sentence after "employee" deleted "in employment on or after January 1, 1959, because the employee" and near middle substituted "it is medically inadvisable" for "it is in fact, as determined by the medical panel, inadvisable"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1999.

Severability: Section 24, Ch. 377, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 555 near end of first sentence of (2), after "cessation", substituted "compensation may be paid" for "the department may allow compensation on account thereof as it considers just" and after "$10,000" inserted "by an agreement between the insurer and the claimant" and inserted second sentence that read: "If the parties fail to reach an agreement, the mediation procedures in Title 39, chapter 71, part 24, must be followed"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1985 Amendment: At beginning of (1) deleted "Except as provided for in this section"; and deleted all of former (2) and part of former (3) that read: "(2) Except as provided for in subsection (3) of this section, no compensation may be paid for silicosis unless during the 8 years immediately preceding the disablement the injured employee has been exposed to harmful quantities of silicon dioxide dust for a total period of not less than 1,000 workshifts in employment in this state and unless total disability results within 3 years from the last day upon which the employee actually worked for the employer against whom compensation is claimed.

(3) A silicotic employee who is discharged by his employer to escape liability for silicosis benefits under this chapter is eligible to receive compensation under this chapter when totally disabled if he has 700 actual workshifts since January 1, 1954, for that employer."

Applicability: Section 6, Ch. 112, L. 1985, provided: "This act applies to claims arising from exposures occurring on or after the effective date of this act." The act became effective October 1, 1985.

Failure to Provide Vocational Rehabilitation Benefits — Occupational Disease Act Violative of Equal Protection: Henry's on-the-job injury claim was accepted under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana, but his request for rehabilitation benefits after reaching maximum healing was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that providing rehabilitation benefits to workers covered by the Workers' Compensation Act, but not to workers covered by the Occupational Disease Act of Montana, was not rationally related to the legitimate government interest of returning workers to work as soon as possible after suffering a work-related injury. The historical justification for treating workers differently under the Workers' Compensation Act and the Occupational Disease Act of Montana no longer exists. Therefore, to the extent that it fails to provide vocational rehabilitation benefits as are provided under the Workers' Compensation Act, the Occupational Disease Act of Montana violates the equal protection clause, Art. II, sec. 4, of the Montana Constitution. Henry v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 1999 MT 126, 294 M 449, 982 P2d 456, 56 St. Rep. 506 (1999), distinguishing Eastman v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 237 M 332, 777 P2d 862, 46 St. Rep. 845 (1989).

Physical Inability to Perform Work as Triggering Entitlement to Total Disability Benefits: Only when a person is unable to physically perform any employment is that person entitled to either temporary total disability benefits or permanent total disability benefits under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana. Notwithstanding Smart's argument regarding the definition of "worker's job pool" that was set out in a prior section and then repealed, even though Smart could not return to his former work, he was physically able to perform other available work for which he was qualified and thus was not entitled to permanent total disability benefits under 39-72-701. The Workers' Compensation Court properly limited Smart's compensation to an award of up to $10,000, pursuant to this section. Smart v. Mont. Historical Soc'y, 277 M 89, 918 P2d 670, 53 St. Rep. 554 (1996).

Exclusive Remedy: Prior to the 1985 amendment, claimant who was covered by the Occupational Disease Act of Montana but who did not meet the requirements set forth in this section, including the number of workshifts required, was precluded from bringing lawsuit to recover for his alleged ailments. Causal Test for Compensability — Whether Conditions Aggravated Disease: Occupational aggravations of preexisting, nonoccupational diseases are compensable, as are occupational diseases that are aggravated by nonoccupational factors. The test for compensability is whether occupational factors significantly aggravated a preexisting condition, not whether occupational factors played the major or most significant role in causing the resulting disease. Polk v. Planet Ins. Co., 287 M 79, 951 P2d 1015, 54 St. Rep. 1508 (1997).

Reversal for Failure to Apply Appropriate Test for Causation: Of the eight doctors who examined an employee, four said that he had an occupational disease. Three of the other four doctors said that he had no occupational disease, but their testimony would support a finding that work conditions aggravated or contributed to his nonoccupational pulmonary condition. These three doctors believed that the work conditions had to be the major or primary factor causing the medical condition. The appropriate test was whether those work conditions aggravated the medical condition. The hearings examiner wrongly applied the same erroneous standard as these three doctors and concluded that no compensation was due. The Workers' Compensation Court erred in not overruling the hearings examiner on this point, and that court's decision affirming the hearings examiner's decision was reversed. Polk v. Planet Ins. Co., 287 M 79, 951 P2d 1015, 54 St. Rep. 1508 (1997).

Illness Neither Arising Out of nor Aggravated by Employment: Hughes submitted a claim for benefits for dermatitis. Hughes argued that the dermatitis was aggravated by the travel required by her job. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that the condition was a preexisting condition intrinsic to Hughes and that although the condition was aggravated by the travel requirement, it was noncompensable because the dermatitis was not job-related in itself and travel did not constitute an aggravating factor. Hughes v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 253 M 499, 833 P2d 1099, 49 St. Rep. 568 (1992).

Claimant Suffering Occupational Disease: Claimant, who has a history of asthma, was exposed to an unusually large and concentrated dose of fumes while working as a welder. He was hospitalized briefly, and, following treatment, his health was returned to its preexacerbation state. Claimant is not entitled to compensation under the Workers' Compensation Act for the injury he suffered when he inhaled the fumes because his health was returned to its preexacerbation state. However, he is entitled to compensation under the Occupational Disease Act. Eastman v. Atl. Richfield Co., 237 M 332, 777 P2d 862, 46 St. Rep. 845 (1989), distinguished in Henry v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 1999 MT 126, 294 M 449, 982 P2d 456, 56 St. Rep. 506 (1999).

Part 6
Medical Examinations — Determining Compensability of Claims

Part Case Notes

Reversal for Failure to Apply Appropriate Test for Causation: Of the eight doctors who examined an employee, four said that he had an occupational disease. Three of the other four doctors said that he had no occupational disease, but their testimony would support a finding that work conditions aggravated or contributed to his nonoccupational pulmonary condition. These three doctors believed that the work conditions had to be the major or primary factor causing the medical condition. The appropriate test was whether those work conditions aggravated the medical condition. The hearings examiner wrongly applied the same erroneous standard as these three doctors and concluded that no compensation was due. The Workers' Compensation Court erred in not overruling the hearings examiner on this point, and that court's decision affirming the hearings examiner's decision was reversed. Polk v. Planet Ins. Co., 287 M 79, 951 P2d 1015, 54 St. Rep. 1508 (1997).

Workers' Compensation Court Review, for Errors of Law, of Test for Proximate Causation of Disease: The Workers' Compensation Court erred in reviewing findings, conclusions, and the order of the hearings examiner of the Department of Labor and Industry only for erroneous findings of fact. Whether the hearings examiner applied the appropriate test for proximate causation of the disease was a question of law. Thus, pursuant to 39-72-612 (now repealed), the court should also have reviewed to determine whether the decision was affected by error of law. Polk v. Planet Ins. Co., 287 M 79, 951 P2d 1015, 54 St. Rep. 1508 (1997).

Application of Statute to Final Order Contemplated by Administrative Rule: Epperson filed a claim for occupational disease benefits, which was denied by the Department of Labor and Industry in an "order of determination" issued by the Department. This order also notified Epperson of her right to request a hearing within 20 days pursuant to 39-72-612 (now repealed). Epperson did not request a hearing within 20 days but did request one in January 1996. The Workers' Compensation Court held that the request was timely pursuant to Department rules. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the statute contemplates a hearing only after a final order and that final order was not the order issued by the Department on November 27. The statute contemplates a final order, and because the Department's rules allow an "administrative review" by the Department within 90 days of a determination, the order issued by the Department did not become a final order for the purposes of the statute until after the administrative review was held or after the time for the review had expired. Under the Department's rules, Epperson had 90 days to request that review. Her application for a hearing waived that review, thus making the order of determination final on the date of her request for a hearing and thereby starting the 20-day period to request a hearing. Epperson v. Willis Corroon Administrative Serv. Corp., 281 M 373, 934 P2d 1034, 54 St. Rep. 226 (1997).

No Jurisdiction to Grant Occupational Disease Benefits: Claimant filed a petition for hearing under the Workers' Compensation Act alleging an industrial injury. Because the procedures for obtaining workers' compensation or occupational disease benefits differ, the Workers' Compensation Court had jurisdiction to determine entitlement to workers' compensation benefits but lacked jurisdiction to find that claimant suffered from an occupational disease and was entitled to occupational disease benefits. Cocking v. Hillhaven Corp., 225 M 369, 732 P2d 1333, 44 St. Rep. 309 (1987).

39-72-601. Medical evaluators.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 442 in (1) at end of first sentence substituted "medical evaluators" for "medical panel" and at beginning of third sentence substituted "An evaluator" for "A physician on the panel"; in (2) after "select" substituted "an evaluator" for "a panel physician" and deleted former second sentence that read: "The department shall appoint, as required, a physician as the presiding officer"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 23, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's current employment statutes constitute a complex and often confusing body of law requiring specialized skills and knowledge to interpret; and

WHEREAS, most employers in the private sector employ 10 or fewer employees and function without the assistance of personnel officers or in-house legal staff; and

WHEREAS, employment-related disputes are currently heard in many different forums, including the Board of Personnel Appeals for wage and hour issues, the Board of Labor Appeals for unemployment insurance issues, the Workers' Compensation Court for workers' compensation issues, the Commission for Human Rights for discrimination issues, and District Courts for the resolution of wrongful discharge conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the 1997 Legislature enacted House Joint Resolution No. 10, which directed the Department of Labor and Industry to convene a group of interested parties to explore, investigate, and report to the 1999 Legislature optional approaches to an integrated dispute resolution process for employment-related issues; and

WHEREAS, members of the Legislature and interest groups, including employers and employees from the private and public sectors, formed the House Joint Resolution No. 10 work group, which convened in September 1997 to begin studying the issues related to the employment dispute resolution process; and

WHEREAS, after approximately 10 meetings during the 1997 interim, the work group issued its report in November 1998, recommending that legislation be prepared for consideration by the 1999 Legislature to revise the dispute resolution process for employment-related issues."

Severability: Section 28, Ch. 442, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 31(2), Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided that this section applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to occupational diseases occurring before April 23, 1999, unless a party elects, after notification by the department of labor and industry, to remain in the contested case process.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 516 in (2), at end, substituted "a physician as the presiding officer" for "one member of the panel to be the chairman"; and made minor changes in style.

Saving Clause: Section 25, Ch. 516, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 26, Ch. 516, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1989 Amendment: Chapter 162 substituted language concerning list of physicians to serve on panel and requiring Department to select a panel physician to examine a claimant for former section that read: "(1) The Montana medical association may, at least annually, certify to the division as nominees 10 or more licensed physicians of the state to serve on the medical panel. At least three of the physicians must have had at the time of certification at least 5 years' practice in the diagnosis, care, and treatment of pulmonary diseases and the interpretation of x-ray films. At least three of the physicians must have had at the time of certification qualifications in the diagnosis, care, and treatment of nonpulmonary occupational diseases.

(2) From the list submitted as provided for in this section, the division shall appoint five or more physicians to serve on the medical panel.

(3) If the Montana medical association fails to submit the list of nominees as provided for in this section, the division shall appoint as members of the medical panel five or more licensed physicians in the state. Three of the panel members must have had at the time of appointment at least 5 years' practice in the diagnosis, care, and treatment of pulmonary diseases and the interpretation of x-ray films.

(4) The panel members shall appoint one member of the panel to be the chairman." Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

Effective Date — Retroactive Applicability: Section 6, Ch. 162, L. 1989, provided: "(1) [This act] is effective July 1, 1989.

(2) [This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to all occupational disease claims pending before the division."

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 442 in (2)(a) near middle of first sentence substituted "an evaluator on the list of physicians" for "a member of the medical panel", at beginning of second and fourth sentences substituted "evaluator" for "panel member", and inserted third sentence concerning case involving a fatality; substituted (2)(b) concerning mailing findings for former text that read: "(b) Either the claimant or the insurer may, within 20 days after the receipt of the report by the first panel member, request that the claimant be examined by a second panel member. If a second examination is requested, the department shall direct the claimant to a second panel member who shall conduct an examination to determine whether the claimant is totally disabled and is suffering from an occupational disease. The panel member shall submit a report of the member's findings to the department. The medical panel member may, in order to reach a conclusion, consult with the claimant's attending physician. The reports from the two examining physicians must be sent by the department to the presiding officer of the panel. The presiding officer shall issue a report concerning the claimant's physical condition and whether the claimant is suffering from an occupational disease"; substituted (2)(c) concerning jurisdiction over initial compensability for former text that read: "(i) If a second examination is not requested, the department shall issue its order determining whether the claimant is entitled to occupational disease benefits based on the report of the first examining physician.

(ii) If a second examination is requested, the department shall issue its order based on the report of the presiding officer. If the panel presiding officer has examined the claimant, the department shall appoint another presiding officer"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 23, 1999.

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Inability to Pay for Second Medical Examination Held Not to Deny Access to Justice: Grooms filed a workers' compensation claim with her insurer, the State Fund, alleging that she suffered from a skin allergy condition. The State Fund denied liability under the Workers' Compensation

Act and requested the Department of Labor and Industry to process the claim under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana by providing her with a medical examination. Subsequently, Grooms claimed that her inability to pay for a second medical examination denied her right to access to justice. The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that when her claim was denied under the Workers' Compensation Act, Grooms retained the right under 39-72-611 (now repealed) to have her claim resolved by the Workers' Compensation Court. Therefore, Grooms was not precluded from pursuing her claim and thereby denied access to justice. The Supreme Court affirmed the Workers' Compensation Court, noting that when her claim was denied, Grooms was informed by an order of the Department that she had the right to request a second examination under this section, which she would pay for, and a right to request a hearing pursuant to 39-72-611 (now repealed) before the Department issued its final determination. The Supreme Court noted that Grooms' right to a hearing to pursue her claim was not dependent upon a second medical examination. Thus, she was not denied access to justice by the requirement that she pay for any second medical examination. Grooms v. Ponderosa Inn, 283 M 459, 942 P2d 699, 54 St. Rep. 725 (1997).

No Equal Protection Violation Under Workers' Compensation Act and Occupational Disease Act Requirements for Medical Examination: Grooms filed a workers' compensation claim with her insurer, the State Fund, alleging that she suffered from a skin allergy condition. The State Fund denied liability and requested that the Department of Labor and Industry process her claim under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana by scheduling a medical examination for her by a member of a panel of physicians. Grooms argued before the Supreme Court that her rights to equal protection were infringed by the requirement that if she requested a second medical examination, she would have to pay for it, whereas if her claim had been processed under the Workers' Compensation Act, then 39-71-605 requires the insurer or the Department to pay for the cost of the examination. The Supreme Court held that Grooms misinterpreted the statutes because 39-71-605 does not allow a workers' compensation claimant to request and obtain an examination at the insurer's expense but, rather, provides that an insurer or the Department may require the claimant to submit to physical examinations from time to time and provides that the entity requesting the examination must pay for it. As a result, the Supreme Court held that there was no disparate treatment between the two Acts. In response to Grooms' argument that the Occupational Disease Act violates the state constitutional equal protection clause by requiring a mandatory physical examination without providing for a waiver of the costs of the examination for an indigent claimant, the Supreme Court again held that Grooms misapprehended the statutes because 39-72-608 and this section do not mandate an examination at the claimant's expense but provide that it is mandatory for a claimant to submit to a medical examination and require the claimant to pay for an examination only if the claimant is dissatisfied with the results of the first examination and requests a second examination. Because a second examination is not mandatory but optional at the choice of the claimant, the Supreme Court held that Grooms' right of equal protection was not violated. Grooms v. Ponderosa Inn, 283 M 459, 942 P2d 699, 54 St. Rep. 725 (1997).

Workers' Compensation Claimant's Right to Choose Treating Physician Not Denied by Department of Labor and Industry Selection of Panel Physician for Diagnosis: Grooms filed a workers' compensation claim with her insurer, the State Fund, alleging that she suffered from a skin allergy condition. The State Fund denied liability and requested that the Department of Labor and Industry process her claim under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana by scheduling a medical examination for her by a member of a panel of physicians. Grooms objected to the first designated physician, and another was designated. The physician concluded that Grooms was suffering from an allergic condition that could not be definitively attributed to her employment. The diagnosis was given to Grooms, and she was notified of her right to have another medical evaluation done by a panel physician at her own expense. In the Workers' Compensation Court, Grooms alleged that her right to choose her own treating physician under 33-22-111 was violated by this section, pursuant to which the Department chose a panel physician to conduct an examination. However, the Workers' Compensation Court held against her. The Supreme Court affirmed the Workers' Compensation Court, holding that the choice of a treating physician under 33-22-111 has nothing to do with the selection of an examining physician from a panel by the Department. The purpose of the examination by a physician chosen from the panel is for consultation with an independent expert to determine if the claimant is suffering from an occupational disease and not for the purpose of treatment. The Supreme Court distinguished the case relied on by Grooms, Stordalen v. Ricci's Food Farm, 261 M 256, 862 P2d 393 (1993), by noting that the case involved neither this section nor examination by a medical panel physician. Grooms v. Ponderosa Inn, 283 M 459, 942 P2d 699, 54 St. Rep. 725 (1997).

2001 Amendment: Chapter 214 deleted former fourth sentence that read: "The expense of any examinations and reports, as provided in 39-72-605, must be paid by the party requesting the examination." Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Severability: Section 25, Ch. 214, L. 2001, was a severability clause.

1999 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 377 at beginning of last sentence deleted "When the occupational disease causes death"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1999.

Chapter 442 in first sentence before "medical examination" deleted "first" and deleted former second sentence that read: "The expense of a reexamination and panel report must be borne by the dissatisfied party requesting the reexamination"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 23, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's current employment statutes constitute a complex and often confusing body of law requiring specialized skills and knowledge to interpret; and

WHEREAS, most employers in the private sector employ 10 or fewer employees and function without the assistance of personnel officers or in-house legal staff; and

WHEREAS, employment-related disputes are currently heard in many different forums, including the Board of Personnel Appeals for wage and hour issues, the Board of Labor Appeals for unemployment insurance issues, the Workers' Compensation Court for workers' compensation issues, the Commission for Human Rights for discrimination issues, and District Courts for the resolution of wrongful discharge conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the 1997 Legislature enacted House Joint Resolution No. 10, which directed the Department of Labor and Industry to convene a group of interested parties to explore, investigate, and report to the 1999 Legislature optional approaches to an integrated dispute resolution process for employment-related issues; and

WHEREAS, members of the Legislature and interest groups, including employers and employees from the private and public sectors, formed the House Joint Resolution No. 10 work group, which convened in September 1997 to begin studying the issues related to the employment dispute resolution process; and

WHEREAS, after approximately 10 meetings during the 1997 interim, the work group issued its report in November 1998, recommending that legislation be prepared for consideration by the 1999 Legislature to revise the dispute resolution process for employment-related issues."

Severability: Section 24, Ch. 377, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

Section 28, Ch. 442, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 31(2), Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided that this section applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to occupational diseases occurring before April 23, 1999, unless a party elects, after notification by the department of labor and industry, to remain in the contested case process.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 555 inserted last sentence that read: "When the occupational disease causes death, the expense of any examinations and reports, as provided in 39-72-605, must be borne by the party requesting the examination." Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

1989 Amendment: In first sentence, after "examination", inserted "and report"; in second sentence, after "reexamination", inserted "and panel report"; in third sentence, after "examinations", inserted "and reports"; and made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Effective Date — Retroactive Applicability: Section 6, Ch. 162, L. 1989, provided: "(1) [This act] is effective July 1, 1989.

(2) [This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to all occupational disease claims pending before the division."

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Inability to Pay for Second Medical Examination Held Not to Deny Access to Justice: Grooms filed a workers' compensation claim with her insurer, the State Fund, alleging that she suffered from a skin allergy condition. The State Fund denied liability under the Workers' Compensation Act and requested the Department of Labor and Industry to process the claim under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana by providing her with a medical examination. Subsequently, Grooms claimed that her inability to pay for a second medical examination denied her right to access to justice. The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that when her claim was denied under the Workers' Compensation Act, Grooms retained the right under 39-72-611 (now repealed) to have her claim resolved by the Workers' Compensation Court. Therefore, Grooms was not precluded from pursuing her claim and thereby denied access to justice. The Supreme Court affirmed the Workers' Compensation Court, noting that when her claim was denied, Grooms was informed by an order of the Department that she had the right to request a second examination under 39-72-602, which she would pay for, and a right to request a hearing pursuant to 39-72-611 (now repealed) before the Department issued its final determination. The Supreme Court noted that Grooms' right to a hearing to pursue her claim was not dependent upon a second medical examination. Thus, she was not denied access to justice by the requirement that she pay for any second medical examination. Grooms v. Ponderosa Inn, 283 M 459, 942 P2d 699, 54 St. Rep. 725 (1997).

No Equal Protection Violation Under Workers' Compensation Act and Occupational Disease Act Requirements for Medical Examination: Grooms filed a workers' compensation claim with her insurer, the State Fund, alleging that she suffered from a skin allergy condition. The State Fund denied liability and requested that the Department of Labor and Industry process her claim under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana by scheduling a medical examination for her by a member of a panel of physicians. Grooms argued before the Supreme Court that her rights to equal protection were infringed by the requirement that if she requested a second medical examination, she would have to pay for it, whereas if her claim had been processed under the Workers' Compensation Act, then 39-71-605 requires the insurer or the Department to pay for the cost of the examination. The Supreme Court held that Grooms misinterpreted the statutes because 39-71-605 does not allow a workers' compensation claimant to request and obtain an examination at the insurer's expense but, rather, provides that an insurer or the Department may require the claimant to submit to physical examinations from time to time and provides that the entity requesting the examination must pay for it. As a result, the Supreme Court held that there was no disparate treatment between the two Acts. In response to Grooms' argument that the Occupational Disease Act violates the state constitutional equal protection clause by requiring a mandatory physical examination without providing for a waiver of the costs of the examination for an indigent claimant, the Supreme Court again held that Grooms misapprehended the statutes because 39-72-602 and this section do not mandate an examination at the claimant's expense but provide that it is mandatory for a claimant to submit to a medical examination and require the claimant to pay for an examination only if the claimant is dissatisfied with the results of the first examination and requests a second examination. Because a second examination is not mandatory but optional at the choice of the claimant, the Supreme Court held that Grooms' right of equal protection was not violated. Grooms v. Ponderosa Inn, 283 M 459, 942 P2d 699, 54 St. Rep. 725 (1997).

Part 7
Compensation and Benefits

Part Case Notes

Application of Certain Workers' Compensation Act Provisions to MODA: With respect to the Montana Occupational Disease Act (MODA), the same rationale that applies to workers' compensation cases should apply, specifically: (1) the MODA statutes in effect on the last actual day of work of claimant are controlling; (2) because both Acts involve the same employer-employee relationship, the same rules of liberal construction apply; (3) MODA is to be administered so as to give the employee the greatest possible protection within the purposes of the Act; and (4) when MODA statutes are open to more than one interpretation, one of which is favorable to the employee and another against him, the statutes may be properly construed in a manner most favorable to the employee. Therefore, in liberally construing the statute in effect on the last actual day of work of claimant in the present case, section 92-1331, R.C.M. 1947 (39-72-308, MCA, repealed L. 1979), allowed a common-law right of action although the claimant was not eligible for compensation under MODA. Gidley v. W.R. Grace & Co., 221 M 36, 717 P2d 21, 43 St. Rep. 616 (1986), overruling The Anaconda Co. v. District Court, 161 M 318, 506 P2d 81 (1973).

39-72-701. Compensation for total disability or death due to occupational disease other than pneumoconiosis.

Compiler's Comments

1981 Amendment: Added (2) concerning offset for social security disability benefits.

Inconsistent Acts Repealed: Section 7, Ch. 190, L. 1971, repealed all acts and parts of acts in conflict therewith.

Severability Clause: Section 8, Ch. 190, L. 1971, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Physical Inability to Perform Work as Triggering Entitlement to Total Disability Benefits: Only when a person is unable to physically perform any employment is that person entitled to either temporary total disability benefits or permanent total disability benefits under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana. Notwithstanding Smart's argument regarding the definition of "worker's job pool" that was set out in a prior section and then repealed, even though Smart could not return to his former work, he was physically able to perform other available work for which he was qualified and thus was not entitled to permanent total disability benefits under this section. The Workers' Compensation Court properly limited Smart's compensation to an award of up to $10,000, pursuant to 39-72-405. Smart v. Mont. Historical Soc'y, 277 M 89, 918 P2d 670, 53 St. Rep. 554 (1996).

Psychological Disorder as Occupational Disease: During McMahon's employment at The Anaconda Company's refinery in Great Falls, he was continuously exposed to moderate levels of sulphuric acid, organic arsenic, zinc, lead, copper, tellurium, asbestos, silver, dust, and other compounds. McMahon was diagnosed as having "chronic obstructive lung disease", "laryngeal irritation", "leukoplakia of the vocal cords", and "severe anxiety" and other psychological problems. His physical ailments resulted from the exposure to fumes and from a two-pack-a-day cigarette habit. He was not totally disabled as a result of his physical impairment, but the Occupational Disease Act includes inability to work in the normal labor market by reason of a psychological disorder stemming from an occupational disease. The case is remanded to determine whether the claimant is totally disabled due to his physical and psychological disorders. McMahon v. The Anaconda Co., 208 M 482, 678 P2d 661, 41 St. Rep. 480 (1984).

39-72-703. No compensation for partial disability.

Compiler's Comments

Severability Clause: Section 8, Ch. 190, L. 1971, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Common-Law Action Denied: Provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) are exclusive, and therefore defendant who was not eligible to receive compensation because of partial disability due to occupational disease may not pursue his common-law remedy against his employer. Dayton v. Boeing Co., 389 F. Supp. 433 (D.C. Mont. 1975).

39-72-704. Medical and hospital expenses.

Compiler's Comments

1995 Amendment: Chapter 243 at end substituted "payment of medical expenses under Title 39, chapter 71" for "without limitation as to length of time or dollar amount, reasonable medical services, hospitalization, medicines, and other treatment approved by the department". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 243, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

39-72-706. Aggravation.

Compiler's Comments

1989 Amendment: Made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Effective Date — Retroactive Applicability: Section 6, Ch. 162, L. 1989, provided: "(1) [This act] is effective July 1, 1989.

(2) [This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to all occupational disease claims pending before the division."

1981 Amendment: Added (2) providing for offset in proportional amount if worker receives social security disability benefits.

Case Notes

Causal Test for Compensability — Whether Conditions Aggravated Disease: Occupational aggravations of preexisting, nonoccupational diseases are compensable, as are occupational diseases that are aggravated by nonoccupational factors. The test for compensability is whether occupational factors significantly aggravated a preexisting condition, not whether occupational factors played the major or most significant role in causing the resulting disease. Polk v. Planet Ins. Co., 287 M 79, 951 P2d 1015, 54 St. Rep. 1508 (1997).

Reversal for Failure to Apply Appropriate Test for Causation: Of the eight doctors who examined an employee, four said that he had an occupational disease. Three of the other four doctors said that he had no occupational disease, but their testimony would support a finding that work conditions aggravated or contributed to his nonoccupational pulmonary condition. These three doctors believed that the work conditions had to be the major or primary factor causing the medical condition. The appropriate test was whether those work conditions aggravated the medical condition. The hearings examiner wrongly applied the same erroneous standard as these three doctors and concluded that no compensation was due. The Workers' Compensation Court erred in not overruling the hearings examiner on this point, and that court's decision affirming the hearings examiner's decision was reversed. Polk v. Planet Ins. Co., 287 M 79, 951 P2d 1015, 54 St. Rep. 1508 (1997).

Illness Neither Arising Out of nor Aggravated by Employment: Hughes submitted a claim for benefits for dermatitis. Hughes argued that the dermatitis was aggravated by the travel required by her job. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that the condition was a preexisting condition intrinsic to Hughes and that although the condition was aggravated by the travel requirement, it was noncompensable because the dermatitis was not job-related in itself and travel did not constitute an aggravating factor. Hughes v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 253 M 499, 833 P2d 1099, 49 St. Rep. 568 (1992).

Aggravation as Factor Necessitating Proportional Reduction in Compensation: Conflicting though substantial evidence showed that Nelson suffered from an occupational disease related to prior back problems that were aggravated by cumulative trauma from his lifting work at Semitool, Inc. Under this section, compensation for the disease was properly reducible by the proportional amount that the disease aggravated or accelerated the disability. Nelson v. Semitool, Inc., 252 M 286, 829 P2d 1, 49 St. Rep. 253 (1992).

Psychological Disorder as Occupational Disease: During McMahon's employment at The Anaconda Company's refinery in Great Falls, he was continuously exposed to moderate levels of sulphuric acid, organic arsenic, zinc, lead, copper, tellurium, asbestos, silver, dust, and other compounds. 40-1-101. Purposes.

Commissioners' Note

This sets forth the underlying purposes and objectives of the measure, as a foundation for construction of the Act. As indicated in the prefatory note, the enumeration of underlying purposes of the Act which are appropriate to legislation on marriage or divorce, respectively, may be utilized separately, if it is desired to place the marriage or divorce parts of the act in different divisions of the state statutes. On the use of such purpose provisions as guides to statutory construction, see Merrill, Uniformly Correct Construction of Uniform Laws, 49 Am.Bar Assoc.Jour. 545, 546 (1963) with citation of cases. None of the enumerations of purposes is intended to exclude, in construction and application, the consideration of other purposes spelled out in provisions of the Act.

Commissioners' Note

This is the standard Conference provision on uniformity and construction in aid thereof. This means that, once a provision has been judicially construed, courts of other states should follow that construction unless convinced by overwhelming demonstration that the pristine rendition unquestionably was in error. See Commercial Nat. Bank v. Canal-Louisiana Bank, 1916, 35 S.Ct. 194, 197, 239 U.S. 520, 528, 60 L.Ed. 417, 421.

40-1-103. Formalities.

Commissioners' Note

The effect of this section is to validate all marriages performed in the enacting state in accordance with its provisions. The provision does not necessarily invalidate marriages performed in the state which are not "licensed, solemnized, and registered" in accordance with this Act. For example, although an applicant for a marriage license may have given a false name to the clerk (see section 202(a)) [40-1-107(a)] the general policy favoring the validity of marriages would require that the marriage be held valid. This position is in accord with the case law. See Clark, Domestic Relations 41 (1968). Indeed, because Section 208 [40-1-402] narrowly circumscribes the traditional annulment remedy, formal errors committed during the licensing, solemnization, or registration process could not be raised under that section.

In accordance with established usage, marriage is required to be between a man and a woman. These terms refer to all persons authorized by the Act to marry, and are not confined to those who have attained the legal age of majority. Cochran v. State, 91 Ga. 763, 185 S.E. 16 (1893); Thomas v. Navas, 47 Haw. 605, 393 P.2d 645 (1964); State v. Burt, 75 N.H. 64, 71 A. 30, Ann.Cas.1912A, 232 (1908); Kenyon v. Peo., 26 N.Y. 203, 84 Am.Dec. 177 (1863) (per Baltron, J.); Blackburn v. State, 22 Ohio St. 102 (1871); Massa v. State, 37 Ohio App. 532, 175 N.E. 219 (1930); State v. Seiler, 106 Wis. 346, 82 N.W. 167 (1908). The general course of decision holds that not every deviation from formal prescribed procedures renders a marriage subject to successful attack. Substantial compliance, in the light of attendant circumstances and statutory policy, results in a sustainable marriage. Wallace v. Screws, 227 Ala. 183, 149 So. 226 (1923); Russell v. Taglialovore, 153 So. 44 (La.App.1934); Knapp v. Knapp, 149 Md. 263, 131 A. 329 (1925); Johnson v. Johnson, 214 Minn. 462, 8 N.W.2d 620 (1943); Hartman v. Valier & Spies Milling Co., 356 Mo. 424, 202 S.W.2d 1

(1947); Christensen v. Christensen, 144 Neb. 763, 14 N.W.2d 613 (1944); Ponina v. Leland, 454 P.2d 16 (Nev.1969); Portwood v. Portwood, 109 S.W.2d 515 (Tex.Civ.App.1937) (writ of error dismissed or refused). As to attacks on marriages which, though performed in accordance with the formal requirements of the Act, are either prohibited or are not permitted by the regulatory provisions of Section 202-207 [40-1-107, 40-1-202, 40-1-212, 40-1-213, 40-1-301, 40-1-321(1), 40-1-401], consult Section 208 [40-1-402], and comment thereto.

This section additionally emphasizes the legal concept of marriage as a civil contractual status, in distinction from any religious significance also attached thereto. In prescribing that a "marriage may be contracted, maintained, invalidated or dissolved only as provided by law," it does not preclude giving effect to the statutes and decisions of jurisdictions other than the enacting state.

Right of Consortium:

The mutual rights which arise in the husband and wife upon marriage, termed contractual or legal rights, included rights which are embraced within the term consortium. Dutton v. Under section 48-101, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), and 40-2-101 a woman by her marriage obtained a contractual right to consortium. Dutton v. Hightower & Lubrecht Constr. Co., 214 F. Supp. 298 (D.C. Mont. 1963), distinguished in Hall v. U.S., 266 F. Supp. 671 (D.C. Mont. 1967).

Commissioners' Note

This section serves two purposes. It insures that the Act's marriage regulations will not be used to invalidate marriages contracted before it takes effect. More importantly, it codifies the emerging conflicts principle that marriages valid by the laws of the state where contracted should be valid everywhere, even if the parties to the marriage would not have been permitted to marry in the state of their domicil[e]. See Restatement Second of Conflict of Laws, Section 283 (Proposed Official Draft (1969)). However, the section expressly fails to incorporate the "strong public policy" exception of the Restatement and hence may change the law in some jurisdictions. This section will preclude invalidation of many marriages which would have been invalidated in the past.

The Conference has withdrawn its approval of the Uniform Marriage Evasion Act. This section and the provisions of Section 207 [40-1-401] are inconsistent with that Act. A state adopting this Act should repeal the earlier one, if it exists therein.

Case Notes

Action to Reopen and Modify Dissolution Decree After Sixty Days — Not Timely: The husband and wife were married in 1945. In 1975, the wife vanished and her whereabouts is unknown. In 1976, the husband filed for dissolution. The wife was served by publication. The court entered its decree but made no order with respect to distribution of property. In 1983, the husband started a quiet title action to jointly held property. Three months later, the daughter commenced an action in which her mother was determined to be presumed dead. The daughter was named personal representative of the mother's estate. As personal representative, the daughter filed a motion in the dissolution action to reopen and modify the decree regarding property disposition. The District Court refused to reopen the decree. On appeal, the Supreme Court pointed out that this section makes the Rules of Civil Procedure applicable to all proceedings relating to marital dissolutions. Section 40-4-208 provides that the provisions of the decree relating to property disposition may not be revoked or modified by the court unless it finds conditions justifying the reopening of a judgment. The court held that even if the District Court failed in its mandatory duty to equitably apportion the property, the decree was final, and that under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the motion to reopen had to be brought within 60 days. Once the judgment was final, it was too late to raise issues of misrepresentation that could have been contested in the cause prior to entry of judgment. Commissioners' Note

The Act assumes that each state will adapt its existing marriage licensing statute so that it conforms to the substantive regulatory provisions of the Act. Such statutes vary substantially from state to state; and there is no special interest in obtaining uniformity as to the form utilized for marriage licenses and registrations. This section permits the state to forego legislative regulation by leaving the elaboration of forms to an appropriate state official. States unwilling to break completely with past legislative patterns nonetheless may want to review, modernize, and simplify legislation delineating license and registration forms. The inclusion of social security numbers will facilitate the enforcement of duties of support, if this later becomes necessary. The information regarding prior marriages and their termination similarly will prove helpful in a variety of situations making investigation appropriate. Information as to occupation may be useful to a determination of whether an underage marriage should be approved (Section 205) [40-1-213], or in passing on issues as to maintenance, support, property division, or child custody. The name of a party who has been married previously of course should be that which he or she bore during that marriage.

Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Contingent Termination — Request for Federal Exemptions: Section 104, Ch. 552, L. 1997, contained the following contingent termination provisions and order that the Department of Public Health and Human Services seek federal exemptions:

"(1) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date of the suspension if the federal government suspends federal payments to this state for this state's child support enforcement program and for this state's program relating to temporary assistance to needy families because of this state's failure to enact law as required by the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(2) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date that a final decision is rendered in federal court invalidating the child support provisions of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(3) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that one of the following provisions is no longer required by federal law because of repeal of or amendment to federal statutes that require that provision, the provision terminates on the date the certification takes effect:

(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];

(b) [section 11] [40-5-924];

(c) [sections 22 through 24] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, and 40-4-105];

(d) [section 93] [50-15-403];

(e) [section 95] [61-5-107];

(f) the bracketed provisions in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116].

(4) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that the federal government has granted this state an exemption from one of the following provisions, the provision terminates on the date the exemption takes effect:

(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];

(b) [section 11] [40-5-924];

(c) [sections 22 through 24] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, and 40-4-105];

(d) [section 93] [50-15-403, certification filed April 24, 1998];

(e) [section 95] [61-5-107];

(f) the bracketed provisions in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116].

(5) (a) The department of public health and human services shall do everything reasonably within its power to obtain, as soon as possible, federal government exemptions from the provisions listed in subsection (4).

(b) Because section 395(c) of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (PRWORA) allows a grace period for states to amend their constitutions in order to comply with PRWORA and because the Montana legislature believes that the section of PRWORA prohibiting a jury trial in a paternity proceeding violates Article II, section 26, of the

Montana constitution and is therefore rejected, the department of public health and human services shall seek a federal government exemption from the jury trial prohibition in PRWORA as the first exemption it seeks under subsection (5)(a). [This exemption was received on December 8, 1997.]

(6) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate July 1, 1999.

(7) If the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminates, the code commissioner is instructed to renumber subsections, adjust internal references, and correct grammar and arrangement."

Commissioners' Note

To avoid inconvenience when one of the parties to the prospective marriage is residing, temporarily or permanently, outside the state, the Act requires that only one of the parties appear personally before the clerk to provide the information required by this section. Both parties must have signed the application. It is not intended that the state should create a new office to handle marriage license applications; the title of the official presently charged with the responsibility should be substituted for the bracketed phrase "[marriage license]" clerk wherever it appears in this Part. Each state should insert in the brackets its marriage license fee.

If both parties to the marriage have reached the age of 18, neither parental nor judicial consent is required to obtain a license. A number of states have already adopted this position; and it is consistent with the trend in federal as well as state law to lower to 18 the age at which persons are permitted to vote and to make autonomous decisions about important matters affecting their lives. A party under 18 must have consent of both of his parents to the marriage, if both are living and have capacity to consent. If one of his parents is unavailable, or if either or both of his parents refuses for any reason to consent, judicial approval must be obtained pursuant to the provisions of Section 205 [40-1-213]. The Act requires judicial as well as parental consent to the marriage if one of the parties is below the age of 16. The provision respecting the issuance of a license for marriage to persons under the age of 16 is bracketed, to signify that states having a policy against marriage by persons so young may omit that provision, without doing violence to the concept of uniformity. The standard governing judicial approval is provided in Section 205 [40-1-213].

"Satisfactory proof" of age and of required consent includes such methods as may be prescribed under Section 202(b) [40-1-107(2)] in the license form, or any other proof that should satisfy a reasonable official exercising unarbitrary judgment. See United States v. Lee Huen, 118 Fed. 442, 457 (N.D.N.Y.1902).

The Conference concluded that the traditional forms of premarital medical examination, now required by the marriage laws of most of the states, need not be preserved. The premarital medical examination requirement serves either to inform the prospective spouses of health hazards that may have an impact on their marriage or to warn public health officials of the presence of venereal disease. For the latter purpose, the statutes have been proved to be both avoidable and highly inefficient. See Monahan, State Legislation and Control of Marriage, 2 Journal of Family Law 30, 34-35 (1962). Moreover, the cursory blood test which satisfies the requirements of most states provides very little service to the prospective spouses themselves. If a state decides to preserve its traditional premarital examination, a reference to its statute should be included in the cross-references to this section.

Attorney General's Opinions

Confidentiality of Marriage License Applications: Pursuant to 50-15-121 and 50-15-122, an application for a marriage license should be treated as a confidential record once the application is completed and filed with the Clerk of the District Court. Once a marriage is reported by the Department of Public Health and Human Services, the Department or the Clerk of the District Court may disclose to the public the record of marriage, consisting of the names of the bride and groom, the date and place of the marriage, the name of the officiant, and whether the ceremony was religious or civil. 48 A.G. Op. 10 (2000). See also 48 A.G. Op. 17 (2000), in which the Attorney General clarified 48 A.G. Op. 10 (2000), by holding that 48 A.G. Op. 10 (2000), applied to all marriage applications on file with a Clerk of the District Court, not to only applications filed after the date of that opinion. (See 2001 amendment.)

Chapter 546 in (1), in second sentence, substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of health and environmental sciences"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the most appropriate.

1989 Amendment: In (1), after "other person authorized by", substituted "rule of the department" for "laws of Montana" and after "a standard serological test" deleted "performed not more than 6 months before the date of issuance of the license".

1983 Amendment: Near middle of (1), substituted "Each female applicant, unless exempted on medical grounds by rule of the department of health and environmental sciences, shall file with the license issuer" for "and shall file with him"; increased the time period a test is valid from 20 days to 6 months; near end of (1), after "applicant" inserted "tested"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 154, L. 1983, provided: "A statement of intent is necessary for Senate Bill 180 because it adds to the laws relating to premarital serological tests rulemaking authority for the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] to specify allowable exceptions to the test requirement.

Present law defines a premarital serological test as including both a test for rubella immunity and a test for syphilis. Senate Bill 180 eliminates the syphilis test requirement and requires the rubella test only of female applicants for a marriage license, since the purpose of the rubella test is to alert the license applicants to lack of immunity to the disease which could result in damage to a fetus if rubella were contracted during pregnancy. Since the test is of value only to women capable of bearing children, there is no purpose in requiring the test of women incapable of doing so. Therefore, the rules would define those categories of women whose medical status precludes them, with reasonable medical certainty, from bearing children, including, but not limited to, women over childbearing age and those whose physicians certify they are incapable of bearing children."

1981 Amendment: Deleted "duly qualified" between "medical certificate from a" and "physician" in (1); deleted "an examination, including" before "a standard serological test" in (1); substituted "performed" for "made" following "standard serological test" in (1).

1983 Amendment: In (1), after "rubella immunity" deleted "and syphilis, as" and inserted "which is"; at end of (1), deleted "An unapproved laboratory shall be"; inserted (2) stating acceptable tests; at beginning of (2)(c) and (2)(d), inserted "a laboratory operated by"; in (2)(d), following "armed forces" deleted "laboratory shall be considered approved for the purposes of 40-1-203 through 40-1-209. Such laboratory"; at beginning of (3), inserted "The standard serological"; inserted (4)(b) relating to rulemaking authority for exemptions; and rearranged phrases and made other minor changes in phraseology.

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 154, L. 1983, provided: "A statement of intent is necessary for Senate Bill 180 because it adds to the laws relating to premarital serological tests rulemaking authority for the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] to specify allowable exceptions to the test requirement.

Present law defines a premarital serological test as including both a test for rubella immunity and a test for syphilis. Senate Bill 180 eliminates the syphilis test requirement and requires the rubella test only of female applicants for a marriage license, since the purpose of the rubella test is to alert the license applicants to lack of immunity to the disease which could result in damage to a fetus if rubella were contracted during pregnancy. Since the test is of value only to women capable of bearing children, there is no purpose in requiring the test of women incapable of doing so. Therefore, the rules would define those categories of women whose medical status precludes them, with reasonable medical certainty, from bearing children, including, but not limited to, women over childbearing age and those whose physicians certify they are incapable of bearing children."

40-1-212. Effective period of license.

Commissioners' Note
A relatively short premarital waiting period has been chosen. The information available suggests that longer waiting periods do not discourage potentially unstable marriages; and, at any event, are often waived by judges. The other major function served by a waiting period, to discourage or eliminate the "dare" and "gin" marriages, can be accomplished by the three day delay required by this section. [Montana has deleted this requirement.] See Ellsey, Marriage or Divorce?, 22 U.Kan.City L.Rev. 9, 17 (1953). Each state should insert in the brackets the name of the appropriate court. The 180 day limit on the effectiveness of license is for the convenience of engaged couples who need to plan for wedding dates long in advance. Obviously, this limit applies to all licenses.

40-1-213. Judicial approval.

Commissioners' Note
The court given responsibility for approving youthful marriages should be identified in the statute. Many states, continuing existing practice, will assign this to the juvenile court; in other states, the probate court is used and in still others the designated court is a family court or the trial court of general jurisdiction. In accordance with the decision taken in Section 203 [40-1-202], in respect to marriages of persons under 16 years of age, the provision concerning issuance to such persons has been bracketed.

The Act deliberately avoids detailing procedural rules to govern the judicial proceedings it establishes unless some special procedural device is essential to accomplish a substantive result sought by the Act. Thus, subsection (a) requires only that the court make a "reasonable effort" to notify the parents that an underaged party has sought judicial approval of a marriage license. (As to what constitutes reasonable effort to notify a person, see Merrill on Notice, Chapters 13, 14 and 19.) Since a party under the age of 16 years needs the consent of both his parents, if they are alive and have capacity to consent, as well as judicial approval, the court clerk will have to notify both parents when the judicial proceeding is commenced. But when a person aged 16 or 17 seeks judicial approval because one of his parents refuses to consent, the court can approve the application if the parent cannot be located or even if a recalcitrant parent avoids receiving formal notification.

The legal standard for judicial approval requires the judge to estimate the capacity of the underaged party to assume the responsibility of marriage and to determine whether the marriage would serve the best interest of that party. The judge obviously will want to obtain personal information about the other party to the prospective marriage as well; but the statute does not permit the judge to refuse his approval because he believes the marriage would not serve the best interest of the party over 18. The substantive standard necessarily is somewhat vague. Nonetheless, a number of considerations are implicit in the language and structure of the subsection: since judicial approval is a substitute for parental consent for 16 and 17 year old applicants, such applicants cannot be denied judicial approval solely because a parent or parents have refused to consent to the marriage; although the prospective wife's pregnancy is not alone a sufficient ground for judicial approval, neither does the subsection mean that the judge may withhold approval solely because the prospective wife (whether she or her prospective spouse is the applicant) is pregnant. Pregnancy is one, but only one, of the relevant considerations the judge will weigh in determining the applicant's best interest. Although the standard is the same whether the applicant is between the ages of 16 and 18 or is under the age of 16, the judge no doubt will investigate younger applicants more thoroughly. The provision indicates that the judge would be abusing his discretion if he were to decide that no 16 or 17 year old is mature enough to marry.

Montana Changes: Section 40-1-213 eliminates the "reasonable effort to notify" provision of section 205, Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act. The Montana version differs from the Uniform Act by not requiring a reasonable effort to notify the parents or guardian of an underaged party. While the Uniform Act provides for issuance of a license when both parents consent, the Montana act provides that the parent having the actual care, custody, and control of the underage applicant may consent to his or her marriage. The Montana act does not provide for the issuance of a marriage license and certificate to persons under age 16 when both parents consent, as does the Uniform Act. The Montana act adds provisions for marriage counseling.

40-1-301. Solemnization and registration.

Commissioners' Note

Subsection (a) [(1)] lists the officials permitted to solemnize marriage. The clause, "no individual acting alone", was designed to take account of the increasing tendency of marrying couples to want a personalized ceremony, without traditional church, religious or civil trappings. This provision authorizes one of the parties to such a marriage ceremony to complete the marriage certificate form and forward it to the appropriate official for registration. The phrase "Native Group", was added to take account of indigenous or other aboriginal cultural groups who do not consider themselves to be Nations or Tribes, such as some of the native groups found in Alaska and Hawaii.

Subsection (b) [(2)] authorizes the solemnization of marriage by proxy. During World War II, special proxy marriage statutes were enacted to facilitate marriages when one of the prospective spouses could not be present because of military responsibilities. Although it is not expected that proxy marriages will be common, there are many reasons why, in individual cases, couples may prefer such a ceremony. So long as the marriage license procedure has been followed and the official performing the ceremony has no reason to doubt the intentions of the absent prospective spouse, there is no reason why a proxy marriage should be prohibited. As to the form of proxy, any written document in the well-known form of a proxy such as is used in other serious transactions suffices. Compare State v. Anderson, 239 Ore. 200, 396 P.2d 558 (1964). The proceeding for an order authorizing proxy marriage is special, and may be informal, so long as the two conditions precedent to solemnization by proxy are demonstrated to the court's judicial satisfaction. If the official solemnizing the marriage is not satisfied that the absent party has consented to the marriage, he may refuse to perform the ceremony until the parties obtain a court order authorizing the marriage by proxy. (Section 205(b).) [See 40-1-213(2).]

Subsection (d) [(3)] states definitely what probably would be the meaning of the section without it. However, it probably is wise to remove any possibility of misconception.

Commissioners' Note

The Act eliminates most of the traditional marriage prohibitions and, consistent with the national trend, eliminates all affinity prohibitions. Only bigamous and incestuous marriages are prohibited. The Act follows the recent legislative trend toward permitting first cousin marriages, but uncle-niece and aunt-nephew marriages are prohibited unless such marriages are permitted by the established custom of aboriginal cultures. The phrase, "aboriginal cultures", is based on language employed in government documents. It is used to denote a cultural practice recognized by the original or earliest known inhabitants of a region (see Random House Dictionary's illustration: "aboriginal customs"). The intent is to save those special customs of Indian tribes, of Alaskan natives of various ethnic origins, and of Polynesians, which may not accord with the incest taboos of Western culture. Rhode Island, in considering this section, must take into account the effect of R.I. Gen. Laws (1956) §15-1-4, in order to determine whether the Uniform Act, in this respect, should be conformed to local policy. See In re May's Estate, 305 N.Y. 486, 114 N.E.2d 4 (1957). Marriages of brothers and sisters by adoption are prohibited because of the social interest in discouraging romantic attachments between such persons even if there is no genetic risk. The adoption provision is addressed directly to avoiding questions as to the impact of adoption on marriage law, since the adoption statutes in many states have not expressly resolved the issue. Cf. 6 & 7 Eliz., 2 c. 5 §13(3) (1958). The Act does not prohibit uncle-niece and aunt-nephew marriages where an adoption has created the relationship.

Subsection (b) [(2)] is intended to cure a defect arising under the laws of many states. For one reason or another, many persons, whose marriages are invalid because of prohibitions, neglect to contract formal marriages after the impediment is removed. If they reside in a state where common law marriage is recognized, there is no problem. But, in other jurisdictions, serious harm can result to legitimate interests of the surviving partner, of a sort which the legislators very likely would not have sanctioned had the possibility occurred to them. This subsection is intended to protect those interests.

Subsection (c) [(3)] enacts the general modern trend to treat the offspring of prohibited marriages as legitimate.

Montana Changes: Subsection (1)(b) of the Montana act eliminates the Uniform Act's restriction on the adoptive brothers and sisters and adds the first cousin relationship. The Montana act eliminates an exception to subsection (1)(c) of marriages permitted by established customs of aboriginal cultures.

Case Notes

Marriage Between First Cousins — Retroactive Decree: Earl Adams married Mildred Adams on September 13, 1977. They were first cousins. On November 20, 1977, Earl commenced an action for a declaration of invalidity of his marriage to Mildred. The Supreme Court found that a marriage between first cousins is void ab initio. The court found that the interests of justice would not be served by making the decree of invalidity not retroactive. Adams v. Adams, 185 M 63, 604 P2d 332 (1979), overruled, with regard to elements of collateral estoppel, in Dagel v. Great Falls, 250 M 224, 819 P2d 186, 48 St. Rep. 919 (1991).

Removal of Impediment — Common-Law Marriage — Fact Question: Ralph, the deceased, married Fern and then married Elsie while married to Fern. Fern died in 1973 and Ralph died in 1976. Ralph's will, executed in 1975, failed to mention Elsie or the two children he had by her. Elsie filed a petition for spouse's elective share. Summary judgment against Elsie was reversed and remanded because factual issues existed regarding whether Fern's death removed the impediment to Ralph's second marriage resulting in common-law marriage and whether the two children were issue of the decedent. In re Estate of Schanbacher, 182 M 176, 595 P2d 1171 (1979).

Prosecution for Bigamy: Although bigamous marriage may have been void from beginning for civil purposes, it nevertheless rendered subsequent marriage bigamous under 45-5-611 for criminal purposes, unless defendant could show that previous bigamous marriage was pronounced void, annulled, or dissolved by competent court as provided under 45-5-611. Crosby v. Ellsworth, 431 F2d 35 (9th Cir. 1970).

Voidness of Former Marriage: Under 45-5-611 voidness of former marriage must have been declared by a court of competent jurisdiction; such a determination of voidness could not be made under section 48-111, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), by the person involved to avoid being charged with the crime of bigamy under 45-5-611. St. v. Crosby, 148 M 307, 420 P2d 431 (1966).

Parties to Be Capable of Contracting — Second Contract: Proof of consent, cohabitation, and bearing of children, coupled with reputation as husband and wife, are insufficient when woman at the time of alleged common-law marriage had a husband living, because parties must be capable of contracting a marriage and she was incapable of entering into the second contract. Shepherd & Pierson Co. v. Baker, 81 M 185, 262 P 887 (1927). See also Welch v. All Persons, 78 M 370, 254 P 179 (1927).

Rebuttable Presumption That Prior Marriage Was Dissolved by Death or Divorce: Burden of proof is on one who attacks validity of second marriage, as law rebuttably presumes prior marriage was dissolved by death or divorce. Shepherd & Pierson Co. v. Baker, 81 M 185, 262 P 887 (1927).

Communication Regarding Divorce — Ignorance of Previous Marriage: Marriage contracted while man was corresponding with first wife relative to a divorce was void, even if woman was ignorant of previous marriage. In re Huston's Estate, 48 M 524, 139 P 458 (1914).

40-1-402. Declaration of invalidity.

Commissioners' Note

This section is designed to replace the traditional law of annulment of marriage. Some of the common grounds for annulment, such as fraud, have been abolished completely. Others have been restated to avoid unnecessary overlap with the dissolution sections.

This section states the circumstances under which the marriage may be terminated by a "declaration of invalidity," and establishes the "defenses" to each of the bases for a declaration. Subsection (b) [(2)] states a general policy against declarations of invalidity after the death of either party to the marriage, and subsection (e) [(5)] states a policy in favor of applying the dissolution provisions of Part III [Ch. 4] to the spouses' financial affairs following a declaration of invalidity.

Subsection (a) (1) [(1) (a)] states that declaration of invalidity may be obtained where there is proof that one of the parties to the marriage lacked capacity to consent to the marriage because of emotional illness or other mental disturbance or because of the incapacitating effect of alcohol or drugs. In the case of drugs and alcohol, the court is entitled to be somewhat skeptical about a claim of incapacity because of the protective features of the three day waiting period required by Section 204 [40-1-212]. Courts construing the "lacks capacity to consent" language of Subsection (a) (1) [(1) (a)] will undoubtedly continue to apply existing stringent standards by holding that a declaration of invalidity is appropriate only if the petitioner offers clear and definite evidence that one of the spouses lacked "sufficient mental capacity to understand intelligently the marriage contract...and the obligations it imposed upon him." Ertel v. Ertel, 40 N.E.2d 85, 313 Ill.App. 326 (1942)....

Subsection (a) (2) [(1) (b)] authorizes a declaration of invalidity if one of the spouses was unable to consummate the marriage by sexual intercourse, so long as the other spouse did not know of the condition at the time of the ceremony....Since the marriage cannot be invalidated after the death of either spouse, and since the spouses' finances can be adjusted as if a divorce had been granted under subsection (e) [(5)], there is no reason to compel the spouses to make a more rapid decision about continuing the marriage....the court would be warranted in assuming that the...period begins shortly after the ceremony rather than at some later date.

The phrase, "obtained knowledge of the described condition," in subsection (b) (1) and (2) [(2)(a)-(d)], is intended to mean awareness of the event, including information from a reliable source. In light of the public interest favoring promptness in bringing the petition, "knowledge" should be construed to include the possession of information sufficient to arouse inquiry concerning the existence of the condition. See Merrill, Notice §4 (1952).

Subsection (a) (3) [(1) (c)] provides that, if one of the spouses was under the age of 18 at the time of the ceremony and married without satisfying the consent requirements of Section 203 [40-1-202] or Section 205 [40-1-213], that party or his parent or guardian may obtain a declaration of invalidity. There are, however, two important limitations to this ground for a declaration of invalidity: (1) a party to the marriage who was over 18, or a party under the age of 18 who had fulfilled the requirements of Section 203 [40-1-202] or Section 205 [40-1-213], is not entitled to a declaration of invalidity because there is no reason to permit that party to invalidate a marriage he was authorized to contract; (2) the underaged party or his representative is not entitled to a declaration of invalidity when he reaches the age of 18 (or 17, if he had parental consent and lacked only approval from the appropriate judicial officers)....

The provisions of subsection (b) [(2)], stating that no declaration of invalidity may be "sought" after the death of either party is intended to prohibit such a collateral attack upon the marriage, in lieu of a declaration, in all proceedings, including probate proceedings. Moreover, the use of the word "sought" rather than "commenced" implies that the death of a party to the marriage at any time before the entry of final judgment would terminate a proceeding attacking the marriage. The underlying policy reasons for this principle are clear; the traditional "void marriage" doctrine often imposed unwise and unfair penalties on innocent "spouses" in stable family situations long after the questioned marriage had occurred. The penalties serve no effective deterrent purpose, but cause severe economic dislocations; a spouse may be denied workmen's compensation and social security benefits, or even a share in a spouse's estate, after the marriage has been terminated by the death of the other spouse, despite the fact that the surviving spouse had no reason to suspect the invalidity of the marriage.

Subsection (e) [(5)] authorizes the court to treat declarations of invalidity as what they have in fact become—substitutes for divorce. After considering all relevant circumstances, especially the impact of a retroactive decree upon the spouses, their children and other third parties, the court may make the decree not retroactive and may then apply the provisions of Part III [Chapter 4] in distributing the parties' property and in determining maintenance and child support. Even if the decree is made retroactive, the court may have to distribute property acquired by the spouses during the marriage. In the past this has been accomplished by analogy to partnership law. Cf. N.H.Rev.Stat.Ann. §458:19 (1955); Clark, Domestic Relations 136 (1968).

1995 Amendment: Chapter 109 inserted (6) providing that the Clerk of the Court give notice of the entry of the decree declaring the invalidity of a marriage; and made minor changes in style.

Montana Changes: The provisions of section 208, Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act, have not been adopted completely. This section varies from the Uniform Act as follows (comments by Herma Hill Kay in State Bar Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act Manual, pp. 7 and 8):

"The Montana version of this section departs from the UMDA chiefly by lengthening the periods of time within which the action for declarations of invalidity may be brought. Thus, Montana allows 1 year, rather then (sic) 90 days, for commencing the suit where a party lacked mental capacity due to infirmity or the use of alcohol, drugs or other incapacitating substances; two years for force or fraud; and four years for lack of capacity to consummate the marriage. (The UMDA periods are 90 days and one year, respectively.)

Montana also changes the youthful marriage provision of 208(a) (3) to conform to its prior requirement of judicial, not merely parental, consent. Montana chose alternative A, which requires declarations of invalidity in the case of prohibited marriages—bigamy and incest—to be commenced prior to the death of one of the parties. That is the alternative I prefer, so I'm glad you chose it.

The last section of this provision may require some explaination (sic). It gives the Court an alternative to the so-called "retroactive effect" of traditional annullment (sic) law. While the section is drafted to have retroactivity as the normal result it permits the Court in the interest of justice to invalidate the marriage as of the date of the decree. In such cases, the provisions of the act relating to property, maintenance, support and child custody will apply—thus obliterating the practical significance of the difference between annullment (sic) and divorce."

Case Notes

Action to Declare Marriage Invalid Commenced After Decedent's Death Void: On May 31, 1994, Joseph executed a will bequeathing his estate to his former wife, Mary. On June 14, 1994, while Joseph was in a nursing home, Joseph and Mary signed a declaration of marriage. On July 1, 1994, Joseph executed a will renouncing the marriage and bequeathing the estate to a sister. Mary initiated informal probate proceedings under the May 31 will, and the sister initiated informal probate proceedings under the July 1 will. The court concluded that the July 1 will was valid and declared the declaration of marriage void. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that it was a violation of the provisions of this section to commence legal action to declare the marriage invalid after Joseph's death. The lower court's judgment declaring the marriage invalid was vacated. In re Estate of Flynn, 274 M 199, 908 P2d 661, 52 St. Rep. 1190 (1995).

Immaturity of Parties — No Basis for Invalid Marriage: Wife appealed from District Court order granting husband's petition declaring the marriage invalid on the basis of immaturity of the parties. The Supreme Court stated that immaturity of the parties and misunderstandings between the parties do not establish the absence of capacity to consent to the marriage. Accordingly, the court found no basis to declare the marriage invalid for fraud. In re Marriage of Helsel, 223 M 85, 723 P2d 963, 43 St. Rep. 1551 (1986).

Reinstatement of Maintenance Not Automatic Upon Annulment of Second Marriage: Upon the divorce of the parties in 1980, the husband was ordered to pay maintenance to the wife until she remarried, which she did in 1982 and the former husband stopped maintenance payments. When the wife's second marriage was annulled 2 months later, the District Court ordered that the husband's maintenance obligation was automatically restored. The Supreme Court reversed on appeal, holding that the first husband was a "third party" within the language of 40-1-402(5) and that under the rationale of Ferguson v. Ferguson, 564 P2d 1380 (Utah, 1977), the obligation of maintenance should not be automatically reinstated and the District Court ordering the dissolution should have made findings necessary to order the retroactivity or nonretroactivity of the annulment. In re Marriage of Williams, 208 M 252, 677 P2d 585, 41 St. Rep. 356 (1984).

Marriage Between First Cousins — Retroactive Decree: Earl Adams married Mildred Adams on September 13, 1977. They were first cousins. On November 20, 1977, Earl commenced an action for a declaration of invalidity of his marriage to Mildred. The Supreme Court found that a marriage between first cousins is void ab initio. The court found that the interests of justice would not be served by making the decree of invalidity not retroactive. Adams v. Adams, 185 M 63, 604 P2d 332 (1979), overruled, with regard to elements of collateral estoppel, in Dagel v. Great Falls, 250 M 224, 819 P2d 186, 48 St. Rep. 919 (1991).

Necessity for Judicial Declaration: In view of statute providing that either party to void marriage could have it declared so judicially, former statute making it unlawful to marry again until 6 months after a judgment of divorce meant that marriage in violation thereof should be void only from time its nullity was declared so judicially. State ex rel. Angvall v. District Court, 151 M 483, 444 P2d 370 (1968).

Commissioners' Note

These alternatives [of invalidity or permitting common law marriage] are presented because the line of cleavage in the states, between those which consider the common law marriage to be a highly useful social institution and those which insist that all marriages de jure should be contracted in accordance with prescribed statutory formalities, proved impossible to erase. In view of this basic conflict as to policy, the Conference concluded that there was no hope of achieving uniformity of enactment, no matter which rule was adopted. Accordingly, the alternative versions of this section permit each state to make its decision in accordance with its own view as to policy, and to change its law at any time desired without destroying the effect of its adoption of the Uniform Act. Alternative A would preserve common law marriage in the form it has already taken by judicial decision. Alternative B would make clear that common law marriages contracted in the adopting state in the future are not to be recognized. The alternatives are a signal to the state legislatures that this issue should be re-examined even if the state is one of those which has already abolished common law marriage.

Case Notes

Common-Law Marriage — Not Necessary to Prove Exact Date Mutual Consent and Agreement to Enter Into Marriage Takes Place — District Court Overturned: Anne and Maurice lived together 9 years. After Maurice's death, his family challenged Anne's status as the deceased's spouse and sole heir of the estate. The District Court ruled that the evidence did not establish common-law marriage. Although mutual consent and agreement to enter into a marriage must take place at a set time, the party asserting that a common-law marriage exists does not need to prove the exact date that it occurred. However, the party must prove that the three elements for a common-law marriage all existed at one time. The Supreme Court held that a sign in front of the couple's home indicating that it was the Hunsakers' and a grandfather clock engraved with their initials, among other things, indicated that the couple held themselves out as a married couple. Although there was substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings of fact, the Supreme Court stated that its review of the record led it to believe that the court misapprehended the effect of the evidence and erred in ruling that the evidence presented did not establish that Anne was the common-law wife of Maurice. In re Estate of Hunsaker, 1998 MT 279, 291 M 412, 968 P2d 281, 55 St. Rep. 1144 (1998).

Consent to Common-Law Marriage Impossible Until Former Marriage Dissolved: Kathee and Fred cohabited from August 1981 until Fred died in May 1991. In May 1985, Kathee divorced her former husband, from whom she was separated when she began cohabiting with Fred. Kathee and Fred were unable to consent to a common-law marriage until the divorce but were able to consent after the divorce. In re Estate of Alcorn, 263 M 353, 868 P2d 629, 51 St. Rep. 87 (1994).

Substantial Evidence of Common-Law Marriage:

Kathee's ring, which she claimed was a wedding ring Fred gave her, had intertwining horseshoes, and the sidewalk of the ranch house in which they cohabited had intertwining horseshoes with the couple's names written beneath the horseshoes. The two owned racehorses and were racing enthusiasts. They had joint checking accounts and entertained together, and she cared for him when he was ill, which was often. Others testified that they acted as a married couple and were so thought of. Kathee testified that she and Fred had agreed to a common-law marriage. They cohabited for about 9 years, from the day they met until Fred died. The law did not require her to assume Fred's last name or to list him as her beneficiary on insurance, retirement, or health insurance forms, and she testified that she filed a separate income tax return because her accountants told her to and because she thought she had to since the marriage was not recorded. There was much evidence that they held themselves out as married. The lower court properly found that a common-law marriage existed, even though other evidence was to the contrary, such as Fred's wills in which he stated that he was single. In re Estate of Alcorn, 263 M 353, 868 P2d 629, 51 St. Rep. 87 (1994).

The District Court correctly deduced that Boyd and Peggy were married by mutual agreement and established the marriage by cohabitation and repute upon a showing of substantial evidence that the parties: (1) were competent to consent to marriage; (2) exchanged wedding rings, intending to be husband and wife and go through the actual ceremony at a later time; (3) lived together and held themselves out to be a married couple; (4) were presumed to be married by friends, family, coworkers, and the contractor who designed their home; and (5) issued invitations for the wedding of Peggy's daughter in the name "Mr. and Mrs. Boyd Mahaffey". It was further noted that Boyd introduced Peggy as "my wife" and insured her on his automobile liability policy as Peggy Mahaffey. In re Marriage of Mahaffey, 245 M 424, 801 P2d 1335, 47 St. Rep. 1172 (1990).

Elements of Common-Law Marriage Similar in Iowa: Because elements of common-law marriage were similar in Montana and Iowa in 1973, it was not improper for the District Court to find inception of common-law marriage in that year without finding that Iowa law was applicable. In reviewing Iowa law (since the parties were Iowa residents in 1973), the Supreme Court found ample evidence to justify a finding of common-law marriage. In re Marriage of Hurley, 222 M 287, 721 P2d 1279, 43 St. Rep. 1271 (1986).

Common-Law Marriage — Move From Washington to Montana After Cohabitation Begun — Montana Law Applicable: Michael Murnion died in a fall from a scaffolding in Colstrip. In order to settle Murnion's estate and determine heirs, a guardian for his minor daughter by a prior marriage brought an action to be declared sole heir. This was challenged by Pauline Imel, his alleged common-law wife. The issue was whether Pauline Imel was his common-law wife. The District Court found in favor of Pauline Imel, and the guardian appealed. Murnion and Imel had begun cohabiting in June 1981 in the state of Washington. Murnion was offered a job at Colstrip. The parties agreed to move to Colstrip as man and wife. Washington does not recognize common-law marriages. The guardian alleged that since the alleged marriage arose in Washington, Washington law should apply. In determining that Montana law was applicable, the Supreme Court relied on Restatement Second of Conflicts, section 6, which provides that the state with the most significant relationship to the spouses is the state whose law will determine the validity of a marriage. The court, relying on Montana statutory and case law, held that a marriage which may be invalid where contracted but which would be valid in Montana will be recognized as valid if it otherwise comports with Montana's marriage laws if, under choice of law rules, Montana law is to be applied. The court held that Murnion and Imel had fulfilled the requirements of cohabitation and public repute. The requirement of certainty of time was fulfilled when the parties moved to Montana. The marriage was valid, and Imel was Murnion's surviving spouse. In re the Estate of Murnion, 212 M 107, 686 P2d 893, 41 St. Rep. 1627 (1984).

Action for Formal Intestacy Proceedings by Claimed Common-Law Wife: In an action for formal intestacy proceedings by a claimed common-law wife, the Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's dismissal of appellant's petition. Here the facts used to support the existence of a common-law marriage are mere isolated instances in which appellant allegedly represented herself as decedent's wife. The facts fail to show any specific agreement between appellant and the decedent concerning marriage; they do not establish a continuous marital relationship and are in conflict with testimony presented by respondent. In re Estate of Peltomaa, 193 M 74, 630 P2d 215, 38 St. Rep. 943 (1981).

Removal of Impediment — Common-Law Marriage — Fact Question: Ralph, the deceased, married Fern and then married Elsie while married to Fern. Fern died in 1973 and Ralph died in 1976. Ralph's will, executed in 1975, failed to mention Elsie or the two children he had by her. Elsie filed a petition for spouse's elective share. Summary judgment against Elsie was reversed and remanded because factual issues existed regarding whether Fern's death removed the impediment to Ralph's second marriage resulting in common-law marriage and whether the two children were issue of the decedent. In re Estate of Schanbacher, 182 M 176, 595 P2d 1171 (1979).

Common-Law Marriage Not to Be Created Piecemeal: Where conflicting testimony is presented upon issue of existence of common-law marriage, it was proper for District Court to find common-law marriage did not exist to give supposed common-law wife priority to name an administrator, as common-law marriage must take place immediately and cannot be created piecemeal for benefit of parties when it was advantageous to be married and not asserted when it would be to one of the parties' disadvantage to be married. In re Estate of McClelland, 168 M 160, 541 P2d 780 (1975).

Cohabitation Alone Insufficient: Evidence of cohabitation alone was insufficient to justify findings of common-law marriage. In re Estate of Slavens, 162 M 123, 509 P2d 293 (1973).

Continued Use of Previous Name: Man and woman who exchanged wedding rings, mutually declared their marriage, and thereafter openly lived together, were legally married even though wife continued to use her previous name for business purposes. Estate of Swanson, 160 M 271, 502 P2d 33 (1972).

Evidence to Support Common-Law Marriage: Finding that claimant and deceased workman had been married at common law was not supported by evidence, instances of their cohabitation warranting conclusion of meretricious relations as easily as any other. Miller v. Townsend Lumber Co., 152 M 210, 448 P2d 148 (1968).

Evidence of Mutual Consent: Failure to treat statutory presumption that persons deporting themselves as husband and wife have entered into a lawful contract of marriage and to weigh against the presumption of other facts was error. Spradlin v. U.S., 262 F. Supp. 502 (D.C. Mont. 1967).

Rebuttable Presumption of Valid Marriage:

In view of statute recognizing consensual or common-law marriage, presumption that man and woman deporting themselves as husband and wife had entered into lawful contract of marriage was itself proof of marriage, and was overcome as matter of law only when in light of proved facts reasonable men could no longer find in accordance with the presumed fact. Presumption was not overcome by the fact that mother claimed a ceremonial marriage and produced no evidence of mutual consent to common-law marriage. Spradlin v. U.S., 262 F. Supp. 502 (D.C. Mont. 1967).

Cohabitation and reputation are merely evidence of the existence and reality of parties' consent; the fact children were born is insufficient to prove consent. The law will imply consent from conduct of the parties when facts permit and will presume a man and woman holding themselves out as husband and wife have entered into a lawful contract of marriage; however, such presumption disappears in the face of contrary facts. Welch v. All Persons, 85 M 114, 278 P 110 (1929).

Presumption of law is in favor of matrimony and against concubinage; however, the presumption is rebuttable and disappears where the parties did not contemplate a present assumption of the relation as distinguished from a future union because in the absence of a solemnization there must be a public assumption of the relation. There is no common-law marriage in Montana where such public assumption was absent. St. v. Newman, 66 M 180, 213 P 805 (1923).

Reputation Needed to Establish Common-Law Marriage to Be Complete and Sincere, Not Partial: Where parties kept alleged relationship of husband and wife secret at their home, among people of their community, and among their relatives, only holding themselves out as husband and wife in hotels, motels, and cabins distant from their residence, they did not establish requisite reputation of being husband and wife necessary to establish a common-law marriage. Miller v. Sutherland, 131 M 175, 309 P2d 322 (1957), followed in In re Estate of Vandenhook, 259 M 201, 855 P2d 518, 50 St. Rep. 758 (1993).

Burden of Proof as to Validity of Common-Law Marriage Where Relationship Initially Illicit: Burden rests upon one asserting validity of a common-law marriage to establish that initial illicit relationship did not continue but was changed to a lawful marriage. Stevens v. Woodmen of the World, 105 M 121, 71 P2d 898 (1937).

Elements of Common-Law Marriage: In order to establish a valid common-law marriage there must be mutual consent of the parties able to consent and competent to enter into a ceremonial marriage and an assumption of such relationship by consent and agreement as of a time certain, followed by cohabitation and repute. Stevens v. Woodmen of the World, 105 M 121, 71 P2d 898 (1937). See also Elliott v. Indus. Accident Bd., 101 M 246, 53 P2d 451 (1936), In re Estate of Vandenhook, 259 M 201, 855 P2d 518, 50 St. Rep. 758 (1993), and In re Estate of Alcorn, 263 M 353, 868 P2d 629, 51 St. Rep. 87 (1994).

Parties to Be Capable of Contracting — Second Contract: Proof of consent, cohabitation, and bearing of children, coupled with reputation as husband and wife, are insufficient when woman at the time of alleged common-law marriage had a husband living, because parties must be capable of contracting a marriage and she was incapable of entering into the second contract. Shepherd & Pierson Co. v. Baker, 81 M 185, 262 P 887 (1927).

Rebuttable Presumption That Prior Marriage Was Dissolved by Death or Divorce: Burden of proof is on one who attacks validity of second marriage, as law rebuttably presumes prior marriage was dissolved by death or divorce. Shepherd & Pierson Co. v. Baker, 81 M 185, 262 P 887 (1927).

Requirement of Solemnization: Clandestine cohabitation in the face of insufficient evidence to show "public assumption of marital relation" does not constitute a valid marriage in absence of a solemnization. In re Huston's Estate, 48 M 524, 139 P 458 (1914).

Cohabitation as Indispensable Element: Cohabitation is an indispensable element to the existence of a common-law marriage or of the "mutual and public assumption of the marriage relation". O'Malley v. O'Malley, 46 M 549, 129 P 501 (1913).

State Party to Marriage: State makes itself a party to every marriage by requiring the contract to be entered into before officers designated by itself or by mutual and public assumption by the parties of the marriage relation. Franklin v. Franklin, 40 M 348, 106 P 353 (1910).

40-1-404. Putative spouse.

Commissioners' Note

The best known method used by the courts to protect the "marital" interests of persons who have established a stable family relationship which cannot be recognized as a marriage (a marriage which is labelled "void" under current law, perhaps, or parties who have cohabited as husband and wife without marrying ceremonially) is the common law marriage doctrine. See Section 211 [40-1-403]. But a variety of other equitable doctrines have also been utilized—one or another can be found in almost every state—to preserve, if not the status, the financial incidents of valid marriage in such circumstances. See e.g., Weyrauch, Informal and Formal Marriage—An Appraisal of Trends in Family Organization, 28 U.Chi.L.Rev. 88 (1960); Danes v. Smith, 104 A.2d 455, 30 N.J.Super. 292 (1954). In the absence of doctrines such as these, many persons who in good faith consider themselves married, and who have established and maintained over a long period a stable family relationship, would be denied both the economic and status incidents of marriage. This section makes it clear that the Act was not intended to abolish such doctrines. In addition, it codifies one of the equitable doctrines which has proved, in California and other experience, to be especially useful. For illustrations of the application of the putative spouse doctrine in California, see Comment, Rights of the Putative and Meretricious Spouse in California, 50 Calif.L.Rev. 866 (1962). Cases from other jurisdictions illustrative of the putative spouse concept include Walker v. Walker, 47 N.W.2d 633, 330 Mich. 332, 31 A.L.R.2d 1250 (1951) and annotation; Chrismond v. Chrismond, 52 So.2d 624, 211 Miss. 746 (1951); Barone v. Barone, 294 P.2d 609, 207 Ore. 26 (1956); Brandt v. Brandt, 333 P.2d 887, 215 Ore. 423 (1958); Buck v. Buck, 427 P.2d 954, 19 Utah 2d 161 (1967).

It is possible for a person to have more than one putative spouse at the same time, since good faith is the test. In addition, a putative spouse and a legal spouse may be able to claim from a single estate or from other funds legally available to a spouse. A common situation of the latter type might involve a bigamous marriage in which the second spouse was never married or had been divorced. In such cases, the court is instructed to apportion property and the other financial incidents of marriage between the legal and the putative spouse, or among putative spouses. A fair and efficient apportionment standard is likely to be the length of time each spouse cohabited with the common partner. For illustrative cases, see Estate of Ricci, 201 Cal.App.2d 146; 19 Cal.Rptr. 739 (1962); Sousa v. Freitas, 10 Cal.App.3d 660; 89 Cal.Rptr. 485 (1970). Because the codification of any particular equitable doctrine designed to protect the financial interests of innocent parties is bound to be controversial, this section has been bracketed. Passage of the Act without this section should not, therefore, be taken to imply a legislative judgment adverse to continuing development of this or similar doctrines by the case law.

The adoption of this section is most desirable (1) to provide legislative foundation for achieving the obviously just results provided by the putative spouse doctrine; (2) to spell out specifically the rights conferred upon a putative spouse; (3) to state specifically when the status of putative spouse terminates; (4) to eliminate any distinction which some courts might attempt between prohibited marriages and those which merely are subject to declaration of invalidity; (5) to provide specifically for equitable apportionment, on the basis of justice and the special circumstances of each case, either where there are a legal spouse and a putative spouse, or where there are several putative spouses. Some judges have expressed difficulties in this regard, but the standard is a workable one which the courts are accustomed to apply in many fields, and there is a body of available authority to afford guidance, as indicated previously in this Comment.

CHAPTER 2
HUSBAND AND WIFE

Chapter Case Notes

Interspousal Tort Immunity Abolished: The defense of interspousal tort immunity is abolished, overruling previous decisions to the contrary. The historical reasons for retention of immunity, i.e., unity of husband and wife as one person, family harmony, and the possibility of fraud and collusion, are no longer valid. Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986).

Contractual Obligations Not Extinguished: Montana adheres to the majority view that Montana's "Married Women's Act" (Title 40, ch. 2, parts 1 through 3) abrogated the rule that contractual obligations are extinguished by marriage. In re Marriage of Reilly, 176 M 239, 577 P2d 840 (1978).

Action for Loss of Consortium: A wife can maintain an action for loss of consortium when such loss is the result of negligent injury to her husband. Dutton v. Hightower & Lubrecht Constr. Co., 214 F. Supp. 298 (D.C. Mont. 1963), distinguished in Hall v. U.S., 266 F. Supp. 671 (D.C. Mont. 1967); Duffy v. Lipsman-Fulkerson & Co., 200 F. Supp. 71 (D.C. Mont. 1961).

Purpose of Married Women's Act: The primary purpose of the "Married Women's Act" (Title 40, ch. 2, parts 1 through 3) was to free the wife from certain disabilities imposed upon her by the common law, under which her legal personalty and property were merged in the husband, i.e., to place the wife upon an equal footing with the husband as to the ownership, control, and enjoyment of property as to contractual rights in general, with an equal right to resort to the courts, nothing appearing therein to disturb the marital unity otherwise. Conley v. Conley, 92 M 425, 15 P2d 922 (1932), overruled in Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986).

Purchase at Judicial Sale: A wife may purchase her husband's real estate at execution or foreclosure sale and hold it as her separate property, if the transaction is bona fide and payment is made with her own money. Marcellus v. Wright, 51 M 599, 154 P 714 (1916).

Joint Interests, Obligations, and Powers

Part Case Notes

Marriage Dissolution Brought by Tribal Member Against Non-Indian Spouse — Jurisdiction to Apportion Indian Trust Land: Wife who was a member of the Blackfeet Tribe sought a marriage dissolution in state court from her husband who was a non-Indian. The District Court granted the dissolution but held it did not have jurisdiction to apportion the parties' marital estate, which consisted of about 4,000 acres of Indian trust land on the Blackfeet Reservation, and granted wife's motion to dismiss. On appeal, husband contended that the state court had jurisdiction, relying on a provision in the Blackfeet Tribal Law and Order Code that all divorces must be consummated in accordance with Montana law. However, that provision did not cede jurisdiction to the state but merely governed the tribal court's choice of law. While the state has an interest in ensuring the existence of a forum in which marital property within its borders may be apportioned upon a dissolution, that interest is met by the availability of an alternative forum in the Blackfeet Tribal Court. The state's interest in the property and proceedings is inconsequential compared with the federal and tribal interests at stake. Therefore, the District Court did not err in concluding that it lacked jurisdiction to adjudicate the disposition of the Indian trust land that was the parties' only significant marital asset. In re Marriage of Wellman, 258 M 131, 852 P2d 559, 50 St. Rep. 462 (1993), following White Mtn. Apache v. Bracker, 448 US 136, 65 L Ed 2d 665, 100 S Ct 2578 (1980), and N. Mex. v. Mescalero Apache Tribe, 462 US 324, 76 L Ed 2d 611, 103 S Ct 2375 (1983), distinguishing Sheppard v. Sheppard, 655 P2d 895 (Idaho 1982), and followed in Smith v. McKeon, 284 M 528, 946 P2d 117, 54 St. Rep. 990 (1997), as to a trial court's lack of authority to order an appraisal of Indian trust land.

Exclusive Jurisdiction of Crow Tribal Court: The Crow Tribal Court exercises exclusive jurisdiction over divorce actions between tribal members living on the reservation by virtue of the duly enacted Crow Tribal Code. Thus, prohibition is a proper remedy to dismiss a divorce action in state District Court filed by a member residing on the reservation. State ex rel. Stewart v. District Court, 187 M 209, 609 P2d 290 (1980). See also In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 M 399, 956 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 147 (1998).

40-2-101. Mutual obligations of husband and wife.

Case Notes

Loss of Consortium Claim Independent as to Damages, but Derivative as to Liability: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train. His spouse and children sought damages for loss of consortium. The District Court held that the loss of consortium claims should be reduced by the percentage of negligence attributed to Mickelson. When a plaintiff's contributory negligence is determined to be not greater than the tortfeasor's negligence, then damages for loss of consortium, being independent and not contingent upon the rights or liabilities of a parent or spouse, may not be reduced by the other spouse's negligence. However, because the language in 27-1-702 provides that any damages allowed must be diminished in the proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the person recovering, a loss of consortium claim is considered independent as to damages and derivative as to liability. In other words, a defendant must be more liable for a plaintiff's injuries than the plaintiff before there can be any recovery, whether it is on the plaintiff's personal injury claim or on a loss of consortium claim stemming from those injuries. For example, if plaintiff is determined to be 50% or less contributorily negligent for plaintiff's injuries, then a spouse or child could recover 100% of a loss of consortium claim; however, if plaintiff is determined to be 51% or more contributorily negligent for plaintiff's injuries, then a spouse or child would recover nothing on a loss of consortium claim. Therefore, the Supreme Court directed that, on retrial, any contributory negligence attributable to Mickelson could not be imputed to the spouse and children to reduce a loss of consortium award, but if Mickelson was found more liable than MRL, there could be no recovery for loss of consortium. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000), following Herold v. Burlington N., Inc., 761 F2d 1241 (8th Cir. 1985).

No Evidence Concerning Injury to Marital Relationship — Failure to Prove Claim for Loss of Consortium: Husband was rendered a quadriplegic in an automobile accident, and wife sued for her loss of consortium. Assessing any damages for wife's loss requires some proof of the established marital lifestyle of the couple prior to the accident. A claim for loss of consortium is based on the husband and wife contracting for obligations of mutual respect, fidelity, and support; therefore, the claimant must offer proof that these mutual obligations were fulfilled prior to the other spouse's injury and that, due to the injury, fulfillment of these obligations has been impaired. In this case, no evidence was offered to establish the nature of the marital relationship enjoyed by the parties prior to the accident and the jury was entitled to conclude that wife had not met her burden of proving damages on her claim. Gunning v. Gen. Motors Corp., 239 M 104, 779 P2d 64, 46 St. Rep. 1546 (1989).

Action for Consortium Distinct from Claim of Injured Spouse: In a personal injury action by wife for physical injuries received in car accident and by husband for loss of consortium, the court held that husband's cause is separate and distinct from claim of injured wife. The basis for a consortium claim lies in this statute because consortium includes a legal right to the aid, protection, affection, and society of the other spouse. Bain v. Gleason, 223 M 442, 726 P2d 1153, 43 St. Rep. 1897 (1986).

Consortium Claim Subject to "Each Person" Limit of Liability Coverage: Under mandatory motor vehicle insurance coverage statutes, husband's cause of action for consortium and wife's cause of action for bodily injuries are subject to the "one person limitation" set forth in 61-6-103 as referred to in 61-6-301. The policy in question does not extend coverage beyond the statutory requirements. Therefore, husband is not entitled to recover from the insurance company an amount over the limit specified for one person for consequential damages to himself resulting from injuries to his wife, such as loss of her services or consortium. Bain v. Gleason, 223 M 442, 726 P2d 1153, 43 St. Rep. 1897 (1986), distinguished in Treichel v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 280 M 443, 930 P2d 661, 54 St. Rep. 1 (1997).

40-2-102. Duties of husband and wife as to support.

Case Notes

Divorce Decree Without Support Provisions: The fact that a divorce decree is silent as to support does not relieve the husband of his legal duty to support his family if he is able, particularly where repeated attempts are made to get support. Murphy v. Murphy, 134 M 594, 335 P2d 296 (1959).

Interest of Wife in Estate: The services which a wife owes her husband do not create for her a joint interest in his estate. In re Marsh's Estate, 125 M 239, 234 P2d 459 (1951).

Ability of Husband to Support: The fact that person has no property does not relieve him of his obligation to support his wife and children when it is shown that he has the ability to provide such support by his labor. State ex rel. Houtchens v. District Court, 122 M 76, 199 P2d 272 (1948).

Husband Liable for Necessities:

When the husband fails or refuses to furnish the wife the things necessary for her support, she may, while living with him or while living separate from him because of his misconduct, bind him by her contracts with third persons for such necessaries; under such circumstances the law creates an implied agency on the part of the wife, his consent being implied by reason of the marital relationship. McQuay v. McQuay, 86 M 535, 284 P 532 (1930).

This section makes it the duty of the husband to support his wife out of his property or labor, and by the provisions of 40-2-103, if he neglects to do so (unless the wife has abandoned him without justification), any person may in good faith supply her with articles necessary for her support and recover value therefor from him. State ex rel. La Point v. District Court, 69 M 29, 220 P 88 (1923).

Presumption of Duty to Support: The law imposes upon the husband the legal duty of supporting his wife out of his property or by his labor, if he is able to do so, and a mere showing that the parties are married may raise a presumption that the wife is legally entitled to be supported by the husband. Goodwin v. Elm Orlu Min. Co., 83 M 152, 269 P 403 (1928); State ex rel. Robison v. District Court, 56 M 592, 186 P 335 (1919).

Action Against Third Persons for Wrongful Death: Although the wife and children have been deprived of this support by the death of the father, caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, they do not have a cause of action under 27-1-513 against such other person unless the father, if death had not ensued, could have maintained an action in his own behalf. Melville v. Butte-Balaklava Copper Co., 47 M 1, 130 P 441 (1913).

Case Notes

Attachment: Contracts made by the wife for necessaries under authority of this section, where the husband fails or refuses to furnish them, are his contracts and the obligations arising thereunder are his obligations; the agency referred to above is statutory but the husband's obligations are contractual. Therefore, attachment may issue in an action to recover for necessaries furnished the wife as upon contracts "express or implied, for the direct payment of money" within the meaning of 27-18-101. McQuay v. McQuay, 86 M 535, 284 P 532 (1930).

Attorney Fees in Divorce Action Not "Necessary": An action for attorney fees in a divorce action is not maintainable under this section, impliedly conferring authority upon the wife to charge her husband, as his agent, for the value of articles necessary for her support, a divorce not being a "necessary" as that term is employed in this section. Grimstad v. Johnson, 61 M 18, 201 P 314 (1921).

Case Notes

Grounds for Abandonment: A mere showing that parties are married may raise a presumption that the wife is legally entitled to be supported by the husband, but where she was and had been for 4 years living apart from him and had refused to return to the home provided by him because he declined to also receive as a member of the household her son by a former marriage who was capable of caring for himself, which the husband was not required to do under 40-6-217, her refusal was unreasonable and constituted desertion on her part, and under this section he was not liable for her support. Case Notes

Death of Spouse Before Final Disposition — Distribution as Severance of Joint Tenancy: Wife contended that: (1) because husband died before final resolution of property division, her right of survivorship remained; and (2) the District Court erred in refusing to recognize that the property was held in joint tenancy and should therefore have given the wife the property upon husband's death. On review, the Supreme Court found that a lower court order distributing the property in question to the husband effectively severed the joint tenancy. In re Marriage of Butler, 232 M 419, 756 P2d 1159, 45 St. Rep. 1160 (1988).

Proceeds From Sale of Real Property: In absence of agreement to the contrary, proceeds of a sale of joint tenancy property pursuant to a contract are held in joint tenancy. In re Estate of Rickner, 164 M 51, 518 P2d 1160 (1974).

40-2-106. Liability for acts or debts of spouse.

Case Notes

Loss of Consortium Claim Independent as to Damages, but Derivative as to Liability: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train. His spouse and children sought damages for loss of consortium. The District Court held that the loss of consortium claims should be reduced by the percentage of negligence attributed to Mickelson. When a plaintiff's contributory negligence is determined to be not greater than the tortfeasor's negligence, then damages for loss of consortium, being independent and not contingent upon the rights or liabilities of a parent or spouse, may not be reduced by the other spouse's negligence. However, because the language in 27-1-702 provides that any damages allowed must be diminished in the proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the person recovering, a loss of consortium claim is considered independent as to damages and derivative as to liability. In other words, a defendant must be more liable for a plaintiff's injuries than the plaintiff before there can be any recovery, whether it is on the plaintiff's personal injury claim or on a loss of consortium claim stemming from those injuries. For example, if plaintiff is determined to be 50% or less contributorily negligent for plaintiff's injuries, then a spouse or child could recover 100% of a loss of consortium claim; however, if plaintiff is determined to be 51% or more contributorily negligent for plaintiff's injuries, then a spouse or child would recover nothing on a loss of consortium claim. Therefore, the Supreme Court directed that, on retrial, any contributory negligence attributable to Mickelson could not be imputed to the spouse and children to reduce a loss of consortium award, but if Mickelson was found more liable than MRL, there could be no recovery for loss of consortium. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000), following Herold v. Burlington N., Inc., 761 F2d 1241 (8th Cir. 1985).

Legal Services Provided in Obtaining Protective Order Considered Necessary Articles: The wife retained the services of an attorney to obtain an order of protection against her husband and to petition for dissolution of marriage. The protective order was granted. The wife died shortly thereafter, and dissolution proceedings were abated. The attorney sued the husband for attorney fees. Citing In re Marriage of White, 218 M 343, 708 P2d 267 (1985), the District Court dismissed the action on grounds that there was no set of facts under which the attorney would be entitled to relief. In general, a person is not liable for debts contracted by one's spouse. One exception is for "necessary articles" for the husband, wife, or children. Distinguishing White, the Supreme Court reversed, citing McAlear v. Unemployment Comp. Comm'n, 145 M 458, 405 P2d 219 (1965), for the proposition that attorney services are a necessary article when provided to a wife to obtain orders of protection from an abusive spouse, thereby obligating the spouse to pay attorney fees so incurred. Missoula YWCA v. Bard, 1999 MT 177, 295 M 260, 983 P2d 933, 56 St. Rep. 692 (1999).

No State Jurisdiction to Collect Medical Debts of Non-Indian Spouse From Tribal Member: A tribal member wife was sued by non-Indian creditors in state District Court to collect debts for medical bills incurred by her nonmember husband both on and off the Flathead Reservation. Citing the holdings in Williams v. Lee, 358 US 217 (1959), and Kennerly v. District Court, 400 US 423 (1971), and applying the three-part test articulated in State ex rel. Iron Bear v. District Court, 162 M 335, 512 P2d 1292 (1973), for determining whether the state courts of Montana have jurisdiction over transactions occurring on a reservation, the Supreme Court held that the state has no jurisdiction over the action against the wife to collect debts incurred by her non-Indian spouse at an off-reservation clinic. This section does not apply to members of the tribes residing within the exterior boundaries of the reservation or independently confer state jurisdiction. The wife did not engage in significant off-reservation contacts that would subject her to the state court's jurisdiction for collection of the off-reservation debts. Balyeat Law, PC v. Pettit, 1998 MT 252, 291 M 196, 967 P2d 398, 55 St. Rep. 1038 (1998).

Effect of Dissolution Proceedings on Spousal Authority to Conduct Independent Financial Transactions: The statutory authority of spouses to conduct independent financial transactions is not controlling on the distribution of marital property in dissolution proceedings. In re Marriage of Dalley, 232 M 235, 756 P2d 1131, 45 St. Rep. 1017 (1988).

Defense Against Child Abuse Charges — Attorney Fee: Attorney fee incurred by one spouse to defend himself against child abuse charges is not a "necessary" within the meaning of this section. Therefore, when only the husband contracted with the attorney, the attorney fee is the husband's sole responsibility; the wife is not liable for this debt, although it was incurred during the couple's marriage. In re Marriage of White, 218 M 343, 708 P2d 267, 42 St. Rep. 1634 (1985), distinguished in Missoula YWCA v. Bard, 1999 MT 177, 295 M 260, 983 P2d 933, 56 St. Rep. 692 (1999).

Divorce Court Powers: A court which severs the marriage ties by granting a divorce possesses the necessary power to compel the ex-husband to support his minor children. State ex rel. Lay v. District Court, 122 M 61, 198 P2d 761 (1948).

Joinder of Spouses in Action: Joining of husband and wife by collection agency in all actions where a claim against either was involved, although the facts in nowise justified the practice under this section or the necessity of life theory, at least amounted to sharp practice. State ex rel. Freebourn v. Merchants' Credit Serv., Inc., 104 M 76, 66 P2d 337 (1937).

College Education of Children: Application of wife for modification of divorce decree to compel defendant father to contribute $35 per month toward minor son's expenses in attending college was properly granted, since this section makes education of the child the responsibility of both parents and extends to college education of a child. Refer v. Refer, 102 M 121, 56 P2d 750 (1936).

Husband Liable for Necessities: When the husband fails or refuses to furnish the wife the things necessary for her support, she may, while living with him or while living separate from him because of his misconduct, bind him by her contracts with third persons for such necessaries; under such circumstances the law creates an implied agency on the part of the wife, his consent being implied by reason of the marital relationship. Case Notes

Interspousal Tort Immunity Abolished: The defense of interspousal tort immunity is abolished, overruling previous decisions to the contrary. The historical reasons for retention of immunity, i.e., unity of husband and wife as one person, family harmony, and the possibility of fraud and collusion, are no longer valid. Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986).

Interspousal Immunity Maintained: Common-law doctrine of interspousal tort immunity is unchanged by procedural statute creating right of married person to sue or be sued as though single. Statute creates no new right allowing tort suits between spouses. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Leary, 168 M 482, 544 P2d 444 (1975), overruled in Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986). See 40-2-109.

Action for Loss of Consortium: A wife can maintain an action for loss of consortium when such loss is the result of negligent injury to her husband. Dutton v. Hightower & Lubrecht Constr. Co., 214 F. Supp. 298 (D.C. Mont. 1963), distinguished in Hall v. U.S., 266 F. Supp. 671 (D.C. Mont. 1967); Duffy v. Lipsman-Fulkerson & Co., 200 F. Supp. 71 (D.C. Mont. 1961).

Removal of Common-Law Disability: This section and section 36-110, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), are procedural and create no new rights, but only remove the common-law disability of married women to enforce their rights otherwise created and existing. Dutton v. Hightower & Lubrecht Constr. Co., 214 F. Supp. 298 (D.C. Mont. 1963).

Actions Against Husband: Granting the right to a married woman to prosecute actions for injury to person, property, etc., in her own name, when read in connection with other sections of the "Married Women's Act" (Title 40, ch. 2, parts 1 through 3) did not confer upon the wife the right to sue her husband for a personal tort, a right denied her under the common law (see 40-2-109). Kelly v. Williams, 94 M 19, 21 P2d 58 (1933), overruled in Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986); Conley v. Interspousal Tort Immunity: Begins with concept of legal identity of husband and wife as one which created legal substantive and procedural disabilities for either spouse to bring a tort action against the other, traces removal of most disabilities, and concludes with abolishment of immunity to reflect social change and to ensure continued role of common law as an effective vehicle for administration of justice. Case Notes

Certified Question — Interspousal Tort Immunity Abolished: In an original proceeding for declaratory judgment on two certified questions from U.S. District Court, the Supreme Court held that it abolished the defense of interspousal tort immunity in Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986), because historical reasons for that immunity were no longer valid. Therefore, that doctrine did not bar claim of wife-passenger against her husband-driver for negligence in operation of motor vehicle. Noone v. Fink, 222 M 273, 721 P2d 1275, 43 St. Rep. 1258 (1986).

Interspousal Tort Immunity Abolished: The defense of interspousal tort immunity is abolished, overruling previous decisions to the contrary. The historical reasons for retention of immunity, i.e., unity of husband and wife as one person, family harmony, and the possibility of fraud and collusion, are no longer valid. Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986).

No Interspousal Immunity for Property Damages: There is no interspousal tort immunity for property damage claims by one spouse against the other. Norick v. Dove Constr., 204 M 57, 662 P2d 1318, 40 St. Rep. 660 (1983).

Military Retirement Benefits: The Supreme Court held that military retirement benefit pay is analogous to any pension fund and constitutes a marital asset. Pursuant to 40-2-202, which requires apportionment of all property and assets of parties to a dissolution, military retirement pay must be included for purposes of establishing the marital estate. Although the marriage spanned only three-fourths of husband's military service, an equal division of the retirement benefits evidenced no abuse of discretion by the trial judge. Kecskes v. Kecskes, 210 M 479, 683 P2d 478, 41 St. Rep. 1170 (1984).

Conveyance of Individual Property Before Petition Filed: In the fall of 1977, after suffering a stroke, the husband initiated real property conveyances to his children to ensure their future security in the event of his death. On June 2, 1978, the wife left the family home, the husband being unaware of her intention to divorce him. On June 5, 1978, the conveyances were completed. On June 16, 1978, the wife filed a petition for dissolution. Because this section allows a married person to transfer his property to another without consent of his spouse and because there was substantial evidence that the conveyances were not fraudulent, the property was not part of the marital estate under 40-4-202. Recording as Constructive Notice: Evidence in an action for the conversion of restaurant fixtures claimed by the wife of a judgment debtor as her separate property and seized by the attaching creditor with constructive notice of plaintiff's claim by reason of an inventory filed by her under 40-2-204, over plaintiff's protests and objections, thus destroying a prosperous business in an effort to coerce her to pay her husband's debt, was sufficient to warrant an award of exemplary damages. Wray v. Great Falls Paper Co., 72 M 461, 234 P 486 (1925).

Necessity for Inventory: The inventory of the separate property of the wife is necessary to protect such property only when it is in the exclusive possession of the husband, and third persons deal with him on the credit thereof without knowledge of the claim of the wife. Chan v. Slater, 33 M 155, 82 P 657 (1905).

Filing Before Marriage: A statute providing for the recording by a married woman of a list of her separate property, in order to exempt the same from liability for her husband's debts, is substantially complied with though such list be recorded by a woman in her maiden name, provided it contains a notification of her approaching marriage and the name of her intended husband. Duty to Serve Husband: The common-law rule that the wife owes the duty to the husband to attend to all ordinary household duties and labor in the advancement of the husband's interests without compensation was not changed, but is recognized by this section, in providing that all work and labor performed by a married woman for a person other than her husband and children is presumed to be performed for her own account. Instructions to Jury: In an action by wife for conversion of her separate property by means of a levy of execution, instruction that if jury found she actually owned the property, verdict should go in her favor was not erroneous as against contention it failed to advise jury as to a creditor's right to levy on it for husband's debt where creditor was misled into believing it belonged to her husband. Brennan v. Mayo, 100 M 439, 50 P2d 245 (1935).

Pleadings: Where it does not appear in a complaint or otherwise in an action against a husband and wife on an account stated that the articles were of the character mentioned in this section, for which the separate property of the wife would be liable, no account was stated as to her and a judgment against her was unwarranted. O'Hanlon Co. v. Jess, 58 M 415, 193 P 65 (1920).

Sale of Personal Property From Husband to Wife: If a sale of personal property is sufficient to pass title from the husband to the wife, as between themselves, the property actually becomes the separate property of the wife. Webster v. Sherman, 33 M 448, 84 P 878 (1906).

Curtesy: A section of the Compiled Statutes of 1887 somewhat similar to the above freed the duly listed property of married woman from debts and liabilities of the husband, unless contracted for necessary articles for the wife and minor children, but did not give a married woman in reference to such property complete status as a femme sole and did not deprive a husband of curtesy in such property. Legal Services Provided in Obtaining Protective Order Considered Necessary Articles: The wife retained the services of an attorney to obtain an order of protection against her husband and to petition for dissolution of marriage. The protective order was granted. The wife died shortly thereafter, and dissolution proceedings were abated. The attorney sued the husband for attorney fees. Citing In re Marriage of White, 218 M 343, 708 P2d 267 (1985), the District Court dismissed the action on grounds that there was no set of facts under which the attorney would be entitled to relief. In general, a person is not liable for debts contracted by one's spouse. One exception is for "necessary articles" for the husband, wife, or children. Distinguishing White, the Supreme Court reversed, citing McAlear v. Unemployment Comp. Comm'n, 145 M 458, 405 P2d 219 (1965), for the proposition that attorney services are a necessary article when provided to a wife to obtain orders of protection from an abusive spouse, thereby obligating the spouse to pay attorney fees so incurred. The historical reasons for retention of immunity, i.e., unity of husband and wife as one person, family harmony, and the possibility of fraud and collusion, are no longer valid. Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986).

Agreement Unconscionable When Instigated to Get Wife's Property as Condition of Continuing Marriage: Petitioner appealed a judgment awarding approximately one-sixth of the marital property to him and the balance to the respondent wife. Petitioner contended that the trial court abused its discretion when it refused to divide the marital property 50-50 under an agreement executed between the parties. The Supreme Court held that the trial court properly refused to divide the property according to the agreement, stating that the result would be the same whether the agreement was a separation agreement or, as the husband contended, a postnuptial agreement. The evidence showed that in instigating the agreement the husband took advantage of his wife regarding her property as a condition to continuing the marriage, contrary to what is required of one in a confidential relationship. The agreement was unconscionable as a matter of law even though the trial court did not specifically find unconscionability. Myers v. Myers, 210 M 173, 682 P2d 718, 41 St. Rep. 990 (1984).

Spouse's Lost Investments Not in Marital Estate — Right to Contract With Others: A dissolution award that includes in the marital estate assets which the appellant invested and lost 1 year before the dissolution ignores fundamental legal principles of marital status and thus constitutes an abuse of discretion. Spouses possess mutual powers, obligations, and interests which endure until lawfully modified or terminated, and although appellant may have used poor judgment in his business transactions regarding the family assets, he possessed the power to freely contract with others regarding marital property. Lippert v. Lippert, 192 M 222, 627 P2d 1206, 38 St. Rep. 625 (1981), followed by Peterson v. Peterson, 195 M 157, 636 P2d 821, 38 St. Rep. 1723 (1981).

Presumption That Interspousal Transfer Is Gift: A transfer between spouses is presumed to be a gift, absent consideration, but when the circumstances showed that the wife did not have donative intent at the time of transferring stock to her husband, the presumption was overcome. Myhre v. Myhre, 170 M 410, 554 P2d 276 (1976).

Interspousal Immunity Maintained: Common-law doctrine of interspousal tort immunity was unchanged by procedural statute creating right of married person to sue or be sued as though single. Statute created no new right allowing tort suits between spouses. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Leary, 168 M 482, 544 P2d 444 (1975), overruled in Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986).

Scrutiny of Transaction: Husband, who was well along in years, quit claimed property to his wife in consideration for her promise that she would not put him off such property. The parties were later divorced and wife rented the premises. The Supreme Court stated that a court of equity will closely scrutinize all transactions between a husband and wife, so that injustice and oppression will not result. The court would not tolerate a breach of the confidence reposed on technical grounds. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Erdmann v. Erdmann, 127 M 252, 261 P2d 367 (1953), following DeAtley v. Streit, 81 M 382, 263 P 967 (1928).

Marriage Defense to Tort Actions: Common-law doctrine under which one spouse may not sue the other for a personal tort was in force in Montana. Therefore, wife could not maintain action against her husband for personal injuries sustained by negligence of husband's chauffeur while she was riding in his car. Conley v. Conley, 92 M 425, 15 P2d 922 (1932), overruled in Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986).

Purpose of Act: The primary purpose of the "Married Women's Act" (Title 40, ch. 2, parts 1 through 3) was to free the wife from certain disabilities imposed upon her by the common law, under which her legal personalty and property were merged in the husband, i.e., to place the wife upon an equal footing with the husband as to the ownership, control, and enjoyment of property as to contractual rights in general, with an equal right to resort to the courts, nothing appearing therein to disturb the marital unity otherwise. Conley v. Conley, 92 M 425, 15 P2d 922 (1932), overruled in Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986).

Wife as Assuming Personal Liability When Signs Note and Mortgage With Husband: When a married woman joins her husband in making of a note and mortgage, she makes debt her own and assumes a personal liability and she may not thereafter assert that in attaching her signature she merely did so for the purpose of hypothecating her inchoate right of dower in the mortgaged property or that she signed because she was told to do so because she was the wife of the maker and mortgagor. Ferrell v. Elling, 84 M 384, 276 P 432 (1929).

Conveyances Between Husband and Wife:

In an action in conversion of personal property seized under attachment, in which defendants alleged that the property seized belonged to the plaintiff's husband, that she and he had conspired to defraud his creditors and for that purpose the husband had fraudulently transferred his property to plaintiff who paid no consideration therefor, and that other property had been purchased by her with the husband's money, the verdict in plaintiff's favor was supported by the evidence. Yates v. Commercial Bank & Trust Co., 79 M 100, 255 P 8 (1927).

While transfers of property by a husband to his wife should when charged as being fraudulent be very closely scrutinized on account of the opportunities afforded by the confidential relation of the parties for the perpetration of fraud, yet a husband honestly indebted to his wife may give her a valid preference, either by transfer of money or property in payment, or by giving security to the same extent as he may prefer any other creditors, and such a preference is fraudulent as to other creditors of the husband. Harrison v. Riddell, 64 M 466, 210 P 460 (1922); Koopman v. Mansolf, 51 M 48, 149 P 491 (1915); Lambrecht v. Patten, 15 M 260, 38 P 1063 (1895).

When under a contract made by defendant landowner with plaintiffs (two individuals and a corporation) jointly, which authorized them to sell his property at a fixed price on a commission basis, a sale made to four persons, two of whom were the wives of the individual plaintiffs, was voidable at defendant's option, the fact that the two other purchasers bore no relation whatever to such plaintiffs not altering the rule condemning the sale. Crowley v. Rorvig, 61 M 245, 203 P 496 (1921).

A wife intended to convey property owned by her in her own right to an only daughter. The influence of her husband, made possible by reason of the confidential relations between them, so changed her intentions as to cause her to convey to him instead. This was based upon his promise to make a will devising such property, as well as his own, to the daughter and a son in equal shares. This promise was broken after the wife's death and the will theretofore made was destroyed. The husband was rightfully declared an involuntary trustee of the property, in favor of the daughter, the intended beneficiary. Huffine v. Lincoln, 52 M 585, 160 P 820 (1916).

Contract of Separation: Under 40-2-303, 40-2-304, and this section, husband and wife may agree in writing to an immediate separation making provision for the support of either of them, the mutual consent of the parties being a sufficient consideration; and if it is fairly made and executed, free from fraud or imposition, coercion, or duress, courts will uphold and enforce such an agreement. Lee v. Lee, 55 M 426, 178 P 173 (1919).

Void Provisions: Provision of antenuptial agreement that in event either party shall institute divorce action the party bringing the action covenants to pay all expenses and covenants that other party shall never be called on to pay alimony, separate maintenance, costs of suit, or any other expense incurred by party bringing action, is contrary to public policy and void, and court was justified in awarding alimony and suit money to wife instituting divorce action. Stefonick v. Stefonick, 118 M 486, 167 P2d 848, 164 ALR 1211 (1946).

Attachment Lies Where Obligations Contractual and Not Decretal: When the court approved a property settlement contract entered into during the pendency of a divorce action, and defendant ceased payments on the agreed $150 per month support money when the minor child reached majority, the rights and obligations of the parties were contractual and not decretal, and therefore attachment lay against his contention that the sum payable was not for a certain sum; such agreements regulate the rights and obligations inter se, and his remedy was for reformation of the agreement until which time the contract must stand. State ex rel. Towne v. District Court, 114 M 1, 132 P2d 161 (1942).

Remedy Where Contract Does Not Provide for Modifications: Where a contract entered into between husband and wife pending divorce suit, approved by the court, provided for modification upon remarriage of the wife, but nothing was said as to modification in payments upon the daughter reaching the age of majority, the latter matter can be cured only by an appropriate action in equity for reformation or some other suitable proceeding to obtain suitable adjustment, until which time the contract is one for a sum certain and therefore attachment lies. State ex rel. Towne v. District Court, 114 M 1, 132 P2d 161 (1942).

Successive Suits on Delinquent Alimony Installments: There is nothing in 28-2-1501, or in any other section of the Codes, to prevent the bringing of successive suits for recovery of delinquent alimony installments fixed by an agreement between the parties, in different departments of the same court. State ex rel. Towne v. District Court, 114 M 1, 132 P2d 161 (1942).

Enforcement of Bad Bargain: It is the duty of the court to enforce a contract even though the complaining party may have made a bad bargain. Viers v. Webb, 76 M 38, 245 P 257 (1926).

Permission to Use Furniture — Bailment: Where under a separation agreement the wife accepted certain real property in full satisfaction of her rights in the property of the husband, and the latter granted her permission to use household furniture owned by him until he should want it, the transaction constituted a bailment for the benefit of the wife for an indefinite period—a loan within the meaning of 70-7-102. Viers v. Webb, 76 M 38, 245 P 257 (1926).

Agreement No Bar to Divorce: An agreement by husband and wife for immediate separation, making provision for the support of either and of their children, authorized by this section, if fairly made and executed and free from fraud or imposition, coercion or duress, will be enforced, and is not ordinarily a bar to an action for divorce for cause then existing or arising subsequently thereto, in the absence of covenant, express or implied, not to sue for past offenses. Sherman v. Sherman, 65 M 227, 211 P 321 (1922).

Collusion:

An agreement between husband and wife for immediate separation and providing for support of the parties and their children, entered into with the intent of bringing about or facilitating a divorce, is void. Sherman v. Sherman, 65 M 227, 211 P 321 (1922).

An agreement between husband and wife, whereby the latter promised to convey a lot to the former in consideration of his failure to fight a divorce action instituted by her, was collusive and void as against public policy. Clary v. Fleming, 60 M 246, 198 P 546 (1921).

Agreement to Be in Writing: An agreement between husband and wife providing for a property settlement between them must, under this section, be in writing. Clary v. Fleming, 60 M 246, 198 P 546 (1921).

Burden of Proof as to Compliance With Provisions: When the husband, on application by his wife for temporary alimony pending determination of an action for divorce, relied upon a separation agreement as a bar to her right to relief, the burden rested upon him to allege and prove that the agreement complied in all respects with this section. State ex rel. Robison v. District Court, 56 M 592, 186 P 335 (1919).

Essentials of Contracts Generally: Tested by rules of common law, an agreement between husband and wife providing for a separation, an adjustment of their respective interests in property and for support of wife, is valid only when it is to take effect at once and is immediately complied with, and when marital relations are of such a character as to render a separation necessary for the health or happiness of one or the other. Stebbins v. Morris, 19 M 115, 47 P 642 (1897). See Lee v. Lee, 55 M 426, 178 P 173 (1919); State ex rel. Giroux v. Giroux, 19 M 149, 47 P 798 (1897).

Written and Oral Real Property Agreements — No Timing of Valuation Provision: The parties were married in 1973. They entered a prenuptial agreement providing that the real and personal property of each would remain separate. In 1974, defendant brought a quiet title action against his sisters. He executed a handwritten agreement with plaintiff that if she would finance the legal expenses of the action he would give her 10% of the land or the value thereof. He was successful, and the parties entered into an oral agreement containing the same provisions for appellate costs. The trial court found that defendant owed plaintiff 20% of the value of the land and that the value was to be determined at the time he elected to pay and be based on 20% of the value of all the land. The Supreme Court held that the defendant, under the clear terms of the written contract, had the option to select the acreage which he wished to convey. The District Court disregarded this language in ordering him to convey the percentage of his land as a whole. Since no contract provision addressed the timing of the valuation of the land and conflicting evidence was presented, the District Court's determination that it be valued at the time of payment was upheld. Kartes v. Kartes, 195 M 383, 636 P2d 272, 38 St. Rep. 1941 (1981).

Part 6
Uniform Premarital Agreement Act

Part Commissioners' Note

The number of marriages between persons previously married and the number of marriages between persons each of whom is intending to continue to pursue a career is steadily increasing. For these and other reasons, it is becoming more and more common for persons contemplating marriage to seek to resolve by agreement certain issues presented by the forthcoming marriage. However, despite a lengthy legal history for these premarital agreements, there is a substantial uncertainty as to the enforceability of all, or a portion, of the provisions of these agreements and a significant lack of uniformity of treatment of these agreements among the states. The problems caused by this uncertainty and nonuniformity are greatly exacerbated by the mobility of our population. Nevertheless, this uncertainty and nonuniformity seem reflective not so much of basic policy differences between the states but rather a result of spasmodic, reflexive response to varying factual circumstances at different times. Accordingly, uniform legislation conforming to modern social policy which provides both certainty and sufficient flexibility to accommodate different circumstances would appear to be both a significant improvement and a goal realistically capable of achievement.

This Act is intended to be relatively limited in scope. Section 1 [40-2-603] defines a "premarital agreement" as "an agreement between prospective spouses made in contemplation of marriage and to be effective upon marriage." Section 2 [40-2-604] requires that a premarital agreement be in writing and signed by both parties. Section 4 [40-2-606] provides that a premarital agreement becomes effective upon the marriage of the parties. These sections establish significant parameters. That is, the Act does not deal with agreements between persons who live together but who do not contemplate marriage or who do not marry. Nor does the Act provide for postnuptial or separation agreements or with [sic] oral agreements.

On the other hand, agreements which are embraced by the act are permitted to deal with a wide variety of matters and Section 3 [40-2-605] provides an illustrative list of those matters, including spousal support, which may properly be dealt with in a premarital agreement.

Section 6 [40-2-608] is the key operative section of the Act and sets forth the conditions under which a premarital agreement is not enforceable. An agreement is not enforceable if the party against whom enforcement is sought proves that (a) he or she did not execute the agreement voluntarily or that (b) the agreement was unconscionable when it was executed and before execution of the agreement, he or she (1) was not provided a fair and reasonable disclosure of the property or financial obligations of the other party, (2) did not voluntarily and expressly waive, in writing, any right to disclosure of the property or financial obligations of the other party beyond the disclosure provided, and (3) did not have, or reasonably could not have had, an adequate knowledge of the property and financial obligations of the other party.

Even if these conditions are not proven, if a provision of a premarital agreement modifies or eliminates spousal support, and that modification or elimination would cause a party to be eligible for support under a program of public assistance at the time of separation, marital dissolution, or death, a court is authorized to order the other party to provide support to the extent necessary to avoid that eligibility.

These sections form the heart of the Act; the remaining sections deal with more tangential issues. Section 5 [40-2-607] prescribes the manner in which a premarital agreement may be amended or revoked; Section 7 [40-2-609] provides for very limited enforcement where a marriage is subsequently determined to be void; and Section 8 [40-2-610] tolls any statute of limitations applicable to an action asserting a claim for relief under a premarital agreement during the parties' marriage.

Part Case Notes

Prenuptial Agreement — Recitation of Full Disclosure of Assets Held Sufficient: Before Everett and Eleanor were married, they executed a prenuptial agreement containing a statement that each party had disclosed assets to the other. Upon Everett's death, Eleanor attempted to elect against Everett's will and produced evidence that although she had signed the agreement containing the disclosure statement, there in fact had been no disclosure but that she had chosen not to raise the issue at the time that the prenuptial agreement was signed. The Supreme Court held that 72-2-102 (renumbered 72-2-224) did not require a written disclosure or listing of the parties' assets, that the statute was complied with in this case by inclusion of the recitation of disclosure, and that the District Court was entitled to determine the credibility of Eleanor's testimony. The Supreme Court also held that the Uniform Prenuptial Agreement Act (Uniform Premarital Agreement Act) did not apply to the case before the court because the Act was not in force at the time that the agreement was entered into. 40-2-603. Definitions.

Commissioners' Note

The definition of "premarital agreement" set forth in subsection (1) is limited to an agreement between prospective spouses made in contemplation of and to be effective upon marriage. Agreements between persons living together but not contemplating marriage (see Marvin v. Marvin, 18 Cal.3d 660 (1976), judgment after trial modified, 122 Cal.App.3d 871 (1981)) and postnuptial or separation agreements are outside the scope of this Act. Formal requirements are prescribed by Section 2 [40-2-604]. An illustrative list of matters which may be included in an agreement is set forth in Section 3 [40-2-605].

Subsection (2) is designed to embrace all forms of property and interests therein. These may include rights in a professional license or practice, employee benefit plans, pension and retirement accounts, and so on. The reference to income or earnings includes both income from property and earnings from personal services.

40-2-604. Formalities.

Commissioners' Note

This section restates the common requirement that a premarital agreement be reduced to writing and signed by both parties (see Ariz.Rev.Stats. §25-201; Ark.Stats. §55-310; Cal.Civ.C. §5134; 13 Dela.Code 1974 §301; Idaho Code §32-917; Ann.Laws Mass. ch. 209, §25; Minn.Stats.Ann. §519.11; Montana Rev.C. §36-123; New Mex. Stats.Ann. 1978 40-2-4; Ore.Rev.Stats. §108.140; Vernon's Texas Codes Ann. §5.44; Vermont Stats.Ann. Title 12, §181). Many states also require other formalities, including notarization or an acknowledgement (see, e.g., Arizona, Arkansas, California, Idaho, Montana, New Mexico) but may then permit the formal statutory requirement to be avoided or satisfied subsequent to execution (see In re Marriage of Cleveland, 76 Cal.App.3d 357 (1977) (premarital agreement never acknowledged but "proved" by sworn testimony of parties in dissolution proceeding)). This act dispenses with all formal requirements except a writing signed by both parties. Although the section is framed in the singular, the agreement may consists of one or more documents intended to be part of the agreement and executed as required by this section.

Section 2 [40-2-604] also restates what appears to be the almost universal rule regarding the marriage as consideration for a premarital agreement (see, e.g., Ga.Code §20-303; Barnhill v. Barnhill, 386 So.2d 749 (Ala.Civ.App.1980); Estate of Gillilan v. Estate of Gillilan, 406 N.E.2d 981 (Ind.App.1980); Friedlander v. Friedlander, 494 P.2d 208 (Wash.1972); but cf. Wilson v. Wilson, 170 A.2d 679, 685 (Me.1961)). The primary importance of this rule has been to provide a degree of mutuality of benefits to support the enforceability of a premarital agreement. A marriage is a prerequisite for the effectiveness of a premarital agreement under this act (see Section 4 [40-2-606]). This requires that there be a ceremonial marriage. Even if this marriage is subsequently determined to have been void, Section 7 [40-2-609] may provide limits of enforceability of an agreement entered into in contemplation of that marriage. Consideration as such is not required and the standards for enforceability are established by Sections 6 [40-2-608] and 7 [40-2-609]. Nevertheless, this provision is retained here as a desirable, if not essential, restatement of the law. On the other hand, the fact that marriage is deemed to be consideration for the purpose of this act does not change the rules applicable in other areas of law (see, e.g., 26 U.S.C.A. §§2043 (release of certain marital rights not treated as consideration for federal estate tax, 2512; Merrill v. Fahs, 324 U.S. 308, rehearing denied 324 U.S. 888 (release of marital rights in premarital agreement not adequate and full consideration for purposes of federal gift tax).

Finally, a premarital agreement is a contract. As required for any other contract, the parties must have the capacity to contract in order to enter into a binding agreement. Those persons who lack the capacity to contract but who under other provisions of law are permitted to enter into a binding agreement may enter into a premarital agreement under those other provisions of law.

Unexecuted Copy of Prenuptial Agreement Inadmissible as Representation of Executed Agreement: The husband alleged that he lost or at least could not find an original prenuptial agreement and then offered other evidence that a properly executed prenuptial agreement existed that would determine the rights of the parties. The District Court did not limit the introduction of the evidence pursuant to Rule 1004, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), even though that rule pertains to the contents of rather than the actual existence of a document. To prove the content of a writing under Montana's best evidence rule, Rule 1002, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), the original writing is required; however, under Rule 1004, M.R.Ev., secondary evidence is admissible over a best evidence objection if the requirements of the rule are met and a proper foundation is laid, so the husband's unsigned copy of the allegedly lost original document was admissible. However, the only evidence that the document was ever signed was the husband's testimony of his own recollection, which was rebutted by the wife's testimony that the signing never occurred. The secondary evidence could not establish that an enforceable prenuptial contract, which by definition requires the signatures of both parties, ever existed. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the husband failed to present evidence that an enforceable prenuptial contract was executed. In re Marriage of Gochanour, 2000 MT 156, 300 M 155, 4 P3d 643, 57 St. Rep. 619 (2000).

40-2-605. Content.

Commissioners' Note

Section 3 [40-2-605] permits the parties to contract in a premarital agreement with respect to any matter listed and any other matter not in violation of public policy or any statute imposing a criminal penalty. The matters are intended to be illustrative, not exclusive. Paragraph (4) of subsection (a) specifically authorizes the parties to deal with spousal support obligations. There is a split in authority among the states as to whether a premarital agreement may control the issue of spousal support. Some few states do not permit a premarital agreement to control this issue (see, e.g., In re Marriage of Winegard, 278 N.W.2d 505 (Iowa 1979); Fricke v. Fricke, 42 N.W.2d 500 (Wis.1950)). However, the better view and growing trend is to permit a premarital agreement to govern this matter if the agreement and the circumstances of its execution satisfy certain standards (see, e.g., Newman v. Newman, 653 P.2d 728 (Colo.Sup.Ct.1982); Parniawski v. Parniawski, 359 A.2d 719 (Conn.1976); Volid v. Volid, 286 N.E.2d 42 (Ill.1972); Osborne v. Osborne, 428 N.E.2d 810 (Mass.1981); Hudson v. Hudson, 350 P.2d 596 (Okla.1960); Unander v. Unander, 506 P.2d 719 (Ore.1973)) (see Sections 7 [40-2-609] and 8 [40-2-610]).

Paragraph (8) of subsection (a) makes clear that the parties may also contract with respect to other matters, including personal rights and obligations, not in violation of public policy or a criminal statute. Hence, subject to this limitation, an agreement may provide for such matters as the choice of abode, the freedom to pursue career opportunities, the upbringing of children, and so on. However, subsection (b) of this section makes clear that an agreement may not adversely affect what would otherwise be the obligation of a party to a child.

Case Notes

Antenuptial Agreement Regarding Property Division Not Preclusion to Award of Maintenance: An antenuptial agreement provided a waiver by each party of any claim to the previously acquired property of the other in the event of dissolution. Husband contended that wife's consent to the waiver also prohibited any future award of maintenance if the payment came from income derived from that property. However, the agreement language dealt only with property division and was silent regarding maintenance. Maintenance waivers were prohibited because they were against public policy at the time the agreement was drafted in 1984, in accord with Stefonick v. Stefonick, 118 M 486, 167 P2d 848 (1946). (Not until the 1987 enactment of this section were parties allowed to contract for modification or elimination of spousal support.) The clear language of the agreement precluded husband from arguing in 1992 for implication of a provision that would have been void at the time the parties executed it. This section establishes a marriage as a prerequisite for the effectiveness of a premarital agreement. As a consequence, the act does not provide for a situation where persons live together without marrying. In that situation, the parties must look to the other law of the jurisdiction (see Marvin v. Marvin, 18 Cal.3d 660 (1976); judgment after trial modified, 122 Cal.App.3d 871 (1981)).

40-2-608. Enforcement.

Commissioners' Note

This section sets forth the conditions which must be proven to avoid the enforcement of a premarital agreement. If prospective spouses enter into a premarital agreement and their subsequent marriage is determined to be void, the enforceability of the agreement is governed by Section 7 [40-2-609].

The conditions stated under subsection (a) are comparable to concepts which are expressed in the statutory and decisional law of many jurisdictions. Enforcement based on disclosure and voluntary execution is perhaps most common (see, e.g., Ark.Stats. §55-309; Minn.Stats.Ann. §519.11; In re Kaufmann's Estate, 171 A.2d 48 (Pa.1961) (alternate holding)). However, knowledge or reason to know, together with voluntary execution, may also be sufficient (see, e.g., Tenn.Code Ann. §36-606; Barnhill v. Barnhill, 386 So.2d 479 (Ala.Civ.App.1980); Del Vecchio v. Del Vecchio, 143 So.2d 17 (Fla.1962); Coward and Coward, 582 P.2d 834 (Or.App.1978); but see Matter of Estate of Lebsock, 618 P.2d 683 (Colo.App.1980)) and so may a voluntary, knowing waiver (see Hafner v. Hafner, 295 N.W.2d 567 (Minn.1980)). In each of these situations, it should be underscored that execution must have been voluntary (see Lutgert v. Lutgert, 338 So.2d 1111 (Fla.1976); see also 13 Dela.Code 1974 §301 (10 day waiting period)). Finally, a premarital agreement is enforceable if enforcement would not have been unconscionable at the time the agreement was executed (cf. Hartz v. Hartz, 234 A.2d 865 (Md.1967) (premarital agreement upheld if no disclosure but agreement was fair and equitable under the circumstances)).

The test of "unconscionability" is drawn from Section 306 of the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act (UMDA) (see Ferry v. Ferry, 586 S.W.2d 782 (Mo.1979); see also Newman v. Newman, 653 P.2d 728 (Colo.Sup.Ct.1982) (maintenance provisions of premarital agreement tested for unconscionability at time of marriage termination)). The following discussion set forth in the Commissioner's Note to Section 306 of the UMDA is equally appropriate here:

"Subsection (b) undergirds the freedom allowed the parties by making clear that the terms of the agreement respecting maintenance and property disposition are binding upon the court unless those terms are found to be unconscionable. The standard of unconscionability is used in commercial law, where its meaning includes protection against one-sidedness, oppression, or unfair surprise (see section 2-302, Uniform Commercial Code), and in contract law, Scott v. U.S., 12 Wall (U.S.) 443 (1870) ('contract . . . unreasonable and unconscionable but not void for fraud'); Stiefler v. McCullough, 174 N.E. 823, 97 Ind.App. 123 (1931); Terre Haute Cooperage v. Branscome, 35 So.2d 537, 203 Miss. 493 (1948); Carter v. Boone County Trust Co., 92 S.W.2d 647, 338 Mo. 629 (1936). It has been used in cases respecting divorce settlements or awards. Bell v. Bell, 371 P.2d 773, 150 Colo. 174 (1962) ('this division of property is manifestly unfair, inequitable and unconscionable'). Hence the act does not introduce a novel standard unknown to the law. In the context of negotiations between spouses as to the financial incidents of their marriage, the standard includes protection against overreaching, concealment of assets, and sharp dealing not consistent with the obligations of marital partners to deal fairly with each other.

"In order to determine whether the agreement is unconscionable, the court may look to the economic circumstances of the parties resulting from the agreement, and any other relevant evidence such as the conditions under which the agreement was made, including the knowledge of the other party. If the court finds the agreement not unconscionable, its terms respecting property division and maintenance may not be altered by the court at the hearing." (Commissioner's Note, Sec. 306, Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act.)

Nothing in Section 6 [40-2-608] makes the absence of assistance of independent legal counsel a condition for the unenforceability of a premarital agreement. However, lack of that assistance may well be a factor in determining whether the conditions stated in Section 6 [40-2-608] may have existed (see, e.g., Del Vecchio v. Del Vecchio, 143 So.2d 17 (Fla.1962)).

Even if the conditions stated in subsection (a) are not proven, if a provision of a premarital agreement modifies or eliminates spousal support, subsection (b) authorizes a court to provide very limited relief to a party who would otherwise be eligible for public welfare (see, e.g., Osborne v. Osborne, 428 N.E.2d 810 (Mass.1981) (dictum); Unander v. Unander, 506 P.2d 719 (Ore.1973) (dictum)).

No special provision is made for enforcement of provisions of a premarital agreement relating to personal rights and obligations. However, a premarital agreement is a contract and these provisions may be enforced to the extent that they are enforceable are [sic] under otherwise applicable law (see Avitzur v. Avitzur, 459 N.Y.S.2d 572 (Ct.App.).

Section 6 [40-2-608] is framed in a manner to require the party who alleges that a premarital agreement is not enforceable to bear the burden of proof as to that allegation. The statutory law conflicts on the issue of where the burden of proof lies (contrast Ark.Stats. §55-313; 31 Minn.Stats.Ann. §519.11 with Vernon's Texas Codes Ann. §5.45). Similarly, some courts have placed the burden on the attacking spouse to prove the invalidity of the agreement. Linker v. Linker, 470 P.2d 921 (Colo.1970); Matter of Estate of Benker, 296 N.W.2d 167 (Mich.App.1980); In re Kaufmann's Estate, 171 A.2d 48 (Pa.1961). Some have placed the burden upon those relying upon the agreement to prove its validity. Hartz v. Hartz, 234 A.2d 865 (Md.1967). Finally, several have adopted a middle ground by stating that a premarital agreement is presumptively valid but if a disproportionate disposition is made for the wife, the husband bears the burden of proof of showing adequate disclosure. (Del Vecchio v. Del Vecchio, 143 So.2d 17 (Fla.1962); Christians v. Christians, 44 N.W.2d 431 (Iowa 1950); In re Neis' Estate, 225 P.2d 110 (Kans.1950); Truitt v.

Case Notes

Mental Weakness Short of Incapacity Not Sufficient to Invalidate Premarital Agreement: When Mary and Larry were married, Mary was 21 and developmentally disabled and Larry was 62 and in poor health. Larry had three children from a previous marriage. Two days before the marriage, Mary and Larry signed a prenuptial agreement prepared by Larry's attorney that provided that each would keep the individual's separate property, whether owned then or acquired thereafter, free from any claim of the other by virtue of the marriage. Two years later, Larry died, and Mary brought an action to challenge the enforcement of the premarital agreement on grounds that, because of her disability, she was incapable of understanding the agreement and thus could not have given the required consent. The District Court found that Mary was mentally competent to understand the agreement when she signed it and that the contract was valid. The Supreme Court applied Gen. Motors v. Jackson, 900 P2d 345 (Nev. 1995), for the proposition that a person is mentally defective for purposes of capacity when the party, for any reason, is incapable of understanding the force and effect of the agreement, but that a mere mental weakness short of incapacity does not invalidate the agreement because capacity deals with the ability to understand the terms of the agreement, not a person's actual understanding. Capacity relates to the status of the person rather than the circumstances surrounding the transaction. Mary attended special education classes, but nevertheless graduated from high school. She could read and write, although poorly, and could drive a car, although she had no license. Absent any medical or expert testimony regarding Mary's level of competency, the District Court relied on lay testimony, including Mary's, to determine whether Mary met the burden of establishing incompetence. Substantial evidence supported the court's conclusion that Mary failed to meet her burden of proof, and the Supreme Court affirmed the validity of the premarital contract. Wilkes v. Estate of Wilkes, 2001 MT 118, 305 M 335, 27 P3d 433 (2001).

No Finding of Unconscionability in Premarital Agreement: When Mary and Larry were married, Mary was 21 and developmentally disabled and Larry was 62 and in poor health. Larry had three children from a previous marriage. Two days before the marriage, Mary and Larry signed a prenuptial agreement prepared by Larry's attorney that provided that each would keep the individual's separate property, whether owned then or acquired thereafter, free from any claim of the other by virtue of the marriage. Two years later, Larry died, and Mary brought an action to challenge the enforcement of the premarital agreement on grounds that the agreement was unconscionable. The District Court concluded that although Mary's circumstances were not enviable in some respects, it was logical that Larry would desire to, and had the right to, protect the assets that he acquired during a lifetime of work and pass them on to his children. The mere fact that Mary functioned at a low intellectual level did not make it less conscionable that she would keep only what she brought to the marriage and share only whatever assets might have been added to the marital estate had the marriage lasted longer. The court properly applied the guidelines in 72-2-224, and absent clear error, the validity of the premarital agreement was affirmed. Wilkes v. Estate of Wilkes, 2001 MT 118, 305 M 335, 27 P3d 433 (2001).

Lack of Knowledge of Future Conduct and Finances Not Basis to Prevent Enforcement of Agreement: Thomas and Dorothy were married in 1987 after signing a premarital agreement at Dorothy's request. Before they were married, Dorothy raised cattle on leased land. Later, as a condition of remaining married, Thomas insisted that Dorothy give up the leased land, which she did. Dorothy was subsequently forced to sell her cattle. The parties were then divorced. Dorothy claimed that the premarital agreement should not be enforced because she did not know that Thomas would force her to give up the lease and because she did not know the extent of Thomas's assets before they married. The Supreme Court held that neither reason was sufficient to prevent enforcement of the agreement. Dorothy cited no authority for the proposition that Thomas's future conduct should prevent the enforcement of the agreement, and she did not claim that a fair and reasonable disclosure of Thomas's assets was not made, only that she did not know the extent of them. In fact, the agreement was drafted by her attorney. The District Court therefore properly concluded that the agreement was enforceable. In re Marriage of Stout, 261 M 10, 861 P2d 856, 50 St. Rep. 1119 (1993).

Right of Action for Damages Against Former Husband Not to Be Resolved by Property Settlement: Thomas and Dorothy were married in 1987 after signing a premarital agreement at Dorothy's request. Before they were married, Dorothy raised cattle on leased land. Later, as a condition of remaining married, Thomas insisted that Dorothy give up the leased land, which she did. Dorothy was subsequently forced to sell her cattle. The parties were then divorced. Dorothy claimed that even if the premarital agreement precluded her from having any interest in Thomas's assets, she should not be precluded from collecting damages for being required to break the lease and sell her cattle. The Supreme Court held that any right of action against Thomas for having to break the lease is separate and distinct from her property settlement rights, which are governed exclusively by the premarital agreement. In re Marriage of Stout, 261 M 10, 861 P2d 856, 50 St. Rep. 1119 (1993).

Commissioners' Note

Under this section a void marriage does not completely invalidate a premarital agreement but does substantially limit its enforceability. Where parties have married and lived together for a substantial period of time and one or both have relied on the existence of a premarital agreement, the failure to enforce the agreement may well be inequitable. This section, accordingly, provides the court discretion to enforce the agreement to the extent necessary to avoid the inequitable result (see Annot., 46 A.L.R.3d 1403).

Commissioners' Note

In order to avoid the potentially disruptive effect of compelling litigation between the spouses in order to escape the running of an applicable statute of limitations, Section 8 [40-2-610] tolls any applicable statute during the marriage of the parties (contrast Dykema v. Dykema, 412 N.E.2d 13 (Ill.App.1980) (statute of limitations not tolled where fraud not adequately pleaded, hence premarital agreement enforced at death)). However, a party is not completely free to sit on his or her rights because the section does preserve certain equitable defenses.

Appointment of Director as "Suitable Process or Mode of Proceeding": Appointment of a Director of Family Court Services was a "suitable process or mode of proceeding" within the meaning of 3-1-113 for the District Court to follow to carry out its statutorily mandated duties under the provisions of the Montana Conciliation Law. Since the District Court acted properly, the position was entitled to be funded. The Commissioners' refusal to comply with the funding order was an arbitrary and capricious abuse of the powers of their office. Bd. of Comm'rs v. District Court, 182 M 463, 597 P2d 728 (1979).

Commission on Practice — Recommendations on Joint Petitions: The following letter from the Secretary of the Commission on Practice of the Supreme Court of the state of Montana appeared on page 3 of the September 1980 publication of The Montana Lawyer:

"The Commission on Practice was established for the purpose of receiving and investigating complaints of alleged misconduct on the part of lawyers committed in the State of Montana. We have been increasingly concerned about the number of complaints received from parties to a dissolution of marriage, which problems stem from alleged multiple representation of the two parties.

The Legislature is establishing so called "No Fault Divorce," provided in Section 40-4105 [40-4-105], subsection 2, that either or both parties may initiate the proceeding. It is this provision authorizing the filing of a joint petition for dissolution of marriage that gives rise to the complaints being filed before the Commission. The complaints received allege violations of Disciplinary Rule 5-105-a, which deals with multiple employment and provides in substance that a lawyer should decline proffered employment if the exercise of his independent professional judgement in behalf of the client will be, or is likely to be, adversely affected by the acceptance of the proffered employment. In short, while the Legislature has authorized the filing of a joint petition for dissolution of marriage, the Canons of Ethics and the decisions and opinions of other states all indicate that separate and independent lawyers for each of the parties in a dissolution proceeding is almost a mandate.

In examining and investigating the complaints we have received we find that in most cases the attorney involved has conscientiously attempted to be fair to both parties, and in far too many cases, the client who was satisfied with the original property settlement or custody arrangements has now determined that he or she was not treated fairly and was taken advantage of by the attorney. Frequently, an investigation reveals that one of the parties has secured the services of an attorney, and the other party does not secure counsel and simply signs the agreement as prepared by the attorney. Again, all too often the other party, in hindsight, contends that he or she relied on the attorney for fair and equitable treatment, and considered that the attorney represented both parties.

The problems that can arise with multiple representation are vividly demonstrated in the Montana case of Pilati v. Pilati, cited in Volume 36, State Reporter, at Page 619.

With the legislative authorization of the filing of joint petitions and the mandates prohibiting multiple representation in most cases, what can the practitioner do to avoid being the subject of inquiry by the Commission? Our personal views are these:

1. Urge independent representation in all cases.
2. Avoid, if possible, the filing of joint petitions. (With the abolishment of cause for divorce, there is no particular stigma attached to being either a petitioner or a respondent).
3. If circumstances are such that a joint petition is used, secure a document in writing from the other party that you are only representing Client A, and that Client B is urged to seek independent counsel.
4. Sign a joint petition as "Attorney for Petitioner 'A'," rather than as attorney for both petitioners.
5. In framing a property settlement, use the proposed terminology in the Montana Legal Secretaries Handbook: . . . "(Husband, wife) has retained and been represented by (name of attorney) in connection with the negotiations for the drafting of this agreement. (Husband, wife) is not represented by counsel, although (he, she) understands (his, her) right to be so represented, and has knowingly waived the services of counsel."

Lastly, it should be noted that decisions of other jurisdictions indicate that in advising that separate counsel be obtained for one of the parties, it is considered unethical to recommend a specific attorney for the other party's representation.

I am hopeful that by following these simple guidelines, Montana practitioners can avoid the embarrassment of receiving a letter from the Commission on Practice."

Chapter Case Notes

Name of Child When Agreed-to Pretrial Order and Birth Certificate Conflict at Trial: A pretrial order signed by both parties' attorneys and the judge stated that the child's last name would remain Rager. Later, it was discovered, and the lower court determined, that the child's legal last name was Worman, as stated on the birth certificate. The Supreme Court ruled that because the husband did not request a name change in the lower court and because the pretrial order was legally and factually in error, the birth certificate name of Worman would remain the legal name until the name was changed by adoption, a statutory petition for a name change, or other legal means. In re Marriage of Rager, 263 M 361, 868 P2d 625, 51 St. Rep. 91 (1994).

Enforcement of Wyoming Decree in Montana: Wyoming residents were divorced under a Wyoming divorce decree which provided that disagreements between the parties arising out of any transaction relating to the decree were to be submitted to the Wyoming District Court for resolution. A disagreement arose in connection with the parties' interests in property located in Montana. Husband filed suit in Montana, and wife sought a ruling that the Montana court lacked jurisdiction and that the Wyoming court was the proper forum. The Montana District Court properly decided that it should decline to exercise jurisdiction on the basis of the doctrine of comity, though it did have jurisdiction. Application of the comity doctrine did not contravene the public policy of Montana or the open court policy mandated by the Montana Constitution. Kane v. Kane, 198 M 335, 646 P2d 505, 39 St. Rep. 1036 (1982).

Scope of Judicial Remedies: A District Court, sitting in a marriage dissolution case, has the same broad powers as a court of equity in fashioning decrees that will be responsive to the fact situations before it, effective to accomplish the objectives that the District Court, through its judgment determines must ensue, and to do complete justice. Karr v. Karr, 192 M 388, 628 P2d 267, 38 St. Rep. 506 (1981), certiorari denied, 455 US 1016, 72 L Ed 2d 132, 102 S Ct 1709 (1982), rehearing denied, 456 US 985, 72 L Ed 2d 864, 102 S Ct 2260 (1982).

Statutory Requirements to Be Followed in Marriage Dissolution Cases: The wife appealed from a marriage dissolution judgment granting child custody to the husband, ordering her to pay child support, and dividing the marital assets. The Supreme Court found that the trial court's findings of fact were inadequate on all the issues involved. The Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act was not considered. The child custody factors of 40-4-212 were not considered. The child support factors of 40-4-204 were ignored. The property distribution factors in 40-4-202 were not used. The interests of justice required the judgment to be vacated on all points except the dissolution itself, and a new hearing was ordered. Tomaskie v. Tomaskie, 191 M 508, 625 P2d 536, 38 St. Rep. 416 (1981).

Procedures to Be Rigorously Followed: While there is some overlap in the various statutory schemes governing the termination of parental rights and the custody of children as to general subject matter, each is used for a distinct purpose and sets forth specific procedures which must be rigorously followed before a valid judgment or order may be issued, to insure that the minors involved receive the full protection of these laws. In re Guardianship of Aschenbrenner, 182 M 540, 597 P2d 1156 (1979).

Postjudgment Powers of Court: A District Court has power to award necessary maintenance, child support, and suit money after judgment in a marital dissolution case during the pendency of appeal. To hold otherwise would leave a hiatus in the remedial power of the court that could cause unmeasured hardship and distress. State ex rel. Kaasa v. District Court, 177 M 547, 582 P2d 772 (1978).

Best Interests to Control: Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act attempts to do away with all restrictive views and procedures in order to accomplish what is in the best interest of not only the children, if any, but also husband or wife without regard to type of relief husband and wife may be seeking. Rogers v. Rogers, 169 M 403, 548 P2d 141 (1976).

Part 1
Separation — Dissolution of Marriage

Part Case Notes

Action to Be Dismissed Upon Death of Either Spouse During Pendency of Dissolution Proceeding — ". . . Until Death Do You Part": One spouse in a dissolution action died shortly after a hearing was held on his petition for dissolution of marriage, but no judgment had yet been entered, either written or oral. In affirming the District Court in dismissing the petition, the Supreme Court held that death terminates a marriage as a matter of law; therefore, there is nothing for the court to dissolve. The death of either spouse during the pendency of a dissolution action prior to the entry of judgment divests the court of all jurisdiction over the action, including matters involving the distribution of property. In re Marriage of Lawrence, 212 M 327, 687 P2d 1026, 41 St. Rep. 1771 (1984).

Divorce Proceeding — Counselor Testimony Available at Trial: Husband argued that a new divorce trial was justified by the fact that a psychiatrist who had counseled both parties prior to the dissolution of their marriage decided to testify. He refused to testify at the original hearing because the parties agreed that the information obtained by him in counseling would not be used in court. However, he was later willing to testify. He was available at the time of trial and could have been subpoenaed. The evidence did not come to the knowledge of husband after the trial, and husband lacked diligence as to the testimony. The materiality of the evidence was not so great as to produce a different result by the District Court. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by denying a new trial. Cherewick v. Cherewick, 205 M 75, 666 P2d 742, 40 St. Rep. 1106 (1983).

Dissolution Proceeding — Distribution of Property: In a dissolution proceeding, the District Court must place a value upon all of the assets within a marital estate and determine the net worth of the parties before distributing property within that estate, regardless of whether the parties entered into any stipulation concerning their marital property. Cook v. Cook, 188 M 472, 614 P2d 511 (1980).

Invalidity of Marriage as Affirmative Defense — Burden of Proof: Where, following a Mexican wedding ceremony between the parties, the respondent sought a decree of divorce and child support, the appellant's contention that the marriage was invalid should have been raised by affirmative defense. The appellant had the burden of proof to overcome the respondent's allegation that the marriage was lawful. Wilson v. Wilson, 186 M 290, 607 P2d 539 (1980).

Validity of Marriage Not Determined in Paternity Action: Where appellant allegedly fathered the child of the parties in 1962 and respondent subsequently sought and obtained a paternity decree against appellant in 1964 stating that the child was born "out of wedlock", a subsequent divorce action by the respondent was not barred by the doctrine of res judicata, as the validity of the parties' Mexican marriage was not material to the 1964 paternity decree and was never actually and necessarily adjudicated in the 1964 proceeding. Wilson v. Wilson, 186 M 290, 607 P2d 539 (1980).

appropriate to legislation on marriage or divorce, respectively, may be utilized separately, if it is desired to place the marriage or divorce parts of the act in different divisions of the state statutes. Case Notes

No Duty of Attorney to Nonclient in Child Custody Case: An attorney must be able to vigorously advocate a client's interests in litigation without being compromised by obligations to nonclients. If an attorney were considered to owe the same duty of care to both a parent and child in an adversarial custody case, neither parent nor child would be served effectively. Because the interests of a parent and those of a child may not be identical, the attorney's duty runs solely to the client except if the conduct rises to the level of deceit or collusion or is intentionally reckless. Rhode v. Adams, 1998 MT 73, 288 M 278, 957 P2d 1124, 55 St. Rep. 303 (1998).

Prior Custody Decree Not Modified: Upon a petition for habeas corpus filed by a natural father for transfer of his child out of the temporary custody of the child's grandparents back to the father who was initially awarded custody, the District Court erred in awarding custody to a third party who had not even sought custody and the court erred in dismissing the father's petition. A District Court is without authority to award custody to a nonpetitioning party under ordinary circumstances. Moreover, where, as here, grandparents are seeking to modify a custody decree awarded to a natural parent, the District Court was bound to follow the law as set out in Schiele v. Sager, 174 M 533, 571 P2d 1142 (1977), Holm v. Holm, 172 M 81, 560 P2d 905 (1977), Groves v. Groves, 173 M 291, 567 P2d 459 (1977), and Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978), that sections 40-4-211 through 40-4-221 are designed to favor custodial continuity over the rights of the custodians. In re Marriage of Korol, 188 M 351, 613 P2d 1016 (1980).

Postjudgment Powers of Court: A District Court has power to award necessary maintenance, child support, and suit money after judgment in a marital dissolution case during the pendency of appeal. To hold otherwise would leave a hiatus in the remedial power of the court that could cause unmeasured hardship and distress. State ex rel. Kaasa v. District Court, 177 M 547, 582 P2d 772 (1978).

Best Interest to Control: Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act attempts to do away with all restrictive views and procedures in order to accomplish what is in the best interest of not only the children, if any, but also husband or wife without regard to type of relief husband and wife may be seeking. Rogers v. Rogers, 169 M 403, 548 P2d 141 (1976).

This is the standard Conference provision on uniformity and construction in aid thereof. Case Notes

Indians — Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Dissolution of Marriage — Different Residences of Parties — Factors to Be Considered — Bertelson Followed: Stacey, an enrolled member of the Fort Peck Tribes, married Shane, a non-Indian. After the marriage ceremony, Stacey returned to the Fort Peck Indian Reservation and Shane went to Forsyth, where his parents lived and where he worked. Some time later, Stacey had a child who also became an enrolled member and lived with Stacey on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. Still later, Shane filed a dissolution action in a state District Court. The District Court ordered joint custody and ordered that Shane would be the primary residential custodian. Approximately 1 month later, the Fort Peck Tribal Court awarded temporary custody to Stacey. She then filed a motion in District Court under Rules 12(h) and 60, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to dismiss Shane's dissolution action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The District Court held that it had subject matter jurisdiction over the case and issued a final decree of dissolution. In that decree, the District Court held that the parties' child had significant contacts both off and on the reservation, held that the District Court shared concurrent jurisdiction with the tribal court, and therefore denied Stacey's motion to dismiss. The Supreme Court reviewed its previous holdings regarding tribal jurisdiction and child custody jurisdiction under the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. The Supreme Court also reviewed the purposes of the Indian Child Welfare Act, which, while not strictly applicable to the case before it, cautions that state courts should be careful not to erode the sovereignty of tribes and tribal courts. In reliance upon In re Bertelson, 189 M 524, 617 P2d 121 (1980), the Supreme Court held that the best interests of the child should be determined and followed in deciding whether a state or tribal court has jurisdiction for the purposes of awarding custody but that when an Indian child resides off the reservation, state courts and tribal courts share concurrent jurisdiction. The Supreme Court then held, in further reliance upon Bertelson, that even when jurisdiction is concurrent, it does not mean that states courts should exercise jurisdiction and that in deciding whether to exercise concurrent jurisdiction, the state courts should consider: (1) 40-4-107, 40-4-211, 40-7-108, and this section; (2) certain policy issues; and (3) the residence of the parties pursuant to 1-1-215. For this reason, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for a determination of the residence of Stacey and her child, saying that if the District Court determines that both reside on the reservation, the District Court must dismiss the case. However, if the District Court finds that Stacey's child is not a resident of the reservation and that the District Court shares jurisdiction with the tribal court, the District Court must then consider factors from Bertelson, previously discussed by the Supreme Court, to determine whether the District Court or the tribal court is better able to determine the best interests of the child. 40-4-103. Application of Montana Rules of Civil Procedure.

Commissioners' Note

The basic philosophy of this part of the draft is to utilize the procedural systems of the several states, so far as possible, in divorce litigation. However, in certain respects, the change from "fault" to "no-fault" basis dictates the use of terms and of procedures different from those which have become thoroughly associated with fault-orientation, in order to impress bench and bar with the break from past concepts....

Subsection (a) [(1)] makes the state's normal procedural rules applicable to proceedings under this Act, except where it specifically provides otherwise. Procedural provisions in the Act include subsections (b) and (c) of Section 301 [subsections (2) and (3) of 40-4-103]; Section 304 [40-4-121]; Section 311 [40-4-206]; Section 314 [40-4-108]; Section 316 [40-4-208]; Section 403 [40-4-213]; Section 406 [40-4-216]; and Section 410 [40-4-220].

Subsection (b) [(2)] incorporates suggestions made by several writers that substitution of a neutral case title ("In re the Marriage of _____ and _____") for the customary adversary title ("_____ v. _____"), will help to reduce the hostile atmosphere of marital actions. The Act adopts this suggestion and extends it to independent custody and support proceedings. A custody or support proceeding commenced as part of a proceeding for dissolution or legal separation need not be separately entitled.

Subsection (c) [(3)], like subsection (b) [(2)], is intended to reduce the adversary trappings of family cases by substituting a "proceeding" for the customary "action" and denominating the pleadings "petition" and "response" rather than "complaint" and "answer." Similar provisions are West's Ann.Calif.Civ.Code (1970) §§4503, 4504; Iowa General Assembly, 1970 Regular Session H.F. 1156. The practice in states that already use a "petition" for the initial pleading in all civil cases will not be affected by this subsection.

Subsection (d) [(4)] is designed to prevent any confusion from variance in terms.

Subsection (e) [(5)] emphasizes the nonadversary philosophy by providing, in accordance with the practice of some states, that decrees of dissolution or separation shall not be awarded to either party. Instead they are to specify the change in the status of the parties.

Since the Rules of Civil Practice are made applicable to proceedings under the Act, such procedural tools as discovery procedures, bills of particulars, etc., may be required in proper cases.

Obviously, the nonadversary nature of the proceedings makes such tools inappropriate to the issue of irretrievable breakdown and the court should not permit their use. In matters of property division, the propriety of separation or maintenance agreements, and of provision for children, these tools may be extremely useful, and are not precluded by the Act, if they are found in the state's arsenal of procedural weapons.

Case Notes

Oral Decree of Dissolution Improperly Granted at Hearing — Continuing Jurisdiction by District Court: At a hearing on the parties' petition for dissolution, the court orally granted the petition but reserved its judgment on the issues of custody, maintenance, and support. The Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly granted an oral decree of dissolution and was without jurisdiction to do so. The Supreme Court noted that under subsection (4) of this section, a decree includes a judgment and that under Rule 54(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), a judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties. In this case, because the District Court did not intend its decree to be its final determination, the Supreme Court held that the District Court had continuing jurisdiction over the rights of the parties following the oral decree. In re Marriage of Bukacek, 274 M 98, 907 P2d 931, 52 St. Rep. 1141 (1995).

Late Filing of Proposed Findings and Conclusions Allowed by Extension of Time: In a divorce proceeding, the wife filed proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law the day before the trial. On the day of the trial, the husband requested sanctions for late filing, and the judge prohibited the wife from presenting any evidence at trial. When reminded by the wife that he had previously agreed to allow her an extension of time to file her proposals, the judge withdrew the sanction. In the absence of a showing that the judge abused his discretion, the Supreme Court would not overturn the ruling. In re Marriage of Dirnberger, 237 M 398, 773 P2d 330, 46 St. Rep. 898 (1989).

Initial Pleadings: An action for dissolution of marriage is initiated by a petition and response as specified in this section; if there are further pleadings, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply to those pleadings. Knudson v. Knudson, 186 M 8, 606 P2d 130 (1980).

No Responsive Pleading Required: Section 40-4-121 does not require a response but merely limits the time within which a response may be filed. This construction is required both by the permissive terms of the provision and by reference to 40-4-103 and Rule 7(b), M.R.Civ.P., regarding the form of motions. A motion is not a pleading and does not require responsive pleadings, hence the husband's failure to file a response under 40-4-121 did not render the motion an order. Houtchens v. Houtchens, 181 M 70, 592 P2d 158 (1979).

Effect of Not Following Procedure Strictly: Even though procedure requirements were not strictly followed, this alone did not outweigh the "best interest of the child" standard. Lehman v. Billman, 178 M 367, 584 P2d 662 (1978).

Action in Rem — Decree in Absence of Party: A decree of dissolution affects the status of the parties and so is an action in rem. Therefore, the court did not err in entering a decree even in the absence of the respondent. In re Marriage of Blair, 178 M 220, 583 P2d 403 (1978).

Commissioners' Note

Subsection (a) [(1)] lists the three findings that a court must make before it has jurisdiction to enter a decree of dissolution of marriage: first, it must find that one party to the marriage has established an appropriate connection with the state; second, it must find that the marriage is irretrievably broken; and finally, to the extent it has jurisdiction to do so, it must have considered and passed on the issues of custody, support, maintenance, and property disposition. If the court lacks jurisdiction to act upon any of the matters listed in subsection (a) (3) [(1) (c)] without acting upon that matter, it may enter a decree of dissolution of marriage. Thus, if the court is acting upon the petition of one spouse only and the other spouse is not subject to the personal jurisdiction of the court, the court lacks jurisdiction to decide issues relating to maintenance, Vanderbilt v. Vanderbilt, 354 U.S. 416, 1 L.Ed.2d 1456, 77 S.Ct. 1360 (1957); Estin v. Estin, 334 U.S. 541, 92 L.Ed. 1561, 68 S.Ct. 1213, 1 A.L.R.2d 1412 (1948), or the distribution of property not before the court, see Fall v. Eastin, 215 U.S. 1, 54 L.Ed. 65, 30 S.Ct. 3, 23 LRANS 924, 17 Ann.Cas. 853 (1909); and may not have jurisdiction, acting alone to decide issues relating to support, consult the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act, or child custody, May v. Anderson, 345 U.S. 528, 97 L.Ed. 1221, 73 S.Ct. 840 (1953), consult the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. In such a case, the court has jurisdiction only to dissolve the marriage and it may enter its decree of dissolution after making the findings set forth in subsection (a) (1) and (2) [(1) (a) and (b)].

The 90 day period of subsection (a) (1) [(1) (a)] is intended to be continuous and to apply both to domiciliaries and to members of the armed services. It may be started at any time, but it must exist at the commencement of the action and it must have been maintained for 90 days next preceding the findings by the court. Obviously, dependent upon circumstances, it may commence, effectively, sometime before the initiation of the action. One who has just entered the forum state may commence the proceeding immediately, thus enabling the court to enter such temporary orders as are necessary to protect the rights of the parties. Since the test is domicil[e], the party need not remain physically present throughout the 90 day period, so long as he has acquired no new domicil[e]. Similarly, a member of the armed forces might be outside the boundary lines, if he remained "stationed" therein. A showing that either party satisfies, the 90 day requirement is sufficient; hence a petitioner may utilize fulfillment of the 90 day period by the respondent.

Subsection (a) (2) [(1) (b)] embodies the basic shift from fault to no-fault grounds for dissolution of the marriage which is the primary object of this part of the Act. Many terms might have been used to characterize the concept. "Irretrievably broken" was chosen because this has become a term of common use in the literature of divorce reform, and so has gained a significant meaning upon which judges may rely for guidance. It is closely related to the standards recently adopted in California ("irremediable breakdown") and in Iowa ("breakdown of the marriage relationship...no reasonable likelihood that the marriage can be preserved") and equates to the doctrinal result attained under the concept of incompatibility, Newman v. Newman, 391 P.2d 902 (Okla.1964) ("irremediable rift...such a conflict of personalities as to destroy the legitimate ends of matrimony and the possibility of reconciliation"). Two guidelines are set up for evidence sufficient to support a finding that the marriage is irretrievably broken: (i) that the parties have lived separate and apart for more than 180 days next preceding the commencement of the proceeding for dissolution; (ii) that there exists "serious marital discord adversely affecting the attitude of one or both of the parties toward the marriage." These provisions satisfy the desire of those who wish to have specific guidelines to assist the court in determining what is irretrievable breakdown. At the same time, the second provision retains all the judicial discretion to weigh all the evidence bearing upon the death of the marriage which was envisioned in the original draft of this section as approved by the Conference in St. Louis in 1970.

Subsection (a) (3) [(1) (c)] prescribes that the court must find specifically either that the conciliation provisions of Section 305 [40-4-107] do not apply or that they have been met. This guards against overlooking the Act's policy to encourage conciliation procedures in situations where there is promise of success.

The phrase, "considered, approved, or provided for," in subsection (a) (4) [(1) (d)] is intended to confer upon the court the authority to refuse to make any award, if the evidence justifies an outright denial, as well as the authority to make such allotment as the facts require. To avoid any doubt, the court is authorized expressly to provide for a later hearing to complete action on these matters, if necessary. Probably this would be within the general scope of judicial authority in most states.

Subsection (b) [(2)] means that the court may not grant a decree of legal separation over the objection of one of the parties. In cases where both parties are before the court, if one party requests a decree of legal separation and the other party requests a decree of dissolution, the court lacks jurisdiction to enter a decree of legal separation. If only one party is before the court and the court lacks personal jurisdiction over the other party, the court may enter a decree of legal separation at the petitioner's request. A similar provision is found in the California Family Law Act of 1969, California Civil Code section 4508(b).

Dissolution Decree Granting Ranch to Husband — Wife Not Entitled to Appreciation or Subject to Liability Accruing on Property — Judgment Interest Owing on Money Judgment: A dissolution decree entered in 1996 granted ranch property to the husband and a liquidated money judgment of $305,855 to the wife. When the remainder of the issues concerning the marital estate was finally addressed in 1999, the wife contended that the subsequent appreciation of the ranch marital assets must be accounted for in determining the final disposition of the 1996 decree. The Supreme Court held that the wife was not entitled either to appreciation or, conversely, to any liability that may have accrued on the property because the ranch was exclusively awarded to the husband. However, the wife was entitled to judgment interest on the money as a statutory right pursuant to 25-9-205. On remand, the Supreme Court applied the statutory 10% interest rate to the balance of the wife's money judgment that remained unpaid following entry of the decree, not including interest accruing during the pendancy of the appeal. The Supreme Court refigured the dollar amount due the wife after adjusting the figure, which had been incorrectly offset by the District Court because of the wife's alleged receipt of livestock and sales and an interest debt allegedly due to the husband's mother under a "conspiratorial sham" designed to deprive the wife of her interest in the farm property and to directly benefit the husband. In re Marriage of Pospisil, 2000 MT 132, 299 M 527, 1 P3d 364, 57 St. Rep. 547 (2000).

Analysis Regarding Irretrievable Breakdown Distinct From Criteria for Division of Property — Property Valuation at Time of Separation Proper: The analysis regarding irretrievable breakdown of a marriage is distinct from the criteria for division of the property of the marital estate. Here, the wife contended that the District Court improperly valued the estate at the time of the parties' separation because the marriage was not irretrievably broken until she filed the petition for dissolution. However, the point in time of irretrievable breakdown does not determine when the court values the marital estate or how the court distributes marital property, but rather provides the necessary basis for dissolving the marriage. It is the point at which, for practical purposes, the marital relationship ended, not the point of irretrievable breakdown, that is relevant to the valuation of the marital estate. In the present case, following the date of separation, the parties lived at separate locations, maintained separate financial and retirement accounts, made separate financial decisions, did not jointly own property, and did not contribute either monetary or nonmonetary resources to each other for 9 years. The District Court did not err in using the separation date as the point of valuation of the marital estate, rather than the date on which the petition for dissolution was filed. In re Marriage of Geror, 2000 MT 60, 299 M 33, 996 P2d 381, 57 St. Rep. 285 (2000), following In re Marriage of Kraut, 215 M 170, 696 P2d 981, 42 St. Rep. 268 (1985).

Determination That Marriage Irretrievably Broken Judicial Function, Not Conclusive Presumption: Before a court can enter a decree of dissolution, it must find that the marriage is irretrievably broken. The determination that a marriage is irretrievably broken is a judicial function, rather than a conclusive presumption arising from the parties' testimony or from the petition for dissolution. The finding of irretrievable breakdown must be supported by evidence that the parties have lived apart for more than 180 days prior to the filing of the petition for dissolution or that there is serious marital discord that adversely affects the attitude of one or both of the parties toward the marriage. If the court finds that the marriage is irretrievably broken and satisfies the other requirements of this section, the court shall enter a decree of dissolution. In re Marriage of Geror, 2000 MT 60, 299 M 33, 996 P2d 381, 57 St. Rep. 285 (2000), following In re Marriage of Kraut, 215 M 170, 696 P2d 981, 42 St. Rep. 268 (1985).

Oral Decree of Dissolution Improperly Granted at Hearing — Continuing Jurisdiction by District Court: At a hearing on the parties' petition for dissolution, the court orally granted the petition but reserved its judgment on the issues of custody, maintenance, and support. The Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly granted an oral decree of dissolution and was without jurisdiction to do so. The Supreme Court noted that under 40-4-103(4), a decree includes a judgment and that under Rule 54(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), a judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties. In this case, because the District Court did not intend its decree to be its final determination, the Supreme Court held that the District Court had continuing jurisdiction over the rights of the parties following the oral decree. In re Marriage of Bukacek, 274 M 98, 907 P2d 931, 52 St. Rep. 1141 (1995).

Applicability of Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act — Failure to Appear: Husband contended that the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, 50 U.S.C. App. 501, et seq., precluded the District Court from dissolving the marriage and distributing marital property without giving him an opportunity to defend against wife's claims because he was stationed with the military throughout the proceedings. Section 520 of the Act sets forth procedural safeguards and relief when there is a default of appearance by a defendant in the military, but in order for that section to apply, the defendant must fail to make any appearance in the proceedings whatsoever, not simply fail to appear at a single stage of the proceedings. Because husband filed a response, a counterpetition, a financial declaration, and motions, there was no default of any appearance within the meaning of the Act that would preclude dissolution. In re Marriage of Miller, 260 M 15, 858 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 912 (1993).

Marriage Dissolution Brought by Tribal Member Against Non-Indian Spouse — Jurisdiction to Apportion Indian Trust Land: Wife who was a member of the Blackfeet Tribe sought a marriage dissolution in state court from her husband who was a non-Indian. The District Court granted the dissolution but held it did not have jurisdiction to apportion the parties' marital estate, which consisted of about 4,000 acres of Indian trust land on the Blackfeet Reservation, and granted wife's motion to dismiss. On appeal, husband contended that the state court had jurisdiction, relying on a provision in the Blackfeet Tribal Law and Order Code that all divorces must be consummated in accordance with Montana law. However, that provision did not cede jurisdiction to the state but merely governed the tribal court's choice of law. While the state has an interest in ensuring the existence of a forum in which marital property within its borders may be apportioned upon a dissolution, that interest is met by the availability of an alternative forum in the Blackfeet Tribal Court. The state's interest in the property and proceedings is inconsequential compared with the federal and tribal interests at stake. Therefore, the District Court did not err in concluding that it lacked jurisdiction to adjudicate the disposition of the Indian trust land that was the parties' only significant marital asset. In re Marriage of Wellman, 258 M 131, 852 P2d 559, 50 St. Rep. 462 (1993), following White Mtn. Apache v. Bracker, 448 US 136, 65 L Ed 2d 665, 100 S Ct 2578 (1980), and N. Mex. v. Mescalero Apache Tribe, 462 US 324, 76 L Ed 2d 611, 103 S Ct 2375 (1983), distinguishing Sheppard v. Sheppard, 655 P2d 895 (Idaho 1982), and followed in Smith v. McKeon, 284 M 528, 946 P2d 117, 54 St. Rep. 990 (1997), as to a trial court's lack of authority to order an appraisal of Indian trust land.

Entering Decree of Dissolution Prior to Judgment Relating to Disposition of Marital Property Improper: The District Court entered a decree of dissolution on November 2, 1987, but did not enter final judgment regarding disposition of the marital property until February 6, 1989, in violation of this section. Although not reversible error in this case, the property disposition judgment should always be entered prior to the decree of dissolution in order to avoid intolerable delays. In re Marriage of Skinner, 240 M 299, 783 P2d 1350, 46 St. Rep. 2141 (1989).

Retention of Jurisdiction to Reexamine Future Custody Arrangements: In light of a bitter and hostile custody battle, it was not error for a court to retain jurisdiction to reexamine physical custody arrangements after seeing how initial joint custody arrangements developed. In re Marriage of Allen, 237 M 64, 771 P2d 578, 46 St. Rep. 624 (1989).

General Jurisdictional Rules for Divorce, Custody, and Child Support: A divorce action is generally in rem as to the status of the parties and in personam as to other matters. Thus, the lower court did not need in personam jurisdiction to grant dissolution to wife living in Montana when husband was in Tennessee. The court could grant the wife custody of the children living in Montana, but not of the child living in Tennessee with his father, since 40-4-211 specifically granted jurisdiction to determine custody of children living in Montana. The court was without jurisdiction to award child support because the court did not have in personam jurisdiction over the father under Rule 4, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). In re Marriage of Appleton, 234 M 345, 763 P2d 658, 45 St. Rep. 1959 (1988).

Mutual Failure to File Support Brief and Response Pleading — Technical Errors Cured by Oral Argument: Husband pointed out that wife filed no pleading in response to his motion to void her divorce decree and no brief in support of her motion for modification of child support and that thus the Montana Uniform District Court Rules dictated his motion should be deemed "well-taken" and hers deemed "without merit". However, wife did file an affidavit in support of her motion, and that is all husband filed in support of his motion. Neither party responded to the other's motion. The lower court held oral argument on both motions, thus giving each party a chance to argue in support of its motion and against the other's. This was a wise course, and the Supreme Court would not overturn the decision on technical grounds. In re Marriage of Appleton, 234 M 345, 763 P2d 658, 45 St. Rep. 1959 (1988).

Bifurcation of Question of Common-Law Marriage From Issues of Child Custody, Property Distribution, and Maintenance: Subsection (1)(d) of this section did not prohibit bifurcation of proceedings (to determine if parties had a common-law marriage) before hearing evidence on custody, property distribution, and maintenance. The trial court lacked authority to grant the requested relief until a determination of the marital relationship was completed because it could not dissolve or equitably distribute the fruits of that which may not exist. Bifurcation was well within the wide discretion of the court. In re Marriage of Geertz, 232 M 141, 755 P2d 34, 45 St. Rep. 942 (1988).

Final Custody Plan and Maintenance Schedule Required: Where the District Court on one hand stated that the sale of the family home "should be retained as an available option" and on the other hand set terms of a 30-day buy-out or sale period, the case was remanded for determination of a final custody plan and maintenance schedule, since resolution of custody and maintenance hinged on sale of the home. In re Marriage of Ensign, 227 M 357, 739 P2d 479, 44 St. Rep. 1146 (1987).

Petitioner Present in State Preceding Dissolution but Not Preceding Filing of Dissolution Petition — Residency Requirement Met: Husband spent about 1 ½ months in New Mexico during the 120-day period preceding his filing for dissolution, and wife claimed the District Court did not have jurisdiction over the dissolution proceeding as a result. However, the Supreme Court noted that under this section the District Court need only find that one party was domiciled in Montana for 90 days next preceding the making of the findings. Since both sides agreed husband was domiciled in Montana for 90 days preceding the actual dissolution order and findings, the District Court properly assumed jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Cox, 226 M 176, 736 P2d 97, 44 St. Rep. 567 (1987).

Paternity Contested After Adjudication of Marital Dissolution — Relitigation Barred by Collateral Estoppel: When paternity was contested in response to an action to collect past child support payments, the District Court properly ruled that the issue of paternity had previously been adjudicated during the marriage dissolution proceeding and that relitigation of the issue was barred by collateral estoppel. In re Marriage of Holland, 224 M 414, 730 P2d 410, 43 St. Rep. 2293 (1986).

Dissolution of Marriage — Hearing Requirement Not Jurisdictional: Wife sought to have judgment dissolving her marriage declared void and vacated under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), on the grounds that the trial judge did not hold a hearing and receive evidence on the issue of irretrievable breakdown of marriage and was therefore without jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage. Supreme Court affirmed District Court decision that the judgment was premature because there was no hearing, but that failure to hold a hearing was a procedural rather than jurisdictional defect rendering the judgment voidable but not void. The premature summary judgment in this case is not yet ripe for appeal because issues collateral to the dissolution remain undecided. The premature summary judgment could be reviewed by the Supreme Court at this point only with a Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), certification, which plaintiff had not attempted. In re Marriage of Kraut, 215 M 170, 696 P2d 981, 42 St. Rep. 268 (1985), followed, regarding the need for evidence and hearing but not for express testimony on irretrievable breakdown, in In re Marriage of Miller, 260 M 15, 858 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 912 (1993), and In re Marriage of Geror, 2000 MT 60, 299 M 33, 996 P2d 381, 57 St. Rep. 285 (2000), regarding the determination that a marriage is irretrievably broken is a judicial function, rather than a conclusive presumption arising from the parties' testimony or from the petition for dissolution.

Action to Be Dismissed Upon Death of Either Spouse During Pendency of Dissolution Proceeding — ". . . until death do you part": One spouse in a dissolution action died shortly after a hearing was held on his petition for dissolution of marriage, but no judgment had yet been entered, either written or oral. In affirming the District Court in dismissing the petition, the Supreme Court held that death terminates a marriage as a matter of law; therefore, there is nothing for the court to dissolve. The death of either spouse during the pendency of a dissolution action prior to the entry of judgment divests the court of all jurisdiction over the action, including matters involving the distribution of property. In re Marriage of Lawrence, 212 M 327, 687 P2d 1026, 41 St. Rep. 1771 (1984).

Overly Extended Proceedings — Valuation of Property — Present Fair Market Values to Be Used: The parties were granted a decree of dissolution on May 17, 1978. The decree did not make a property disposition, but rather the District Court expressly reserved jurisdiction to make the disposition at a later date. A special master completed a report valuing stocks and oil and gas interests on January 31, 1981. On March 3, 1981, the property distribution hearing was held. The court made findings of facts and conclusions of law on June 22 and entered judgment on September 16, 1982. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted the time lapse of 34 months from the date of dissolution to the hearing on property distribution. The Supreme Court encouraged District Court to conclude all matters upon entry of a decree of dissolution. In unusual cases where it is not able to make the property distribution at the time, the District Court must make written findings that a postponement of the property disposition is in the best interest of the parties and must set either a time for a specific hearing date or a time period for final disposition. Present fair market values should be used for valuation although there may be more than one valuation point. There was abuse of discretion because there were substantial differences in the value of assets from the court's valuation dates to the time of the dispositional hearing. In re Marriage of Krause, 200 M 368, 654 P2d 963, 39 St. Rep. 1809 (1982). (Decided prior to 1985 amendment that deleted the provision allowing for a separate hearing to complete the matters stated in subsection (1)(d), which was amended by sec. 1, Ch. 392, L. 1985.)

Domicile — Failure to Find — Waiver on Appeal: Failure of husband suing for divorce to except to the findings of the trial court on the grounds that the court did not find that the marriage was irretrievably broken and that one of the parties had been domiciled in Montana for 90 days was fatal to his claim on appeal where the substantial rights of the parties were not affected. The court's failure was merely a technical oversight, and the record supported jurisdiction over both the subject matter and the parties. Laster v. Laster, 197 M 470, 643 P2d 597, 39 St. Rep. 737 (1982).

Jurisdiction Over Indian Divorce:

In 1979, the Northern Cheyenne Appellate Court issued an advisory opinion holding that the tribal court has exclusive jurisdiction over dissolution of marriage actions arising between members of the tribe residing within the reservation. The Supreme Court applied the doctrine of abstention as a matter of comity with the Northern Cheyenne Tribe. It held that there is no basis for the state to assume jurisdiction that would interfere with tribal self-government. The Supreme Court expressly overruled Bad Horse v. Bad Horse, 163 M 445, 517 P2d 893 (1974), because of the interpretation of tribal law in the advisory opinion. Limpy v. Limpy, 195 M 314, 636 P2d 266, 38 St. Rep. 1885 (1981). See also In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 M 399, 956 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 147 (1998).

State had jurisdiction over divorce action brought by an Indian plaintiff against an Indian defendant, both residing on an Indian reservation, since federal law has not preempted state activities in the area of marriage and divorce and the tribe had determined not to exercise jurisdiction in that area by virtue of a tribal enactment. State ex rel. Iron Bear v. District Court, 162 M 335, 512 P2d 1292 (1973), distinguished in Fisher v. District Court, 424 US 382, 47 L Ed 2d 106, 96 S Ct 943 (1976).

Property Distribution — Outside of Decree for Dissolution: In 40-4-104 the Legislature intended to grant the District Court the power to sever a decree of property from a decree of dissolution. The interests of justice and judicial economy are best served by giving District Courts broad discretion in the conduct of their proceedings and the severance of the various elements of dissolution decrees. In re Marriage of Miller, 189 M 356, 616 P2d 313, 37 St. Rep. 1523 (1980). (Decided prior to 1985 amendment that deleted the provision allowing for a separate hearing to complete the matters stated in subsection (1)(d), which was amended by sec. 1, Ch. 392, L. 1985.)

Evidentiary Hearing Required: A District Court may not grant a judgment on the pleadings dissolving a marriage when both parties allege the marriage is irretrievably broken without an evidentiary hearing and entry of findings to that effect supported by the evidence. State ex rel. Marlenee v. District Court, 181 M 59, 592 P2d 153 (1979).

Admissibility of Evidence Regarding Disposable Income: In dissolution of marriage proceedings, testimony elicited from husband consisting of figures as to husband's "disposable income" from memorandum that had been prepared by accountant for husband was clearly hearsay, and testimony on issue of income or money available to husband should have come from husband's own personal knowledge based on his tax returns, or, if an exhibit was used, from person preparing it who would be subject to cross-examination. In re Marriage of Capener, 177 M 437, 582 P2d 326 (1978).

Findings Required: Unless proper findings and conclusions are entered in first instance, modification of divorce proceedings, should they occur, will be meaningless inasmuch as there is nothing upon which court may act, absent proper findings and conclusions. In re Marriage of Capener, 177 M 437, 582 P2d 326 (1978).

Divorce Granted to Defendant: Where plaintiff filed complaint seeking divorce, then defendant filed cross-complaint, judge had discretion to find that plaintiff had not proven his allegations but that defendant had proven hers, and to grant divorce to defendant. Whitman v. Whitman, 164 M 124, 519 P2d 966 (1974).

40-4-105. Procedure — commencement — pleadings — abolition of existing defenses.

Commissioners' Note

Subsection (a) [(1)] provides for commencement of proceedings in whatever way is required by the local practice rules or act.

Subsection (b) [(2)] lists the necessary allegations of the petition. Other appropriate allegations may be included at the pleader's discretion. Residence, of course, has the meaning "domicil[e]," as this is made the basis of jurisdiction in Section 302 (a) (1) [40-4-104] and the comment thereto. If a petitioner is a member of the armed services, the allegation of residence in the state is satisfied by an allegation of the length of time petitioner has been stationed within the state as provided in Section 302 (a) (1) [40-4-104]. "Occupation" means vocation, not avocation. If the petitioner has grounds for relying upon both (i) and (ii) in support of the allegation of irretrievable breakdown, he may allege them conjunctively, and, if the proof supports either one, he will be entitled to his decree under Section 302 [40-4-104]. Subsection (b) (5) [(2) (e)] does not require the parties to allege their arrangements as to property division, since, under Section 306 [40-4-201] they may choose to keep these arrangements private. In such cases, the court's duty under Section 302(a) (3) [40-4-104(1) (c)] to consider, approve, or make provision for property disposition may be satisfied by inquiring of both parties whether they have freely arrived at a mutually satisfactory disposition of their property.

Subsection (c) [(3)] permits joint initiation of the proceeding by both spouses, thereby shifting from the traditional doctrine of the law forbidding so-called collusive divorce.

Subsection (d) [(4)] provides for service of process, petition, or notice, as the case may be, in the manner prescribed by local practice rules or codes, but requires a verified response, if any, and prescribes its filing within 30 days after date of service. This is another of the procedures designed to affirm the variance of the non-fault divorce procedure from the traditional litigation based on fault grounds.

Subsection (e) [(5)] abolishes the traditional defenses to divorce and legal separation. A state that recognizes other defenses should add those to the list in this subsection and again in the specific repealer, Section 504(3). The intention is that the sole defense, other than jurisdictional defenses, to dissolution of marriage or legal separation will be that the marriage is not irretrievably broken.

Subsection (f) [(6)] is designed to insure to the court full authority to cause additional parties to be joined, whenever necessary to the complete effectuation of any of its duties or functions in administering the Act. Under the procedures of some states, it appears that it is necessary to provide expressly for this authority. The method for serving these new parties will be any method available under the state's general procedural rules or statutes.

Contingent Termination — Request for Federal Exemptions: Section 104, Ch. 552, L. 1997, contained the following contingent termination provisions and order that the Department of Public Health and Human Services seek federal exemptions:

"(1) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date of the suspension if the federal government suspends federal payments to this state for this state's child support enforcement program and for this state's program relating to temporary assistance to needy families because of this state's failure to enact law as required by the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(2) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date that a final decision is rendered in federal court invalidating the child support provisions of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(3) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that one of the following provisions is no longer required by federal law because of repeal of or amendment to federal statutes that require that provision, the provision terminates on the date the certification takes effect:

(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];

(b) [section 11] [40-5-924];

(c) [sections 22 through 24] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, and 40-4-105];

(d) [section 93] [50-15-403];

(e) [section 95] [61-5-107];

(f) the bracketed provisions in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116].

(4) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that the federal government has granted this state an exemption from one of the following provisions, the provision terminates on the date the exemption takes effect:

(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];

(b) [section 11] [40-5-924];

(c) [sections 22 through 24] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, and 40-4-105];

(d) [section 93] [50-15-403, certification filed April 24, 1998];

(e) [section 95] [61-5-107];

(f) the bracketed provisions in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116].

(5) (a) The department of public health and human services shall do everything reasonably within its power to obtain, as soon as possible, federal government exemptions from the provisions listed in subsection (4).

(b) Because section 395(c) of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (PRWORA) allows a grace period for states to amend their constitutions in order to comply with PRWORA and because the Montana legislature believes that the section of PRWORA prohibiting a jury trial in a paternity proceeding violates Article II, section 26, of the Montana constitution and is therefore rejected, the department of public health and human services shall seek a federal government exemption from the jury trial prohibition in PRWORA as the first exemption it seeks under subsection (5)(a). [This exemption was received on December 8, 1997.]

(6) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate July 1, 1999.

(7) If the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminates, the code commissioner is instructed to renumber subsections, adjust internal references, and correct grammar and arrangement."

Montana Changes: Montana deletes subsection (a) of the Uniform Act, and provides for 20 days in which to respond instead of 30 days in subsection (3). Montana also adds the language: "No decree may be entered until 20 days after the date of service" in subsection (3).

Case Notes

Unintentional Default for Failure to Appear in Dissolution Proceeding — Abuse of Discretion in Refusal to Set Aside Default Judgment: On November 9, 1998, the wife gave her husband a copy of a petition for dissolution and summons. In early December 1998, the wife's Montana attorney contacted the husband by telephone at his home in Nevada and asked if the husband had reviewed the petition. The husband replied that he had only looked at it briefly and had not retained counsel. Following the conversation, the husband signed the acknowledgment of receipt of summons and petition and sent it back to the attorney, who did not receive it until December 10. However, because the acknowledgment had not been received within the specified timeframe, the attorney had the husband served personally on December 8. Believing that he had responded appropriately and that the wife would propose a property settlement agreement, the husband took no further action. On December 29, 1998, default judgment was entered against the husband and on January 5, 1999, a final decree was entered, apportioning most of the marital debt to the husband. Upon receipt of the notice of entry of judgment, the husband retained counsel and, within a week, filed a motion to alter or amend judgment, for a new trial, or for relief from judgment. Both parties were granted extensions for further briefing. Subsequently, the parties realized that because the District Court had not issued a formal opinion within 60 days of the motion, as required in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the husband's motion was considered denied. He appealed, contending that he had met his burden for setting aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court agreed. The husband's default was unintentional, based on the mistaken belief that the wife's attorney was going to prepare a property settlement proposal and that the husband's acknowledgment of service was the only act required of him until the parties negotiated an agreement. The Supreme Court favors resolution on the merits, and because the husband fulfilled the requirements of Rules 55(c) and 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the District Court's refusal to set aside the default judgment amounted to an abuse of discretion and reversible error. In re Marriage of Winckler, 2000 MT 116, 299 M 428, 2 P3d 229, 57 St. Rep. 486 (2000).

No Need for Testimony or Findings on Question of Pregnancy: Statutory requirements are met if the petition for dissolution sets forth whether the wife is pregnant. Testimony and findings on the subject are not required. In re Marriage of Miller, 260 M 15, 858 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 912 (1993).

Intervention in Divorce Denied to Parents Merely Claiming Mortgage Interest in Couple's Home: The District Court Judge did not err in denying parents' motion to intervene in their son's marriage dissolution proceeding to protect parents' interest in a home the parents alleged was built with the parents' $63,630 loan to the married couple. The daughter-in-law sought the home free and clear of any obligation to her husband's parents. Parents' rights in the home were not the central issue in the case, and any decree would not prohibit them from bringing separate proceedings against the son, the daughter-in-law, or both. Furthermore, parents had no prima facie case because they had no written evidence of a debt, and a mortgage on real property can only be created by a written instrument. In re Marriage of Aniballi, 255 M 384, 842 P2d 342, 49 St. Rep. 995 (1992).

Plaintiff's Understandable Failure to Plead Pertinent Facts — No Constructive Fraud: Wife pleaded a 1965 marriage and did not mention husband's 1972 Tennessee divorce obtained while he was living in that state and his wife was living in Texas, and she did not plead a common-law marriage or mention that her husband lived in Tennessee. However, husband did not inform wife of the Tennessee divorce until almost 8 years after it occurred, when she told him she was going to sue for a Montana divorce, and it was understandable she might not believe him. When wife filed, she knew of no address for husband other than his most recent (Montana) address. She filed on August 1, and he was found and served in Tennessee on August 11. In addition, the two had lived together and held themselves out as husband and wife in Texas and Montana; therefore, a common-law marriage existed. Wife's divorce and the child support decree were not based on extrinsic, constructive fraud by wife. A court hearing a divorce action sits in equity. Given husband's acts of deceit and wife's good faith in pleading, the Supreme Court saw no reason to grant husband equitable relief by voiding wife's decree. In re Marriage of Appleton, 234 M 345, 763 P2d 658, 45 St. Rep. 1959 (1988).

Division of Marital Estate — Method of Pleading: A petition for marriage dissolution need not set forth how the petitioner believes the marital estate should be divided because the purpose of the petition is simply to inform the trial court of the parties' property acquired during the course of the marriage, and that the court should equitably divide it in the event the parties cannot reach an agreement in this regard. Knudson v. Knudson, 186 M 8, 606 P2d 130 (1980).

40-4-107. Irretrievable breakdown.

Commissioners' Note

This section, with others, embodies a new approach to dissolution of marriage. It provides that the only basis upon which a marriage may be dissolved is that a court has found that the marriage has broken down irretrievably. The traditional grounds for divorce, which assumed that one party had been at fault by committing an act giving rise to a cause of action for divorce, are abolished. The legal assignment of blame is here replaced by a search for the reality of the marital situation: whether the marriage has ended in fact. The public policy embodied in this section was recognized in DeBurgh v. DeBurgh, 250 P.2d 598, 601, 39 Cal.2d 858, 863-44 (1952) (Traynor, J.): "when a marriage has failed and the family has ceased to be a unit, the purposes of family life are no longer served and divorce will be permitted." California, Iowa, and other states have adopted the non-fault approach to marriage dissolution proposed by this section.

This section makes the determination of whether the marriage is irretrievably broken, in all cases, a matter for determination by the court, "after hearing," which means "upon evidence." Shields v. Utah Idaho Central R.R. Co., 59 S.Ct. 160, 305 U.S. 177, 83 L.Ed. 111 (1938); Juster Bros. v. Christgau, 7 N.W.2d 501, 214 Minn. 108 (1943); State ex rel. Ellis v. State Road Com., 131 S.E. 7, 100 W.Va. 531 (1925). In procedural terms, it distinguishes two types of cases. In the group of cases covered by subsection (a) [(1)], the only evidence presented to the court supports the allegation of the petition that the marriage is irretrievably broken. Either both parties have so stated whether in the petition or by oral or written testimony before the court, or one party has done so without objection from the other. In this group of cases, the court must make a finding, after hearing, whether the marriage is irretrievably broken. The Conference concluded, even as to this category of cases, that the determination of breakdown should be a judicial function rather than a conclusive presumption arising from the parties' testimony or from the petition. This decision accords with the position taken in California and in Iowa. The alternative of adjournment, provided by subsection (b) [(2)] for cases in which there is a dispute as to whether the marriage is irretrievably broken, is not available in these cases. In most cases falling under the terms of subsection (a) [(1)], it is anticipated that the court will find that the marriage is irretrievably broken because there will be no evidence before the court that might support a contrary finding. In rare cases, however, the court may not find the evidence credible. In such cases, the court normally will permit the parties to produce other evidence that the court may find persuasive. For this purpose, normal practice will permit the parties to request that the hearing be continued for a short time. Power to continue is implicit in the power to hear.

Subsection (b) [(2)] covers the situation in which the parties are in dispute as to whether their marriage is irretrievably broken. In these circumstances, the court is directed to consider the factors relevant to marital breakdown, including the petitioner's reasons for seeking a dissolution of the marriage and the prospect that the parties may achieve a reconciliation, and to decide forthwith or at an adjourned hearing whether the marriage is irretrievably broken.

Because the defense of recrimination and other concepts associated with fault are abolished by the Act (sections 303(e) [40-4-105(5)] and 503), the court may not refuse to find that the marriage has broken down irretrievably merely because of petitioner's conduct during the marriage. If the court decides to adjourn the matter as provided in subsection (b) (2) [(2) (b)], it may suggest that the parties seek counseling during the period of adjournment. The waiting period must be no shorter than thirty days and, if possible in light of the court's calendar, no longer than sixty days after the previous hearing. The court must make its final decision as to whether the marriage is irretrievably broken at the adjourned hearing. The section does not contemplate more than one adjourned hearing, although certainly a hearing not completed at one session may be continued. The power of either party, or of the court, to require a conciliation conference, is in aid of the policy to encourage conciliation, and, in appropriate cases, resort to counseling, without invoking the controversial tool of compulsory counseling.

Section 305 [40-4-107] intentionally makes no distinction between childless marriages and those with minor children. If the parties establish that their marriage has broken down irretrievably, the court is not authorized to make a contrary finding because of the impact of a dissolution of the marriage upon the minor children. Under former law, if the parties established the existence of a ground for divorce and no defenses existed, the court lacked jurisdiction to deny the divorce simply because of its views about divorce or the impact of divorce on minor children. There is no intention to change this rule. The court's power in this regard is limited to seeing that provision has been made for the custody and support of minor children as contemplated by Section 302(a) (4) [40-4-104(1) (d)].

Because it is expected that the parties themselves will be the primary source of evidence as to irretrievable breakdown, the Act has eliminated any requirement of corroboration.

The Conference took no position as to whether a family court should be established as an adjunct to the Act, because it felt that the subject was one in which uniformity was not essential, and, indeed, that uniformity by statute would be impossible, in view of differing state constitutional provisions. The Act does not forbid the creation of a family court, or the use of a family court division within a court having jurisdiction over divorce and related subjects.

Subsection (c) [(3)] insures that the court, in finding irretrievable breakdown, will consider whether there is any reasonable prospect of reconciliation. The remedy for a determination of any relevant fact issue, contrary to the evidence, is afforded by the usual channels of appeal.

Case Notes

Analysis Regarding Irretrievable Breakdown Distinct From Criteria for Division of Property — Property Valuation at Time of Separation Proper: The analysis regarding irretrievable breakdown of a marriage is distinct from the criteria for division of the property of the marital estate. Here, the wife contended that the District Court improperly valued the estate at the time of the parties' separation because the marriage was not irretrievably broken until she filed the petition for dissolution. However, the point in time of irretrievable breakdown does not determine when the court values the marital estate or how the court distributes marital property, but rather provides the necessary basis for dissolving the marriage. It is the point at which, for practical purposes, the marital relationship ended, not the point of irretrievable breakdown, that is relevant to the valuation of the marital estate. In the present case, following the date of separation, the parties lived at separate locations, maintained separate financial and retirement accounts, made separate financial decisions, did not jointly own property, and did not contribute either monetary or nonmonetary resources to each other for 9 years. The District Court did not err in using the separation date as the point of valuation of the marital estate, rather than the date on which the petition for dissolution was filed. In re Marriage of Geror, 2000 MT 60, 299 M 33, 996 P2d 381, 57 St. Rep. 285 (2000), following In re Marriage of Kraut, 215 M 170, 696 P2d 981, 42 St. Rep. 268 (1985).

Determination That Marriage Irretrievably Broken Judicial Function, Not Conclusive Presumption: Before a court can enter a decree of dissolution, it must find that the marriage is irretrievably broken. The determination that a marriage is irretrievably broken is a judicial function, rather than a conclusive presumption arising from the parties' testimony or from the petition for dissolution. The finding of irretrievable breakdown must be supported by evidence that the parties have lived apart for more than 180 days prior to the filing of the petition for dissolution or that there is serious marital discord that adversely affects the attitude of one or both of the parties toward the marriage. If the court finds that the marriage is irretrievably broken and satisfies the other requirements of 40-4-104, the court shall enter a decree of dissolution. In re Marriage of Geror, 2000 MT 60, 299 M 33, 996 P2d 381, 57 St. Rep. 285 (2000), following In re Marriage of Kraut, 215 M 170, 696 P2d 981, 42 St. Rep. 268 (1985).

Indians — Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Dissolution of Marriage — Different Residences of Parties — Factors to Be Considered — Bertelson Followed: Stacey, an enrolled member of the Fort Peck Tribes, married Shane, a non-Indian. After the marriage ceremony, Stacey returned to the Fort Peck Indian Reservation and Shane went to Forsyth, where his parents lived and where he worked. Some time later, Stacey had a child who also became an enrolled member and lived with Stacey on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. Still later, Shane filed a dissolution action in a state District Court. The District Court ordered joint custody and ordered that Shane would be the primary residential custodian. Approximately 1 month later, the Fort Peck Tribal Court awarded temporary custody to Stacey. She then filed a motion in District Court under Rules 12(h) and 60, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to dismiss Shane's dissolution action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The District Court held that it had subject matter jurisdiction over the case and issued a final decree of dissolution. In that decree, the District Court held that the parties' child had significant contacts both off and on the reservation, held that the District Court shared concurrent jurisdiction with the tribal court, and therefore denied Stacey's motion to dismiss. The Supreme Court reviewed its previous holdings regarding tribal jurisdiction and child custody jurisdiction under the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. The Supreme Court also reviewed the purposes of the Indian Child Welfare Act, which, while not strictly applicable to the case before it, cautions that state courts should be careful not to erode the sovereignty of tribes and tribal courts. In reliance upon In re Bertelson, 189 M 524, 617 P2d 121 (1980), the Supreme Court held that the best interests of the child should be determined and followed in deciding whether a state or tribal court has jurisdiction for the purposes of awarding custody but that when an Indian child resides off the reservation, state courts and tribal courts share concurrent jurisdiction. The Supreme Court then held, in further reliance upon Bertelson, that even when jurisdiction is concurrent, it does not mean that states courts should exercise jurisdiction and that in deciding whether to exercise concurrent jurisdiction, the state courts should consider: (1) 40-4-102, 40-4-211, 40-7-108, and this section; (2) certain policy issues; and (3) the residence of the parties pursuant to 1-1-215. For this reason, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for a determination of the residence of Stacey and her child, saying that if the District Court determines that both reside on the reservation, the District Court must dismiss the case. However, if the District Court finds that Stacey's child is not a resident of the reservation and that the District Court shares jurisdiction with the tribal court, the District Court must then consider factors from Bertelson, previously discussed by the Supreme Court, to determine whether the District Court or the tribal court is better able to determine the best interests of the child. Voidable Judgment — No Reason to Set Aside: Although the District Court's summary judgment on issue of dissolution of marriage based on irretrievable breakdown was voidable for lack of a required hearing, it would not be set aside on appeal because the appellant failed to show that the premature judgment had denied her substantial rights. In re Marriage of Kraut, 220 M 267, 714 P2d 167, 43 St. Rep. 350 (1986).

Dissolution of Marriage — Hearing Requirement Not Jurisdictional: Wife sought to have judgment dissolving her marriage declared void and vacated under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), on the grounds that the trial judge did not hold a hearing and receive evidence on the issue of irretrievable breakdown of marriage and was therefore without jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage. Supreme Court affirmed District Court decision that the judgment was premature because there was no hearing, but that failure to hold a hearing was a procedural rather than jurisdictional defect rendering the judgment voidable but not void. The premature summary judgment in this case is not yet ripe for appeal because issues collateral to the dissolution remain undecided. The premature summary judgment could be reviewed by the Supreme Court at this point only with a Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), certification, which plaintiff had not attempted. In re Marriage of Kraut, 215 M 170, 696 P2d 981, 42 St. Rep. 268 (1985), followed, regarding the need for evidence and hearing but not for express testimony on irretrievable breakdown, in In re Marriage of Miller, 260 M 15, 858 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 912 (1993), and In re Marriage of Geror, 2000 MT 60, 299 M 33, 996 P2d 381, 57 St. Rep. 285 (2000), regarding the determination that a marriage is irretrievably broken is a judicial function, rather than a conclusive presumption arising from the parties' testimony or from the petition for dissolution.

Failure to Find Irretrievable Breakdown — Waiver on Appeal: Failure of husband suing for divorce to except to the findings of the trial court on the grounds that the court did not find that the marriage was irretrievably broken and that one of the parties had been domiciled in Montana for 90 days was fatal to his claim on appeal where the substantial rights of the parties were not affected. The court's failure was merely a technical oversight, and the record supported jurisdiction over both the subject matter and the parties. Laster v. Laster, 197 M 470, 643 P2d 597, 39 St. Rep. 737 (1982).

Hearing and Findings Required: The parties both alleged that the marriage was irretrievably broken. They entered a judgment on the pleadings. The Supreme Court held that the judgment was prematurely entered. The specific statute, 40-4-107, controls and requires the court to make findings supported by evidence after a hearing. State ex rel. Marlenee v. District Court, 181 M 59, 592 P2d 153 (1979).

Commissioners' Note

Subsection (a) [(1)] abolishes interlocutory periods in those states which have them. The decree of dissolution or separation will be effective when entered, subject to the right of appeal. The second sentence of subsection (a)[(1)] is intended to authorize an appeal from a decree of dissolution which does not challenge the decree insofar as it is based on a finding that the marriage is irretrievably broken. In such cases, either party is free to remarry as soon as the time for taking appeal has expired, despite the fact that an appeal which does not challenge the dissolution may be pending.

Subsection (b) [(2)] permits either party to a proceeding for legal separation to move, six months after entry of the decree, to convert the decree of legal separation into a decree of dissolution of marriage. The section does not authorize the court to deny the motion. In such cases, the court will enter its order that the original decree be deemed a decree of dissolution of marriage, as of the date the motion for conversion is made.

Subsection (c) [(3)] establishes a procedure for the registration of a decree of dissolution of marriage or of legal separation in the place where the marriage was originally registered. The purpose of this subsection is to aid in the often difficult problem of proving whether a marriage has been terminated.

Subsection (d) [(4)] expressly authorizes restoration of the maiden name or any former name of a wife, upon dissolution of a marriage or declaration of its invalidity. By the better authority, this power exists in the court without express provision. Reinken v. Reinken, 351 Ill. 409, 639 (1933); W. v. H., 103 N.J.Super. 24, 240 A.2d 501 (1968); Day v. Day, 1 P.2d 123, 137 Ore. 159 (1931); Hartman v. Chumley, 266 S.W.2d 444 (Tex.Civ.App.1924). This provision removes all doubt as to judicial power. Whether the provision as to the power being exercised "upon request by the wife" precludes action by the court upon its own initiative in a proper instance may be a matter for judicial construction. One ill-reasoned opinion so holds, as to the words if the wife "so desires". Terrell v. Terrell, 352 S.W.2d 195 (Ky.1961). The less preemptive language of this provision, in connection with the general principle of the Act that the rules of practice shall govern procedure generally, point to the conclusion that, in an appropriate instance, the court might exercise a proper judicial discretion to order restoration of name without wifely request.

ARM 37.8.602 Report of dissolution or invalidity of marriage.

Case Notes

Oral Decree of Dissolution Improperly Granted at Hearing — Continuing Jurisdiction by District Court: At a hearing on the parties' petition for dissolution, the court orally granted the petition but reserved its judgment on the issues of custody, maintenance, and support. The Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly granted an oral decree of dissolution and was without jurisdiction to do so. The Supreme Court noted that under 40-4-103(4), a decree includes a judgment and that under Rule 54(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), a judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties. In this case, because the District Court did not intend its decree to be its final determination, the Supreme Court held that the District Court had continuing jurisdiction over the rights of the parties following the oral decree. In re Marriage of Bukacek, 274 M 98, 907 P2d 931, 52 St. Rep. 1141 (1995).

Name of Child When Agreed-to Pretrial Order and Birth Certificate Conflict at Trial: A pretrial order signed by both parties' attorneys and the judge stated that the child's last name would remain Rager. Later, it was discovered, and the lower court determined, that the child's legal last name was Worman, as stated on the birth certificate. The Supreme Court ruled that because the husband did not request a name change in the lower court and because the pretrial order was legally and factually in error, the birth certificate name of Worman would remain the legal name until the name was changed by adoption, a statutory petition for a name change, or other legal means. In re Marriage of Rager, 263 M 361, 868 P2d 625, 51 St. Rep. 91 (1994).

No Final Judgment When Conditions in Decree Anticipate Subsequent Modification — Appeal of Decree Not Limited: An original dissolution decree was made conditional on whether wife exercised her option to purchase the family business, leaving the rights and obligations of the parties with regard to maintenance, child support, and other matters uncertain until the purchase option period expired. After several court orders rendered her efforts to exercise the option unsuccessful, wife appealed 170 days after the original decree was entered, which husband contended was barred by the 30-day appeal limit in Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21). While noting that under this section a decree of dissolution is final when entered, the Supreme Court nevertheless adopted the holding in Heater v. Boston & Mont. Corp., 84 M 500, 277 P 11 (1929), that the finality of a judgment depends to a great extent on its apparent purpose and whether it contains provisions for subsequent modification. Because of the conditional language in the original decree, it could not be considered final until the option period expired, and orders issued prior to that time were interlocutory in effect, absent a final determination of the parties' rights. Wife's appeal filed 6 days after expiration of the option period was therefore timely and subject to appellate review. In re Marriage of Griffin, 260 M 124, 860 P2d 78, 50 St. Rep. 945 (1993).

Final Custody Plan and Maintenance Schedule Required: Where the District Court on one hand stated that the sale of the family home "should be retained as an available option" and on the other hand set terms of a 30-day buy-out or sale period, the case was remanded for determination of a final custody plan and maintenance schedule, since resolution of custody and maintenance hinged on sale of the home. In re Marriage of Ensign, 227 M 357, 739 P2d 479, 44 St. Rep. 1146 (1987).

Effective Date of Dissolution: This section delays the effectiveness of decrees of dissolution only for appeals that challenge the finding that the marriage is irretrievably broken. In appeals of procedures only, a decree is effective when it is originally entered. In re Marriage of Kraut, 220 M 267, 714 P2d 167, 43 St. Rep. 350 (1986).

Wife's Appeal Held Meritorious — Remand for Redetermination of Maintenance and Attorney Fees: Since wife's appeal had merit, husband's assertion that it did not and his request for damages were denied where, among other things, the court was sympathetic to a claim but did not agree with it, a request for a redetermination of the maintenance award was granted, and a request for attorney fees was remanded for a determination. In re Marriage of Perry, 217 M 162, 704 P2d 41, 42 St. Rep. 1101 (1985).

Consent to Retroactive Increase in Judgment — Merits of Increase Waived: Wife obtained an increase in child support and maintenance after claiming the original amounts were not correctly determined. Husband consented to retroactively apply the increase back to the date of the original decree. This consent made it unnecessary for the Supreme Court to consider the merits of the wife's request for modification. The consent indicated the original decree was not correct. In re Marriage of Wilson, 216 M 392, 701 P2d 1372, 42 St. Rep. 894 (1985).

Modification of Incorrect Money Judgment — Interest Due on Retroactively Due Increase: If a judgment is effective from the date of entry and any changes to the judgment relate back to the entry date, it follows that interest is assessed from the date of judgment. Where a child support and maintenance decree was later modified and larger payments granted, with the increase made retroactive to the date of the original decree, interest was due on that retroactive amount, beginning on the date of the original decree. In re Marriage of Wilson, 216 M 392, 701 P2d 1372, 42 St. Rep. 894 (1985).

Action to Be Dismissed Upon Death of Either Spouse During Pendency of Dissolution Proceeding — ". . . until death do you part": One spouse in a dissolution action died shortly after a hearing was held on his petition for dissolution of marriage, but no judgment had yet been entered, either written or oral. In affirming the District Court in dismissing the petition, the Supreme Court held that death terminates a marriage as a matter of law; therefore, there is nothing for the court to dissolve. The death of either spouse during the pendency of a dissolution action prior to the entry of judgment divests the court of all jurisdiction over the action, including matters involving the distribution of property. In re Marriage of Lawrence, 212 M 327, 687 P2d 1026, 41 St. Rep. 1771 (1984).

Ex Parte Maintenance Order Entered After Final Decree Upheld: It was proper for the District Court to award wife temporary maintenance ex parte even though the effect of the award was amendment of the dissolution decree without holding the hearing required by Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). The Supreme Court held that since the intent of the District Court's earlier order, i.e., that the wife be maintained pending final disposition of the matter, was not being carried out, it was within the District Court's discretion to grant the wife temporary maintenance. In re Marriage of Rohrich, 211 M 130, 683 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 1261 (1984).

Challenge of Decree and Property Settlement After Six Years — Res Judicata: A property settlement and decree entered in 1974 cannot be set aside in 1980 on the grounds of unconscionability. The failure of the spouse to appeal the court's decree in 1974 has rendered the issue res judicata. Hadford v. Hadford, 194 M 518, 633 P2d 1181, 38 St. Rep. 1308 (1981).

Effect of Fraud on Divorce Decree: After the decree in a divorce action, death of one of the parties does not deprive the trial court of its power to purge its records of a void or voidable decree procured by fraud. Fraunhofer v. Price, 182 M 7, 594 P2d 324 (1979).

Immediate Appeal From Partial Judgment: This is a proper case for a Writ of Supervisory Control because relator wife has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law by appeal. Neither 40-4-108 nor Rule 1, M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.), provides for immediate appeal from a partial judgment. Instead, the right of immediate appeal from a judgment on part but not all of the claims for relief in a single action is governed by Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. State ex rel. Marlenee v. District Court, 181 M 59, 592 P2d 153 (1979).

Postjudgment Powers of Court: A District Court has power to award necessary maintenance, child support, and suit money after judgment in a marital dissolution case during the pendency of appeal. To hold otherwise would leave a hiatus in the remedial power of the court that could cause unmeasured hardship and distress. State ex rel. Kaasa v. District Court, 177 M 547, 582 P2d 772 (1978).

"Plain Error": In adopting the "plain error" doctrine appellate courts have a duty to determine whether the parties before them have been denied substantial justice by the trial court, and when that has occurred they can, within sound discretion, consider whether the trial court has deprived a litigant of a fair and impartial trial, even though no objection was made to the conduct during the trial. Such was the case when appellant was denied his day in court by the trial judge's recess and failure to reconvene. Halldorson v. Halldorson, 175 M 170, 573 P2d 169 (1977).

Attorney General's Opinions

Dissolution Fee Not Chargeable Under Motion to Convert: A District Court Clerk may not charge a fee for filing a petition for dissolution under 25-1-201(1)(a) when a motion is made under 40-4-108(2) to convert a decree of legal separation to a decree of dissolution because the motion to convert is a continuation of the initial separation action and does not entail commencement of a new action. 42 A.G. Op. 56 (1988).

Case Notes

Unilateral Modification — Contempt: The husband under a dissolution decree stopped making house payments required by the decree. The wife moved to have him held in contempt. After a hearing the court modified custody but also found the husband in contempt. Sixteen months later the husband stopped making payments again. The husband was again held in contempt, as no changed circumstances existed. A party may not unilaterally modify a decree. State ex rel. Voorhies v. 40-4-110. Costs — professional fees.

Commissioners' Note

The purpose of this section is to authorize the payment of costs and a reasonable fee by one party to the other party's attorney if the court, after considering the financial resources available to both parties, determines the order to be necessary. The section extends authority to make several orders for costs and fees at different stages of the proceedings, and permits an attorney to enforce the order directly.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 343 in (1), near middle before "fees", substituted "professional" for "attorney's" and after "legal" inserted "and professional" and in second sentence, near middle after "directly to the", substituted "professional" for "attorney"; inserted (2) concerning access by both parties to marital financial resources; and made minor changes in style.

Saving Clause: Section 41, Ch. 343, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 42, Ch. 343, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 43, Ch. 343, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] applies to proceedings begun after October 1, 1997, including proceedings regarding modification of orders or decrees existing on October 1, 1997."

GENERAL

Amendment of Pretrial Order to Include Attorney Fees Not Listed in Pretrial Order — No Requirement to Plead Attorney Fees in Marriage Dissolution Case: During the second day of trial in a marriage dissolution case, the wife offered copies of her attorney fee bills, and the District Court, over the husband's objection, allowed the pretrial order to be amended on the issue of attorney fees. The husband cited Naftco Leasing Ltd. Partnership 301 v. Finalco, Inc., 254 M 89, 835 P2d 729 (1992), and contended that because the wife made no showing of manifest injustice, as required by Rule 16(e), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to modify the pleadings, the District Court erred by awarding the wife her attorney fees and costs when they were not listed in the pretrial order. The Supreme Court distinguished Naftco, noting that that case was not a dissolution action and that the trial court in Naftco never had the opportunity to consider amending the pleadings at trial. Further, Rule 16(e), M.R.Civ.P., must be read together with Rule 15(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), which requires a showing by the objecting party that amendment of the pleadings would be prejudicial. The husband never claimed prejudice or sought a continuance to enable him to meet the wife's attorney fee evidence. Although it is good practice to plead attorney fees, it is not required in marriage dissolution actions under this section. Rather, this section gives the trial court the discretion to order payment from time to time, after considering the financial resources of the parties. The husband failed to demonstrate an abuse of the court's discretion, and the Supreme Court affirmed the fee award. In re Marriage of Schmieding, 2000 MT 237, 301 M 336, 9 P3d 52, 57 St. Rep. 983 (2000).

Attorney Fees in Marriage Dissolution Considered Judgment Debt — Not Assessable Against Exempt VA Disability Benefits: The District Court included a portion of the husband's Veterans Benefits Association (VA) disability benefits as part of the division of marital property and assessed attorney fees against the husband. He contended that federal law precluded both and that because his VA benefits composed his sole source of income, his wife's attorney fees would have to be paid from property that was exempt from execution under 38 U.S.C. 5301 and 25-13-608. The Supreme Court reversed, agreeing that VA disability benefits are not considered "disposable retired pay" to be treated as marital property and holding that an award of attorney fees in a dissolution action comprises a judgment debt that may not be executed against exempt federal disability benefits. Under Montana law prior to adoption of the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act, attorney fees were treated as a form of temporary support or alimony pendente lite. However, that Act contains separate statutory provisions for an award of costs and attorney fees and an award of temporary maintenance or support, expressing a legislative intent that a judgment for attorney fees not be characterized as a form of maintenance or support (see also 27B C.J.S. Divorce §343). In this case, the District Court did not direct the payment of attorney fees from the husband's disability benefits, so the Supreme Court directed that, on remand, the District Court revisit the issue after considering property distribution, maintenance, and child support, with the husband's payment potentially coming instead from the value of his nonexempt property. In re Marriage of Strong, 2000 MT 178, 300 M 331, 8 P3d 763, 57 St. Rep. 709 (2000), following Dyche v. Dyche, 507 SW 2d 293 (Mo. 1978).

Absence in Record of Competent Evidence, Reasonableness, or Necessity for Attorney Fees — Award Reversed: An attorney fee awarded pursuant to this section must be reasonable, necessary, and based on competent evidence, and a hearing regarding reasonableness is required to allow oral testimony, the introduction of exhibits, and an opportunity to cross-examine. Here, no hearing regarding the award of fees was held, the trial court's findings did not appear to be supported by substantial competent evidence, and the reasonableness and necessity of the award were unclear, so the Supreme Court reversed the award and remanded for a hearing to receive evidence concerning reasonableness and necessity. In re Marriage of Harkin, 2000 MT 105, 299 M 298, 999 P2d 969, 57 St. Rep. 422 (2000).

Equity Claim Without Merit — Attorney Fees Properly Awarded as Set Out in Settlement Agreement: The parties' separation agreement provided that reasonable attorney fees would be awarded to the prevailing party in a future action to enforce, modify, or interpret the terms of the agreement. The father prevailed on all motions before the court, and his attorney fees and costs were awarded. The mother claimed that the award should be reversed because it was inequitable and asserted financial hardship because requiring her to pay an amount equal to 3 years of her gross wages would adversely affect her ability to support her children. However, her claims of financial hardship had been previously found to be without merit, so the award of attorney fees, as set out in the agreement language, was affirmed. In re Marriage of Pearson, 1998 MT 236, 291 M 101, 965 P2d 268, 55 St. Rep. 992 (1998).

Failure to Respond to Motion for Attorney Fees — Grounds for Granting Motion: Uniform District Court Rule (2)(b)'s provision that failure to file an answer brief to a motion within 10 days is an admission that the motion is well taken does not require the District Court to grant the unanswered motion. Therefore, the District Court did not have to grant former wife's motion for attorney fees in her proceeding for modification of child support on the ground that former husband did not respond to the motion. In re Marriage of Dishon, 277 M 501, 922 P2d 1186, 53 St. Rep. 816 (1996).

Award of Attorney Fees Based Upon Property Settlement Agreement Upheld: Debra and Kenneth were divorced, settling their differences in support, maintenance, and property division by signing an agreement addressing all issues. The agreement also provided that if one of the parties had to pay a debt of the other, the paying party could recoup the payment with interest and fees. Later, Debra sought reimbursement for debts that belonged to Kenneth but that were not disclosed at the time of the divorce. The Supreme Court held that attorney fees were properly payable under the language of the agreement. The fact that there was no clear winner in the proceedings and that there was no showing by Debra that she was without resources to pay her own fees was irrelevant because the award of fees was pursuant to the agreement and not pursuant to statute. In re Marriage of Craib & Rhodes, 266 M 483, 880 P2d 1379, 51 St. Rep. 937 (1994).

Montana Legal Services Association or Pro Bono Client Entitled to Award of Attorney Fees: Sandy was represented in a dissolution action by a pro bono attorney at the request of the Montana Legal Services Association. The District Court awarded the attorney $300 for his legal services. Sandy's ex-husband argued that the attorney was not entitled to any fees and that under Thompson v. Thompson, 193 M 127, 630 P2d 243 (1981), fees could not be awarded to a legal services attorney because no expense was incurred by the client. The Supreme Court held that because no justification was submitted by Sandy's attorney, the award was improper. The Supreme Court therefore reversed and remanded for an evidentiary hearing to determine the necessity and reasonableness of any award for fees. The Supreme Court also overruled its opinion in Thompson and held that allowing the Montana Legal Services Association or a pro bono attorney to be awarded fees would encourage representation of indigent clients. The Supreme Court therefore held that the criteria under this section should be necessity and the reasonableness of the requested fee, considering the financial resources of both parties. In re Marriage of Malquist, 266 M 447, 880 P2d 1357, 51 St. Rep. 914 (1994).

Costs and Attorney Fees in Challenge of Separation Agreement: A District Court decision that each party pay its own costs and attorney fees was reversed and the case was remanded for determination of costs and attorney fees to be awarded to husband in wife's unsuccessful action to interpret and modify a separation agreement that provided for costs and attorney fees for the successful party in an action to enforce, modify, or interpret the agreement. In re Marriage of Caras, 263 M 377, 868 P2d 615, 51 St. Rep. 98 (1994).

Failure of Litigant to Provide Discovery and to Appear at Trial: Because husband failed to appear on the first hearing date and because he failed to provide the court and his wife with requested discovery material, the court properly ordered him to pay his wife's attorney fees and costs for the trial. His conduct was unreasonable and vexatious and multiplied the litigation by necessitating a second hearing. In re Marriage of Rager, 263 M 361, 868 P2d 625, 51 St. Rep. 91 (1994).

Husband Ordered to Pay Attorney Fees Even Though Wife's Income Greater — Award Reversed: The trial court found that wife had a higher monthly income than husband, but then determined that husband was more financially able to pay wife's attorney fees. Notwithstanding the fact that husband's conduct necessitated wife's obligation to pay attorney fees, she had sufficient resources to pay the fees while he did not. The award of attorney fees and costs to wife was reversed. In re Marriage of Zander, 262 M 215, 864 P2d 1225, 50 St. Rep. 1522 (1993), distinguishing In re Marriage of Syljuberget, 234 M 178, 763 P2d 323 (1988).

Attorney Fee Provision in Separation Agreement — Fees Not Granted: More than 2 years after the dissolution order, Wise brought a motion to set aside the property settlement agreement drawn up by her attorney, contending that her husband had committed fraud against her and the court in that he told her that his work pension was not a marital asset. The agreement also contained a provision that if either party initiated an action to interpret or enforce the agreement, the successful party would be entitled to attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that fraud upon the court had not been committed but that the husband was not entitled to attorney fees because the action did not concern interpretation or enforcement of the agreement. Wise v. Nirider, 261 M 310, 862 P2d 1128, 50 St. Rep. 1334 (1993).

Grandparents Properly Required to Pay Attorney Fees Incurred by Grandchildren's Mother in Opposing Motion to Stay Execution of Custody Order: The grandparents, after having their motion to intervene in a dissolution proceeding for the purpose of obtaining custody of the grandchildren denied, moved for a stay of execution of the custody provisions of the dissolution in order to allow them to appeal the custody award. In opposing the stay, the children's mother requested attorney fees. The lower court awarded fees based on the limited finances of the mother. The grandparents argued that the lower court was without jurisdiction to award fees and that it should not have awarded fees because the parents of the children's mother were paying her attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that this section illustrates the unique character of a District Court's ongoing jurisdiction in dissolution proceedings in that the statute specifically allows for attorney fees incurred after entry of judgment. The Supreme Court further ruled that there was evidence that the mother paid some of her fees and that the lower court had not abused its discretion in awarding her attorney fees incurred in opposing the appeal. In re Custody of R.R.K., R.D.K., & L.M.K., 260 M 191, 859 P2d 998, 50 St. Rep. 1002 (1993).

Order That Husband Pay One-Third of Wife's Attorney Fees Upheld: Wife sought relief for nonpayment of maintenance. Husband countered with a petition for elimination of maintenance, and wife in turn petitioned for doubling of maintenance. Maintenance was retained at the original amount. The District Court properly ruled that husband should pay $1,000 of wife's $2,966 in legal fees based on the respective financial positions of the parties. In re Marriage of Burris, 258 M 265, 852 P2d 616, 50 St. Rep. 525 (1993).

Proper Award of Attorney Fees for Motion to Modify Child Support: On appeal, father maintained that ordering him to pay attorney fees related to a motion to modify child support obligations was a substantial injustice. However, in light of the fact that he failed to object to the finding that the award was proper or to the reasonableness of the fees, the grant of attorney fees was affirmed. In re Marriage of Howard, 255 M 64, 840 P2d 1217, 49 St. Rep. 894 (1992).

Proceedings Outside Scope of Annual Support Recalculation — Attorney Fees Appropriate: Appellant contended that attorney fees were inappropriate because the dissolution agreement anticipated annual recalculation of child support and the parties could not have reasonably intended the award of attorney fees in the annual recalculation proceedings. However, the Supreme Court found attorney fees were appropriate when appellant's case also included a disagreement over visitation and when appellant's failure to provide documents during discovery added to respondent's legal costs. In re Marriage of Chiovaro, 247 M 185, 805 P2d 575, 48 St. Rep. 156 (1991).

Attorney Fees Awarded for Past Actions, Not Modification Action: As part of a modification order awarding physical custody of a child to the father, the court awarded attorney fees to the mother. The father contended that no fees should have been assessed because the action was for modification. The Supreme Court affirmed after noting that the award was for fees necessitated by the father's past legal actions and not by the modification action. In re Marriage of Arbuckle, 243 M 10, 792 P2d 1123, 47 St. Rep. 1150 (1990).

Fees Awarded Under Terms of Decree: The respondent argued that the court should not award attorney fees because the petitioner had brought the action for back support under false pretext.

The Supreme Court ruled that while an error did exist in the initial claim, the petitioner had corrected the error upon learning of it and that under the clear terms of the original decree, since she was forced to initiate a suit for back support and had prevailed, she was entitled to attorney fees. In re Marriage of Wroot, 240 M 409, 784 P2d 904, 46 St. Rep. 2237 (1989).

Financial Disparity Between Parties — Award of Fees Proper: Husband made approximately three times more in salary than wife, and his disposable income increased after the divorce. Based on the great financial disparity between the parties, the award of attorney fees to wife was proper. In re Marriage of Skinner, 240 M 299, 783 P2d 1350, 46 St. Rep. 2141 (1989).

Spouse's Conduct as Justification for Award of Fees: Where a majority of legal fees were due solely to husband's lack of cooperation, including demands for discovery, contempt proceedings for failure to pay support, and an injunction from entering the family home, an award of attorney fees to the wife was proper. In re Marriage of Syljuberget, 234 M 178, 763 P2d 323, 45 St. Rep. 1825 (1988), followed in In re Marriage of Schnell, 273 M 466, 905 P2d 144, 52 St. Rep. 1059 (1995).

Attorney Fees Awarded to Wife Despite Her Willingness to Pay: The husband argued that the District Court improperly ordered the husband to pay wife's attorney fees. He based his argument on cross-examination in which wife testified that her present husband would be willing to help her pay attorney fees. She also testified that she felt it was her obligation to pay them, and she would pay them without her present husband's help. The Supreme Court held that, in itself, that testimony is not determinative of the issue. The District Court concluded in its findings that the wife did not have the means to pay attorney fees at the time of the divorce action and that she still did not. In re Marriage of Wengeler, 219 M 452, 712 P2d 1336, 43 St. Rep. 86 (1986).

Attorney's Obligation to Deal in Good Faith: Because of the inequality that exists between attorney and client in bargaining over a fee, attorney has an obligation to deal fairly and in good faith when negotiating, charging, and collecting a fee. In a fee dispute over handling of dissolution, client pleaded sufficient facts to raise question whether there was a breach of the obligation owed to deal fairly and in good faith. District Court erred in granting summary judgment for attorney. Supreme Court reversed and remanded for trial, giving client leave to amend counterclaim to specifically describe a breach of the implied covenant. Morse v. Espeland, 215 M 148, 696 P2d 428, 42 St. Rep. 251 (1985).

Award of Attorney Fees — Reasonableness Not Questioned: The District Court found that wife lacked sufficient property to provide for her reasonable needs and that she was unable to support herself without a maintenance award. The District Court made a finding that the wife does not possess sufficient funds with which to pay her attorney fees. Since the reasonableness of attorney fees was never questioned by the husband before appeal and the fees were accepted by the District Court as reasonable, the Supreme Court rejected husband's contention that he is financially unable to pay and upheld the award of attorney fees to the wife. In re Marriage of Loegering, 212 M 499, 689 P2d 260, 41 St. Rep. 1892 (1984).

Amount of Attorney's Fees Not to Be Prorated on Basis of Success on Individual Claims: In a proceeding for modification of a divorce decree, the respondent incorrectly contended that the petitioner's attorney fees should be prorated on the basis of her success on the claims raised against the respondent. The trial court is to base its award of attorney's fees on the case as a whole. It is not required to dissect the anatomy of the lawsuit to find a bone here, some fat there, and solid meat elsewhere. In re Marriage of Baer, 199 M 21, 647 P2d 835, 39 St. Rep. 1178 (1982).

Failure to Perform Property Agreement — Basis for Attorney Fees: At the time of their divorce, the parties entered into a property agreement which was approved by the court and entered into the decree of dissolution. Appellant failed to perform as agreed, and respondent filed suit seeking to have appellant held in contempt and requiring him to perform under the decree. The District Court ordered appellant to perform under the terms of the decree, to pay a sum respondent had incurred as a result of a tax lien on her property because of appellant's failure to perform, and to pay respondent's attorney fees. Appellant contended the wife made no showing of necessity and therefore could not recover attorney fees. The Supreme Court upheld the award, saying substantial evidence in the record, showing appellant's actions had required the wife to bring the action, supported the award. In re Marriage of Grace, 198 M 97, 643 P2d 1188, 39 St. Rep. 791 (1982).

Prerequisites to Award — Necessity, Competent Evidence, and Reasonableness: A petitioner is not entitled to attorney fees under this section unless a showing of necessity is made. The award must be based on competent and reasonable evidence, and reasonableness is shown by means of a hearing allowing for oral testimony, exhibits, and opportunity to cross-examine. Award of attorney fees and travel costs to wife was supported by the record and would not be overturned on appeal where testimony was presented and necessity shown with respect to the fees and an uncontested affidavit was submitted showing the travel costs. Laster v. Laster, 197 M 470, 643 P2d 597, 39 St. Rep. 737 (1982). See also In re Marriage of Barnard, 241 M 147, 785 P2d 1387, 47 St. Rep. 152 (1990).

Montana Legal Services Association Client Not Entitled to Attorney Fees: Where the appellee applied for and received the assistance of counsel employed by the Montana Legal Services Association to obtain her divorce from her husband, the District Court did not err in denying her request that her husband be ordered to pay her attorney fees. The purpose of the attorney fees provisions of the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act was to equalize the status of the parties to the dissolution proceeding. In this case, the wife incurred no personal expense in the employment of counsel and could therefore show no necessity for an award of attorney fees. Thompson v. Thompson, 193 M 127, 630 P2d 243, 38 St. Rep. 1022 (1981), overruled in In re Marriage of Malquist, 266 M 447, 880 P2d 1357, 51 St. Rep. 914 (1994).

Award of Attorney Fees to Wife: The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court judgment in favor of the wife, including an award of attorney fees. Both contractual and statutory bases are present for awarding attorney fees, the parties' separation agreement and this section. Jensen v. Jensen, 192 M 547, 629 P2d 765, 38 St. Rep. 927 (1981).

Attorney Fees — Related to Property Distribution: In an appeal from the modification of a decree issued upon dissolution of her marriage, the wife urged that the District Court erred in not awarding her attorney fees. She argued that the improper determination of net worth and improper distribution of property necessitated reversal of the fees decision. The Supreme Court felt it was best, in light of its decision to remand the case regarding the property issues, to vacate the order of the District Court regarding the attorney fees and leave it to the discretion of that court to modify the attorney fees order or not after rehearing. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981).

Speculative Attorneys Fees: This section contemplates that under normal circumstances an order for attorney fees will be permitted only after counsel for the benefited party has completed his services. Thus, a $3,000 attorney fee order was manifestly in error when it was granted to compensate the wife's attorney for work on appeal when he had performed only 20% of such services. In re Marriage of Bliss, 187 M 331, 609 P2d 1209 (1980).

Application of M.R.Civ.P. to Petition to Amend or Alter Order With Regard to Fees and Costs: Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., which requires that a motion to alter or amend a judgment be served not later than 10 days after notice of the entry of judgment, applies to petitions for attorney's fees filed after entry of judgment, and the court was without jurisdiction to grant a petition requesting attorney's fees filed some 3 months after notice of entry of an order that required each party to pay his own attorney's fees and costs. McDonald v. McDonald, 183 M 312, 599 P2d 356 (1979).

Stipulation as to Attorney Fees: Where it was stipulated and agreed to by counsel that the wife's attorney fees were to be paid out of any judgment received by her, the court may approve that stipulation. Downs v. Downs, 181 M 163, 592 P2d 938 (1979).

Standard of Review: When reviewing the discretion vested in the District Court to award costs and attorney's fees in a dissolution proceeding, the reviewing court is guided by the standard that when there is substantial evidence to support the findings of the District Court, such findings will not be disturbed on appeal. Brown v. Brown, 179 M 417, 587 P2d 361 (1978), followed in In re Marriage of Hall, 244 M 428, 798 P2d 117, 47 St. Rep. 1705 (1990). See also In re Marriage of Roullier, 229 M 348, 746 P2d 1081, 44 St. Rep. 2035 (1987).

Attorney Fees — Vexatious Custody Modification: The Supreme Court affirmed a trial court award of attorney fees based on a finding that the modification of custody action was vexatious and constituted harassment. Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978).

Attorney Fees — Pleading: While this section does not require attorney fees to be prayed for, it is good practice to request such fees in the pleadings. Johnsrud v. Johnsrud, 175 M 117, 572 P2d 902 (1977).

JURISDICTION OF TRIAL COURT

Grandparents Properly Required to Pay Attorney Fees Incurred by Grandchildren's Mother in Opposing Motion to Stay Execution of Custody Order: The grandparents, after having their motion to intervene in a dissolution proceeding for the purpose of obtaining custody of the grandchildren denied, moved for a stay of execution of the custody provisions of the dissolution in order to allow them to appeal the custody award. In opposing the stay, the children's mother requested attorney fees. The lower court awarded fees based on the limited finances of the mother. The grandparents argued that the lower court was without jurisdiction to award fees and that it should not have awarded fees because the parents of the children's mother were paying her attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that this section illustrates the unique character of a District Court's ongoing jurisdiction in dissolution proceedings in that the statute specifically allows for attorney fees incurred after entry of judgment. The Supreme Court further ruled that there was evidence that the mother paid some of her fees and that the lower court had not abused its discretion in awarding her attorney fees incurred in opposing the appeal. In re Custody of R.R.K., R.D.K., & L.M.K., 260 M 191, 859 P2d 998, 50 St. Rep. 1002 (1993).

Award of Attorney Fees on Remand Improper: On remand from the Supreme Court, the District Court granted the mother's motion for attorney fees for the first trial and appeal. The District Court was without jurisdiction to grant attorney fees. The original judgment did not provide for attorney fees, and the judgment would have had to be amended before either party could be ordered to pay those fees. A motion to amend a judgment must be made within 10 days of its entry. This rule applies to requests for attorney fees and is not overridden by 40-4-110. Since mother's motion was not timely, the District Court was without jurisdiction to grant attorney fees for the first trial. R.L.S. & T.L.S v. Barkhoff, 207 M 199, 674 P2d 1082, 40 St. Rep. 1982 (1983).

SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE, FINDINGS

Mere Consideration of Parties' Resources Insufficient Basis for Award of Attorney Fees: The District Court awarded attorney fees to wife after stating that it had considered the parties' financial resources. The court made no other findings that indicated how a consideration of financial resources dictated the award, nor was evidence presented that clarified how the parties' respective financial resources led to or supported the court's conclusion. Reversing the award, the Supreme Court held that mere consideration of the parties' financial resources, without more, is an insufficient basis upon which to determine that an attorney fee award is necessary. In re Marriage of Pfeifer, 282 M 461, 938 P2d 684, 54 St. Rep. 432 (1997).

Unequal Attorney Fees Incurred by Parties — Payment From Marital Estate Abuse of Discretion: Linda incurred less than $8,000 worth of attorney fees and Alan incurred over $11,000 worth of fees in the dissolution of their marriage. The District Court noted that the amounts incurred were "roughly equal" and therefore required that both party's fees be paid from the marital estate. The Supreme Court held that if the amounts were consolidated and then divided, each party would be required to pay $9,500 in fees, or an award of $1,500 to Alan. The Supreme Court noted that payment of each party's fees from the marital estate had been upheld in In re Marriage of Cole, 224 M 207, 729 P2d 1276 (1986), but in that case, the District Court specifically found that the wife was without means to pay her own fees. Because the District Court did not find that Alan was without means to pay all of his fees, as required by this section, the Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in allocating the fees to the marital estate. In re Marriage of Meeks, 276 M 237, 915 P2d 831, 53 St. Rep. 365 (1996).

Continuing Changed Circumstances Required: Seven months after Raymond was ordered to pay child support, he petitioned to have it modified. Evidence showed, among other things, that he testified that his circumstances were essentially the same as at the time of the original support order, that, in the year of his petition, he deposited over $135,000 in the bank, that he received $62,000 that year from the sale of a house, and that he chose to pay off a $24,000 note and over $21,000 in credit card bills with the house sale money instead of paying child support, for which he was in arrears. Clearly, he failed to show a change in circumstances so substantial and continuing as to make the existing support order unconscionable, and the lower court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to modify the order. In addition, the District Court properly ordered him to pay his former wife's court costs and attorney fees and the Supreme Court ordered him to pay her costs and attorney fees for the appeal. In re Marriage of Paunovich, 270 M 200, 890 P2d 1291, 52 St. Rep. 144 (1995).

Insufficient Findings for Determination of Attorney Fees in Light of Large Personal Injury Award: The parties filed cross-motions for modification of a child support order after the father was injured in a work-related accident and awarded a large personal injury award. The District Court denied the mother's request for her attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that the findings on the financial resources of the parties were insufficient to allow the Supreme Court to make a determination concerning payment of attorney fees and remanded to the District Court for it to make additional findings. In re Marriage of Durbin, 251 M 51, 823 P2d 243, 48 St. Rep. 1142 (1991). For a discussion of the correct standard of review, see In re Marriage of Kovash, 270 M 517, 893 P2d 860, 52 St. Rep. 280 (1995).

No Abuse of Discretion: Because wife suffered from poor health and husband had ability to earn income and manage assets, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by awarding attorney fees. In re Marriage of Dzivi, 247 M 165, 805 P2d 567, 48 St. Rep. 140 (1991).

Financial Resources Properly Considered: Appellant averred District Court error in awarding costs and attorney fees without consideration of the parties' financial resources, but the Supreme Court affirmed the award after noting that the lower court heard evidence on both parties' employment and living arrangements and held a separate hearing to determine the amount of attorney fees. In re Marriage of Gravely, 248 M 105, 809 P2d 582, 48 St. Rep. 353 (1991).

Failure to Consider Estate's Liabilities — Fee Award Remanded: Since the court failed to determine the liabilities of the marital estate, it could not have properly considered the financial resources of the parties when it ordered the husband to pay $3,000 of wife's attorney fees and costs. The attorney fee award was vacated, and the issue was remanded. In re Marriage of Dirnberger, 237 M 398, 773 P2d 330, 46 St. Rep. 898 (1989).

Examination of Parties' Financial Positions and Health — Award Justified: Attorney fees were properly awarded to wife after an examination of the parties' financial positions and health revealed that wife worked as a homemaker and took care of two children, required additional vocational training, was under a physician's care, and earned $800 a month, while the husband earned $2,400 a month and was in good health. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that under the circumstances wife was unable to afford attorney fees despite husband's contention that award of income-producing property to wife precluded award of fees. In re Marriage of Manus, 225 M 457, 733 P2d 1275, 44 St. Rep. 398 (1987).

Findings Required:

The rule that failure to set forth specific reasons for denial of attorney fees constituted remandable error was held to be much too harsh to be applied on a general basis. The Supreme Court adopted a more appropriate standard of review based on whether the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to award attorney fees, which was held to be more in line with other standards of review in dissolution actions and with this section. To the extent this new standard conflicts with decisions such as Lewis, infra, the previous decisions are overruled. When the District Court refuses to award reasonable attorney's fees, the court must indicate in the findings of fact, conclusions of law, or order why attorney's fees were not awarded. Bowman v. Bowman, 194 M 233, 633 P2d 1198, 38 St. Rep. 1515 (1981), following Kronovich v. Kronovich, 179 M 335, 588 P2d 510 (1978), followed in In re Marriage of Lewis, 198 M 51, 643 P2d 604, 39 St. Rep. 759 (1982), and Gauthier v. Gauthier, 201 M 320, 654 P2d 517, 39 St. Rep. 2137 (1982).

Attorney Fees in Divorce Actions — Contingency Fees Impermissible — Findings Required: The District Court order entered in a proceeding to enforce a decree of dissolution of marriage awarded attorney fees to the respondent. The court made findings as to the reasonableness of the amount of the award of attorney fees but made no findings as to the wife's need for the award. The court awarded the respondent $6,506 for maintenance arrearages and then found that one-third of the recovery, or $2,146, was a reasonable attorney fee. Noting that the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibit contingency fees in domestic relations actions, the Supreme Court vacated the award for attorney fees and remanded the case for reconsideration and entry of findings by the District Court on the fee issue. In re Marriage of Jones, 218 M 441, 709 P2d 158, 42 St. Rep. 1722 (1985).

Denial of Attorney Fees Without Stating Reason — Remand: A court refusing to allow attorney fees in a dissolution of marriage proceeding must indicate why in the findings of fact. Since the court failed in this case to do so, wife's request for an award must be considered on remand and, if denied, the denial must be substantiated. In re Marriage of Perry, 217 M 162, 704 P2d 41, 42 St. Rep. 1101 (1985).

Evidence Insufficient:

Wife sought $13,283 in attorney fees and was granted $2,500. The amount granted was not supported by substantial evidence, and the case was remanded for a hearing to determine an adequate fee. In re Marriage of Wilson, 216 M 392, 701 P2d 1372, 42 St. Rep. 894 (1985).

The District Court awarded the defendant $500 in attorney's fees. The award was not upheld because there was insufficient evidence to substantiate the $500 amount. An award of fees, like any other award, must be based on competent evidence. Phennicie v. Phennicie, 185 M 120, 604 P2d 787 (1979).

Substantial Evidence to Support Award of Attorney Fees: In his third time before the Supreme Court in a domestic law case, husband contested attorney fees of $1,727 awarded after the first appeal and attorney fees of $757.50 awarded pursuant to the specific order of the Supreme Court. The court rejected his arguments that the $1,727 award was improper on the grounds that Milanovich I reversed the judgment of the District Court. In Milanovich II the Supreme Court had affirmed the District Court order, which found the husband's conduct toward the wife vexatious, harassing, and unreasonable, and that she was entitled to reasonable attorney fees. As for the $757.50 award, the court found no abuse of discretion in its award. In re Marriage of Milanovich, 215 M 367, 697 P2d 927, 42 St. Rep. 436 (1985).

Reasonableness of Attorney Fee Award — Hearing Required: The court remanded on the attorney fee award issue because the trial court failed to conduct a hearing to determine the reasonableness of the wife's fee of $1,576 ordered paid by husband. In re Marriage of Buxbaum, 214 M 1, 692 P2d 411, 41 St. Rep. 2243 (1984).

Failure to Make Findings Denying Attorney Fees — Not Reversible Error — Limited Proceeding: Although expressing disapproval, the Supreme Court held it was not reversible error for the District Court to fail to make findings when it denied attorney's fees and ordered each side to bear its own costs since the proceeding was only a dismissal by the District Court of a petition to modify a decree and of motions by both parties. In re Marriage of Pickering, 209 M 159, 678 P2d 1146, 41 St. Rep. 617 (1984), distinguishing Kronovich v. Kronovich, 179 M 335, 588 P2d 510 (1978).

Disparity in Income and Health Justifying Award of Attorney Fees: Husband and wife were married for 19 years. During the marriage wife was a homemaker, took care of the parties' two children, and did not work outside the home. One child has now reached adulthood. Both children live with the wife. The wife has no vocational skills and is not in good health. She earns $3.50 an hour. Husband earns $1,980.42, net, a month on his regular job and earns extra money selling health care products. He is in good health, and his job is secure. The District Court ordered that the husband pay maintenance, child support, and the wife's attorney fees. Husband appealed the maintenance and attorney fees awards. The Supreme Court ruled that in view of the evidence presented on the parties' relative financial situations, the award of maintenance was not clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court further ruled that for similar reasons, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in awarding attorney fees to the wife. Carr v. Carr, 205 M 269, 667 P2d 425, 40 St. Rep. 1263 (1983), followed in In re Marriage of Merry, 213 M 141, 689 P2d 1250, 41 St. Rep. 2009 (1984), and In re Marriage of Korpela, 219 M 150, 710 P2d 1359, 42 St. Rep. 1912 (1985).

De Minimis Award of Attorney's Fees Not Reversed for Failure to Hold Hearing: Where the District Court awarded $400 in attorney fees in a divorce proceeding without holding an evidentiary hearing on the size of the fee, as required by the Supreme Court in Phennicie v. Phennicie, 185 M 120, 604 P2d 787 (1979), the Supreme Court refused to reverse the District Court award, saying that a reversal would result in costs to the parties which would exceed the original award. In re Marriage of Chapin, 202 M 153, 655 P2d 991, 39 St. Rep. 2392 (1982), followed in In re Marriage of Castor, 249 M 495, 817 P2d 665, 48 St. Rep. 807 (1991).

Statutory Factors Considered and Referred to Sufficient — Findings as to Mineral Interest and Attorney Fees Required: In awarding child custody to the husband, the court included in its finding the factors outlined in 40-4-212. In ordering the husband to pay maintenance, the court applied the factors set forth in 40-4-203 and referred to them in its findings of fact. There is no clear abuse of discretion by the District Court on either of these issues, and therefore the findings are affirmed. The District Court did not, however, place a value on a mineral interest, and the findings do not explain this exclusion. The court also failed to substantiate why attorney fees were not awarded to the wife. The case is therefore remanded to make findings on the value of the mineral interest and to state reasons as to the grant or denial of the wife's attorney fees. In re Marriage of Hammeren, 201 M 443, 663 P2d 1152, 39 St. Rep. 2222 (1982). See also In re Marriage of Rolfe, 216 M 39, 699 P2d 79, 42 St. Rep. 623 (1985), and In re Marriage of Forsman, 229 M 411, 747 P2d 861, 44 St. Rep. 2093 (1987).

Award of Attorney Fees Prior to Appeal Reversed as Error: Where, in an action for dissolution of the parties' marriage, the trial court awarded the wife $2,500 for the purposes of bringing an appeal, the action of the court was in error, as an award of attorney fees must be based on competent evidence that the fees are reasonable and written findings are required to establish both the party's necessity for payment from the opposing party and to establish the reasonableness of the fee. Because the hearing to establish the amount of the fee was insufficient and because no written findings were made, the award must be vacated and the case remanded for proper proceedings. Bier v. Sherrard, 191 M 215, 623 P2d 550, 38 St. Rep. 158 (1981).

Moving Expenses and Attorney Fees Upon Dissolution of Marriage — Failure to Make Findings and Conclusions: When, following entry of the court's order dissolving the marriage of the parties, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for additional findings of fact concerning a military pension, the District Court was also directed to rule on and make findings of fact concerning the appellant's requests for moving expenses and attorney fees if the appellant renews her requests. Failure of the District Court to make findings only results in needless remands of the case to the District Court for determination of the issues. Ebert v. Ebert, 189 M 477, 616 P2d 379, 37 St. Rep. 1674 (1980).

Showing of Need — Failure of Husband to Introduce Evidence: The District Court did not err in awarding attorney fees to the respondent when the respondent made a showing of necessity and the appellant did not introduce any evidence as to his current income. In re the Marriage of Dahl, 188 M 128, 612 P2d 196 (1980).

Written Findings Required: The District Court erred in awarding attorney's fees in a dissolution action by oral order. Written findings are required to establish both the party's necessity for payment from the opposing party and to establish the reasonableness of the fees. In re Marriage of Gohner, 187 M 206, 609 P2d 288 (1980). See also Duffey v. Duffey, 193 M 241, 631 P2d 697, 38 St. Rep. 1105 (1981); Collett v. Collett, 190 M 500, 621 P2d 1093, 38 St. Rep. 36 (1981).

Necessity to Consider Financial Positions: In a custody modification action where the father was employed and the mother was indigent and appealed in forma pauperis, it was error to award the father attorney's fees where nothing in the trial court's findings of fact or order suggested it had considered her financial position. McLean v. Seright, 187 M 194, 609 P2d 282 (1980).

No Showing of Necessity: Where wife, having testified that she had supported herself for 2 years, failed to make a showing of necessity, the court did not abuse its discretion in not awarding attorney's fees. Knudson v. Knudson, 186 M 8, 606 P2d 130 (1980).

Evidence Not Required to Support Award of Nominal Fees: An award of $350 in attorney fees in a contested marital dissolution involving property division, child custody, and support is manifestly a nominal fee. As such, there is no requirement that the amount of the fee be supported by evidence. Bailey v. Bailey, 184 M 418, 603 P2d 259 (1979), citing Solie v. Solie, 172 M 132, 561 P2d 443 (1977). See also Levandowski v. Levandowski, 193 M 121, 630 P2d 239, 38 St. Rep. 1002 (1981).

Award of Attorney's Fees — Review — Substantial Evidence: A District Judge has discretion to award a reasonable amount for attorney's fees in a dissolution proceeding. Substantial evidence to support the amount awarded must be determined on review. An award of $2,000 for the appeal was not supported by substantial evidence since the briefs were short, oral argument was waived, and no novel issues were presented. Metcalf v. Metcalf, 183 M 266, 598 P2d 1140 (1979). See also Karr v. Karr, 192 M 388, 628 P2d 267, 38 St. Rep. 506 (1981).

Award of Attorney's Fees — Hearing Required: Court discretion controls the award of costs and attorney's fees to a spouse. However, a showing of reasonableness of attorney fees must be made by means of a hearing allowing for oral testimony, the introduction of exhibits, and an opportunity to cross-examine. Aanenson v. Aanenson, 183 M 229, 598 P2d 1120 (1979), following Green v. Green, 181 M 285, 593 P2d 446 (1979), and followed in In re Marriage of Davies, 266 M 466, 880 P2d 1368, 51 St. Rep. 929 (1994).

Attorney Fees — Not Included in Costs: There was substantial evidence to support the findings of the lower court in regard to award of attorney fees at the trial level. Furthermore, the wife was not entitled to attorney fees on appeal since they are not included in costs recoverable by the prevailing party on appeal. Allen v. Allen, 175 M 527, 575 P2d 74 (1978).

Hearing on Attorneys' Fees Unnecessary: Hearing on attorneys' fees was unnecessary because only a nominal fee was ordered paid. Solie v. Solie, 172 M 132, 561 P2d 443 (1977).

DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT

Court Discretion in Award of Attorney Fees in Marriage Dissolution: This section grants a District Court discretion to award attorney fees in a marriage dissolution action after considering the financial resources of both parties, and unless the court abuses its discretion, the award will not be disturbed. In a case in which both parties incurred substantial legal fees and neither had the income or resources to pay its own fees, much less those of the other party, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in failing to award attorney fees. In re Marriage of Lee, 282 M 410, 938 P2d 650, 54 St. Rep. 409 (1997), following In re Marriage of Walls, 278 M 413, 925 P2d 483, 53 St. Rep.

974 (1996). See also In re Marriage of Harper, 1999 MT 321, 297 M 290, 994 P2d 1, 56 St. Rep. 1280 (1999).

Unequal Attorney Fees Incurred by Parties — Payment From Marital Estate Abuse of Discretion: Linda incurred less than $8,000 worth of attorney fees and Alan incurred over $11,000 worth of fees in the dissolution of their marriage. The District Court noted that the amounts incurred were "roughly equal" and therefore required that both party's fees be paid from the marital estate. The Supreme Court held that if the amounts were consolidated and then divided, each party would be required to pay $9,500 in fees, or an award of $1,500 to Alan. The Supreme Court noted that payment of each party's fees from the marital estate had been upheld in In re Marriage of Cole, 224 M 207, 729 P2d 1276 (1986), but in that case, the District Court specifically found that the wife was without means to pay her own fees. Because the District Court did not find that Alan was without means to pay all of his fees, as required by this section, the Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in allocating the fees to the marital estate. In re Marriage of Meeks, 276 M 237, 915 P2d 831, 53 St. Rep. 365 (1996).

Not Error to Award Wife Attorney Fees Despite Her Receiving $12,000 in Property Settlement: On appeal, the husband argued that the lower court erred in awarding the wife costs and attorney fees in light of the fact that she had received $12,000 as part of the property settlement. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion in that it found that she did not have sufficient resources to pay and that the modified settlement gave the husband immediate access to $42,000 in his thrift plan. In re Marriage of Brownell, 263 M 78, 865 P2d 307, 50 St. Rep. 1714 (1993).

Trial Court to Consider Financial Resources of the Parties: Because the wife's petition to hold the husband in contempt of the dissolution decree was so unfounded as to constitute harassment, the trial court awarded attorney fees to the husband. The Supreme Court stated that 40-4-110 does not give trial court the authority to grant attorney fees without considering the financial resources of the parties. The court nevertheless upheld the award of attorney fees, stating that the trial court did not abuse its discretion under general powers of equity. In re Marriage of Hereford, 223 M 31, 723 P2d 960, 43 St. Rep. 1508 (1986).

Award of Attorney Fees Largely Discretionary: The award of attorney fees under this section is largely discretionary and will not be disturbed in the absence of an abuse of that discretion. In re Marriage of Swanson, 220 M 490, 716 P2d 219, 43 St. Rep. 551 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Sullivan, 258 M 531, 853 P2d 1194, 50 St. Rep. 648 (1993), and In re Marriage of DeCosse, 282 M 212, 936 P2d 821, 54 St. Rep. 318 (1997). See also In re Marriage of Garner, 239 M 485, 781 P2d 1125, 46 St. Rep. 1852 (1989).

Frivolous Cross-Petition — Basis for Award of Fees and Costs: It was proper under this statute to award fees and costs to the petitioner in a dissolution action when the court found the respondent's cross-petition to be frivolous. In re Marriage of Youngs, 215 M 330, 698 P2d 404, 42 St. Rep. 405 (1985).

Award of Attorney Fees Not Mandatory: After dissolution of his marriage, husband petitioned for and was granted a reduction in his child support amount. Among the alleged errors raised by wife upon appeal was her contention that the trial court erred in failing to award her attorney fees and costs. The Supreme Court held that the trial court erred in finding husband's change of circumstances was permanent and remanded the cause for further proceedings. As to the question of attorney fees and costs, an award is not mandatory under this statute. As the cause was remanded for other reasons, the trial court, in its discretion, may determine whether wife is entitled to attorney fees in light of the further record in the case. In re Marriage of Carlson, 214 M 209, 693 P2d 496, 41 St. Rep. 2419 (1984), followed in In re Support of Rockman, 217 M 498, 705 P2d 590, 42 St. Rep. 1323 (1985), and In re Marriage of Jensen, 223 M 434, 727 P2d 512, 43 St. Rep. 1891 (1986).

Abuse of Discretion — Wife Not Entitled to Attorney Fees: The District Court abused its discretion in awarding attorney fees to the wife when the record indicated, among other things, that the husband's income equaled his expenses but the wife took home at least $250 a month more than she spent. In re Marriage of Vert, 210 M 24, 680 P2d 587, 41 St. Rep. 895 (1984).

Failure to Value Property as Affecting Award: Where the trial court failed to properly value and apportion the parties' property in a dissolution proceeding, it was probable that it failed to consider the financial resources of the parties before awarding attorney fees. Therefore, the Supreme Court vacated the award and left the determination of an award with the discretion of the trial court pending further proceedings. In re Marriage of McGill, 187 M 187, 609 P2d 278 (1980).

Discretion of Court to Award Fees: When the court was well aware of the parties' financial situation, it did not abuse its discretion in awarding reasonable attorney fees based on necessity. Bailey v. Bailey, 184 M 418, 603 P2d 259 (1979), citing Houtchens v. Houtchens, 181 M 70, 592 P2d 158 (1979).

Postjudgment Powers of Court: A District Court has power to award necessary maintenance, child support, and suit money after judgment in a marital dissolution case during the pendency of appeal. To hold otherwise would leave a hiatus in the remedial power of the court that could cause unmeasured hardship and distress. State ex rel. Kaasa v. District Court, 177 M 547, 582 P2d 772 (1978).

ATTORNEY FEES NOT AWARDED

Neither Party Better Able to Pay Attorney Fees:

Former wife was not in as strong a financial position as former husband, but neither was in a better position than the other to pay her attorney fees, and he had little discretionary income. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying her attorney fees in her child support modification proceeding. In re Marriage of Dishon, 277 M 501, 922 P2d 1186, 53 St. Rep. 816 (1996).

Since neither party was better able to pay attorney fees than the other, each was properly held responsible for his or her own attorney fees. In re Marriage of Hall, 228 M 36, 740 P2d 684, 44 St. Rep. 1321 (1987).

Parties With Negligible Financial Resources and Husband With Deteriorating Health and Employment Prospects — Fees for Wife Refused: The District Court properly refused to order the husband to pay the wife's attorney fees in view of each party's well-documented negligible financial resources and the husband's overall poor and deteriorating health and employment prospects. In re Marriage of Bradshaw, 270 M 222, 891 P2d 506, 52 St. Rep. 154 (1995).

Failure to Request Attorney Fees in Original Petition for Modification as Precluding Issue on Appeal: A separation agreement incorporated into an original dissolution decree provided for the award of attorney fees for the successful party as a cost of suit. However, when attorney fees were never requested as a form of relief or raised in the pleadings in the original petition for modification, and thus never addressed by the trial court, consideration of the issue was precluded on appeal to the Supreme Court. In re Marriage of Hill, 265 M 52, 874 P2d 705, 51 St. Rep. 396 (1994), followed in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Each Party to Pay Own Attorney Fees: Husband and wife each asked the court to hold the other in contempt, and each alleged failure to pay the other under a settlement agreement. The court refused both contempt requests and directed each party to pay the other what was owed, offsetting husband's $3,250 debt against wife's $4,200 debt. The settlement agreement provided that the successful party in an enforcement action was entitled to an attorney fee award. Neither party was totally successful, thus the lower court properly held that each party should pay its own attorney fees. In re Marriage of Hahn, 263 M 315, 868 P2d 599, 51 St. Rep. 73 (1994), followed in In re Marriage of Pfennigs, 1999 MT 250, 296 M 242, 989 M 327, 56 St. Rep. 981 (1999).

Attorney Fee Provision in Separation Agreement — Fees Not Granted: More than 2 years after the dissolution order, Wise brought a motion to set aside the property settlement agreement drawn up by her attorney, contending that her husband had committed fraud against her and the court in that he told her that his work pension was not a marital asset. The agreement also contained a provision that if either party initiated an action to interpret or enforce the agreement, the successful party would be entitled to attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that fraud upon the court had not been committed but that the husband was not entitled to attorney fees because the action did not concern interpretation or enforcement of the agreement. Wise v. Nirider, 261 M 310, 862 P2d 1128, 50 St. Rep. 1334 (1993).

Sufficient Assets — No Demonstration of Inability to Pay Own Fees: Thomas and Dorothy were married in 1987 after signing a premarital agreement at Dorothy's request. Before they were married, Dorothy raised cattle on leased land. Later, as a condition of remaining married, Thomas insisted that Dorothy give up the leased land, which she did. Dorothy was subsequently forced to sell her cattle. The parties were then divorced. Dorothy claimed that the District Court erred in refusing to award her attorney fees and costs. The Supreme Court held that Dorothy had not demonstrated an inability to pay those fees and costs and, according to the District Court findings, had sufficient assets to pay her own fees. The Supreme Court therefore did not consider Dorothy's arguments that the District Court had jurisdiction to award fees even without specific request to do so. In re Marriage of Stout, 261 M 10, 861 P2d 856, 50 St. Rep. 1119 (1993).

Grandparents Not Liable for Son's Share of Attorney Fees: In a dissolution action, the lower court appointed an attorney to represent the interests of the children. Subsequently, the children's grandparents attempted to intervene in the action and obtain custody. The lower court denied their motion. In its final order, the court ordered the grandparents to pay their son's share of the children's attorney fees on the basis that the son had "no intention of doing so". The Supreme Court held that there is no legal basis in this section, which was relied on by the lower court, to require the grandparents to pay their son's share. However, the Supreme Court refused to address whether the lower court could have required payment under 40-4-205 because the order was not based on that statute. In re Custody of R.R.K., R.D.K., & L.M.K., 260 M 191, 859 P2d 998, 50 St. Rep. 1002 (1993).

Litigation Prolonged by Both Parties — Fees Not Awarded: Although a premarital agreement provided that attorney fees be awarded to the party successfully defending the agreement, the District Court properly exercised its discretion in denying fees to both parties in light of the fact that litigation was unnecessarily prolonged by both parties. In re Marriage of Johnston & Turrin, 255 M 421, 843 P2d 760, 49 St. Rep. 1047 (1992).

No Prevailing Party — No Attorney Fees Awarded: Because each party in a marriage dissolution case "won" on two issues, there was no "prevailing party" and the trial court properly ordered each party to pay its own costs and attorney fees. In re Marriage of Hebert, 255 M 69, 840 P2d 584, 49 St. Rep. 902 (1992).

Failure to Cooperate and Accept Court Rulings: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in failing to award attorney fees to wife because she: (1) had failed to cooperate with husband's attempts to informally provide information; (2) sought numerous continuances and extensions; and (3) was unwilling to accept the rulings of the court. In re Marriage of Gallagher, 248 M 100, 809 P2d 579, 48 St. Rep. 346 (1991).

Future Earnings Relevant to Question of Awarding Attorney Fees: The Supreme Court ruled that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to award the wife attorney fees on the basis that upon graduation from law school, her income would substantially increase. In re Marriage of Owen, 244 M 306, 797 P2d 226, 47 St. Rep. 1634 (1990).

Error in Valuing Property and Awarding Temporary Maintenance — Attorney Fees to Be Considered on Remand: The District Court denied wife's request for attorney fees after concluding she had sufficient property, cash, and short-term assistance to pay the fees herself. However, because the trial court incorrectly valued the marital estate and erred in awarding temporary maintenance, the Supreme Court ordered a reexamination of the fee question on remand in light of a new property distribution and maintenance award. In re Marriage of Rudio & Harlan, 238 M 485, 778 P2d 410, 46 St. Rep. 1437 (1989).

Court-Appointed Counsel for Indigent Party in Civil Proceeding — No Requirement: There is no constitutional or statutory requirement that an indigent party be provided with court-appointed counsel in a civil proceeding. In re Adoption of K.L.J.K., 224 M 418, 730 P2d 1135, 43 St. Rep. 2297 (1986).

Attorney Fees Properly Denied: The husband should not be ordered to pay the wife's attorney fees on appeal. The parties were each ordered to pay their own attorney fees in the action before the trial court, and the husband made a valid legal argument on one of his issues. In re Marriage of Reich, 222 M 192, 720 P2d 286, 43 St. Rep. 1167 (1986).

Removal of Child From State — Frivolous Appeal: The mother, custodian of the couple's child, moved to North Carolina without informing the District Court as required by the divorce decree. The father brought suit for change of custody, which was denied. The mother contended his appeal was frivolous and sought attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that neither of the mother's contentions were proper, as she had forced the father to initiate the litigation by moving to North Carolina without first getting a change in the visitation privileges. In re Marriage of Winn, 190 M 73, 618 P2d 870, 37 St. Rep. 1734 (1980).

Attorney Fees Not Awarded — Parties to Bear Own Costs: It was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to determine that each party should bear his own legal costs after it had considered the financial resources of both parties. In re Marriage of Owen, 187 M 214, 609 P2d 292 (1980). See also In re Marriage of Voelkel, 226 M 143, 734 P2d 217, 44 St. Rep. 538 (1987).

SHOWING OF NECESSITY

Appropriateness of Award of Attorney Fees — Three-Pronged Approach — Facts Supporting Finding of Necessity: When determining whether an award of attorney fees was appropriate pursuant to this section, the Supreme Court uses a three-pronged approach (see In re Marriage of Pfeifer, 282 M 461, 938 P2d 684 (1997)). An award of attorney fees must be based on necessity, reasonable, and based on competent evidence. A finding of necessity must be supported by factual findings, and facts that have been traditionally considered in determining necessity are: (1) the requesting party's inability to pay attorney fees; (2) the other party's ability to pay attorney fees; and (3) the relative financial positions of the parties. After examining the financial conditions of the parties in detail, the District Court awarded the wife her attorney fees and costs of $26,561.88. The husband appealed, arguing not that he couldn't afford to pay the fees and costs, but rather asserting that the court should have set forth in more detail its reasons why he should pay. The Supreme Court noted that although it would be better practice for a District Court to better delineate its factual reasons for awarding one party its fees, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in this case, having found that the husband's economic situation was much better than the wife's, his annual earnings were five times that of the wife's, and he had the ability to acquire substantial assets while the wife did not. In re Marriage of Schmieding, 2000 MT 237, 301 M 336, 9 P3d 52, 57 St. Rep. 983 (2000).

Award of Attorney Fees Improper Absent Evidence of Necessity: The District Court improperly awarded attorney fees and costs when it did not hear any evidence concerning the necessity for or reasonableness of the award. In re Marriage of Cox, 266 M 67, 878 P2d 903, 51 St. Rep. 672 (1994).

Wife's Necessity for Award of Attorney Fees: The Supreme Court found that the trial court was adequately apprised of the relative financial means of the parties and that sufficient evidence supported the court's finding of wife's necessity for the award of reasonable attorney fees. Houtchens v. Houtchens, 181 M 70, 592 P2d 158 (1979).

Necessity Shown: Respondent testified inter alia that she had approximately $12 in her bank account at the time of trial and was working as a cosmetic products saleslady with an income of $100 to $125 per month, which evidences that necessity was shown and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion by requiring appellant to assist in the payment of attorney fees. Kaasa v. Kaasa, 181 M 18, 591 P2d 1110 (1979). See also Wilson v. Bean, 192 M 426, 628 P2d 287, 38 St. Rep. 751 (1981).

Showing of Necessity Required:

A showing of necessity is a condition precedent to exercise of the court's discretion to grant attorney's fees. Brown v. Brown, 179 M 417, 587 P2d 361 (1978). See also In re Marriage of Forsman, 229 M 411, 747 P2d 861, 44 St. Rep. 2093 (1987), In re Marriage of Welch/Phillips, 257 M 222, 848 P2d 500, 50 St. Rep. 240 (1993), In re Marriage of Smith, 264 M 306, 871 P2d 884, 51 St. Rep. 277 (1994), and In re Marriage of Gingerich/Stroop, 269 M 161, 887 P2d 714, 51 St. Rep. 1417 (1994).

A condition precedent to court exercising its discretion to grant attorney's fees is a showing of financial necessity; provision in decree awarding wife attorney's fees was stricken when wife failed to show necessity of award, and assets of marriage were several hundred thousand dollars. Whitman v. Whitman, 164 M 124, 519 P2d 966 (1974).

40-4-121. Temporary order for maintenance or support, temporary injunction, or temporary restraining order.

Commissioners' Note

Subsection (a) [(1)] permits motions for temporary maintenance and temporary support in three kinds of proceedings, (1) dissolution of marriage; (2) legal separation; and (3) independent proceedings for maintenance, support, or property disposition following an ex parte dissolution of the marriage granted in another, earlier proceeding. Motions for temporary custody are covered by Section 403 [40-4-213].

Subsection (b) [(2)] is intended to permit the court to restrain either spouse or a third party, including a bank or other institutional holder of property, from dealing with the property in the manner specified, or to take other action which might involve serious mental or physical harm to a party or to one of the children. It also is intended to authorize the court to prevent the removal of a child from its jurisdiction, and to grant any other injunctive relief necessary to proper judicial functioning under the Act. In some states, the local rules of practice may require that third parties be made parties to the proceeding in order to accomplish this goal.

Subsection (c) [(3)] authorizes a limited ex parte practice which permits the court, upon a showing that irreparable injury would otherwise result, to issue a temporary restraining order without notice to the other party. The order becomes effective upon service on the other party and will remain effective until discharged by the court. It is anticipated that an early hearing date will be set on an order to determine whether the temporary restraining order should be continued or made permanent so that the other party may be heard as soon as possible on the merits. A provision similar to subsections (b) and (c) appears in the California Family Law Act of 1969 (California Civil Code, section 4359, as amended, 1970).

Each state should insert its own time limit in subsection (d) [(4)], bearing in mind that the matter should be handled with dispatch and that the court may make an order shortening time on a proper showing.

Subsection (f) (1) [(6) (a)] is intended to make clear that the amount established for temporary support or maintenance will not prejudice the parties at later hearings held to determine the amount of permanent support or maintenance. If the parties and their attorneys are able to agree on amounts for temporary payments without having to worry that those amounts will establish a precedent of need or ability to pay at later hearings, much adversary maneuvering and its consequent result of suspicion and bitterness may be avoided.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendments: Chapter 255 inserted (2)(b) restraining both parties from disposing of certain insurance and other coverage held for the benefit of a party or a child of a party; inserted (3) establishing conditions of the temporary restraining order; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 256 in (1), at end of first sentence, inserted "or a temporary family support order", inserted second and third sentences regarding separate designation of support and maintenance in the family support order, in fourth sentence, near beginning after "requested", inserted "a list of marital estate liabilities, a statement of sources of income of the parties and of a child of the marriage entitled to support, and, in the case of a motion for a temporary family support order, a proposal designating the party responsible for paying each liability", and inserted fifth through eighth sentences setting out provisions of the temporary family support order; in (2), near beginning of introductory clause after "maintenance", substituted "temporary support of a child, or a temporary family support order" for "or support"; in (8), near beginning after "maintenance", substituted "temporary child support, or temporary family support" for "or support"; in (9)(b), after "dismissed", inserted "and, in the case of a temporary family support order, upon entry of the decree of dissolution"; and made minor changes in style.

Temporary Order: Section 2, Ch. 484, L. 1997, provided: "A temporary order or temporary injunction issued under 40-4-121 before October 1, 1995, continues in full force and effect as provided in the order or injunction." Effective July 1, 1997.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 12, Ch. 484, L. 1997, provided: "[Section 2] applies retroactively to October 1, 1995."

1995 Amendment: Chapter 350 inserted (2)(g) regarding relief available under Title 40, chapter 15; deleted (3)(a)(i) that read: "(a)(i) alleging physical abuse, harm, or bodily injury against the petitioner by a family member or partner or the threat of physical abuse, harm, or bodily injury against the petitioner by a family member or partner that causes the petitioner to reasonably believe that the offender has the present ability to execute the threat"; deleted (3)(a)(ii) that read: "(ii) alleging a violation of 45-5-220"; at end of (3) deleted third sentence that read: "Persons who may request relief under this subsection include family members, partners, and persons alleging a violation of 45-5-220"; deleted former (7) that read: "(7) If the court determines, on the basis of a party's history of violence and the testimony presented at the hearing or on the basis of credible evidence that a party has violated 45-5-220, that the other party needs permanent protection or may otherwise suffer permanent injury or harm, the court may order that the injunction be effective permanently"; deleted former (8) that read: "(8) A permanent injunction may be issued by a district court with jurisdiction over the parties to a dissolution proceeding upon presentation of evidence of a party's history of violence showing that the other party may suffer permanent injury or harm if a permanent injunction is not issued. A permanent injunction may also be issued enjoining a party from stalking upon presentation of credible evidence that the party has violated 45-5-220 if the court determines that the stalked party needs permanent protection"; deleted former (9) that read: "(9) Except when the alleged conduct to be restrained is a violation of 45-5-220, restraining orders issued under this section may restrain the petitioner's actions only if the court finds that the petitioner, in addition to the respondent, has engaged in abusive or assaultive behavior as described by subsection (3)(a)"; in (8), after "injunction", substituted "entered pursuant to Title 40, chapter 15, or this section" for "or permanent injunction"; in (8)(a), at end, deleted "or order under Title 27, chapter 19, part 3, as appropriate"; deleted (13) that read: "(13) As used in this section, the following definitions apply:

(a) "Bodily injury" means physical pain, illness, or any impairment of physical condition and includes mental illness or impairment.

(b) "Family member" means mothers, fathers, children, brothers, sisters, and other past or present family members of a household. These relationships include relationships created by adoption and remarriage, including stepchildren, stepparents, and adoptive children and parents. These relationships continue regardless of the ages of the parties and whether the parties reside in the same household.

(c) "Partner" means spouses, former spouses, and persons who have been or are currently in a dating or ongoing intimate relationship with a person of the opposite sex"; and made minor changes in style.

Severability: Section 31, Ch. 350, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendments: Chapter 292 in (2)(b), at end, inserted reference to offense of stalking; inserted (3)(a)(ii) concerning alleged violation of 45-5-220; in (3)(b), at end, inserted reference to persons alleging violation of 45-5-220; in (11)(c) inserted reference to 45-5-220; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 9, 1993.

Chapter 425 in (2)(b), at end, substituted "family member" for "child"; inserted (2)(e) authorizing court to require counseling; in (3)(a)(i), in two places after "by a family", deleted "or household" and after "member" inserted "or partner"; in (3)(b), near beginning of second sentence before "injunction", substituted "temporary" for "preliminary" and at end inserted "as appropriate" and at end of last sentence substituted "family members, partners" for "spouses, former spouses, and persons cohabiting or who have cohabited with the other party within 1 year immediately preceding the filing of the petition"; inserted (6) requiring court to determine if cause exists to continue injunction; inserted (7) and (8) authorizing court to issue permanent injunction; inserted (9) concerning restraining of petitioner; in (11), at end, inserted "or permanent injunction"; deleted former (11)(a) that read: "does not prejudice the rights of the parties or the child which are to be adjudicated at subsequent hearings in the proceeding"; in (11)(a), near beginning after "modified", deleted "before final decree" and at end inserted "or order under Title 27, chapter 19, part 3, as appropriate"; in (11)(b), after "court or", deleted "when a final decree is entered or" and after "petition" deleted "for dissolution or legal separation"; inserted (13) defining bodily injury, family member, and partner; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendment: In (3)(a), after "household member", inserted "or the threat of physical abuse, harm, or bodily injury against the petitioner by a family or household member that causes the petitioner to reasonably believe that the offender has the present ability to execute the threat".

1985 Amendment: In (3)(a), inserted "harm, or bodily injury" and substituted "family or household member" for "spouse"; in (3)(b), after "requesting", deleted "injunctive", and inserted last sentence listing persons who may request relief; in (4) inserted "for a period not to exceed 20 days"; in (7)(c), after "terminates", inserted "upon order of the court or" and made minor changes in phraseology; and inserted (7)(d) requiring notice that violation is criminal offense; and inserted (8) requiring withholding of notice of petitioner's new residence.

1981 Amendment: Inserted subsection (3) relating to preliminary injunction for physical abuse.

Preamble: The preamble to HB 405 (Ch. 180, L. 1981) provided: "WHEREAS, former Governor Judge appointed a task force to recommend ways in which spouse abuse could be stopped; and

WHEREAS, spouse abuse weakens the dignity and integrity of the family unit, and the state therefore has a substantial interest in aiding spouse abuse victims through the enforcement of state laws; and

WHEREAS, the task force recognized that the state's current laws on obtaining injunctions and restraining orders are not providing adequate protection to some spouse abuse victims and their families.

THEREFORE, it is the intent of this act to grant spouse abuse victims extraordinary relief in the form of preliminary injunctions and temporary restraining orders."

Case Notes

Retroactive Revision of Temporary Child Support Order: When the parties separated, the District Court entered a temporary child support order directing the husband to pay $300 a month in spousal maintenance and $200 a month for each child in support. That temporary order was later modified to require the husband to pay a total of $800 a month in temporary maintenance and support. The final decree directed the husband to pay child support of $190 a month for each child, retroactive to the time of separation, and did not award any spousal maintenance. The wife alleged error in the retroactive modification of support, arguing that there was no change in circumstances that would allow a downward modification. The Supreme Court affirmed the modification, noting that the District Court was revising a temporary order, not modifying a final decree as specified in 40-4-208(1). It is clearly within the District Court's authority to make the maintenance and support awards retroactive (see In re Marriage of Wersland, 249 M 169, 814 P2d 991 (1991)), and the revision of the order did not constitute an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Stoneman, 2000 MT 274, 302 M 107, 14 P3d 12, 57 St. Rep. 1145 (2000).

Attempt to Contact Former Spouse Through Unauthorized Third Party — Order of Protection Violation: In 1993, a Missoula County District Court issued a permanent injunction, based on a stalking violation of 45-5-220, prohibiting Gillispie from contacting his former wife "by a third person, except by telephone or correspondence through her attorney of record". In 1997, Gillispie admitted contacting his former wife's mother in Missoula and was charged with and convicted of an order of protection violation pursuant to 45-5-626. Gillispie contended that the 1993 injunction was no longer in effect in 1997 because the 1997 version of 45-5-626 does not make criminal a violation of the permanent injunction imposed upon him in 1993. The Supreme Court disagreed. By broadening protections available to victims of partner and family assault in 1995 and clarifying the law in 1997, the Legislature did not intend to do away with any existing orders of protection already in place. The 1993 permanent order of protection remained in place in 1997, and Gillispie was properly charged and convicted when he admittedly violated the terms of the 1993 order. Missoula v. Gillispie, 1999 MT 268, 296 M 444, 989 P2d 401, 56 St. Rep. 1085 (1999).

Jurisdiction Over Municipal Court Protection Order: A Missoula County District Court issued a permanent injunction, based on a stalking violation of 45-5-220, prohibiting Gillispie from contacting his former wife "by a third person, except by telephone or correspondence through her attorney of record". Gillispie admitted contacting his former wife's mother in Missoula and was charged with and convicted in Municipal Court of an order of protection violation pursuant to 45-5-626. On appeal, Gillispie contended that the Municipal Court did not have jurisdiction over the offense. A Municipal Court has geographic jurisdiction over misdemeanors coextensive with the jurisdiction of Justices' Courts located in the same county. Although neither Gillispie nor the former wife was present in Missoula County at the time of the prohibited phone call, the former wife's mother received the call in Missoula County. Thus, the Municipal Court was vested with jurisdiction over the misdemeanor order of protection violation when the necessary result of Gillispie's third-party contact by telephone was committed within Missoula County. Missoula v. Gillispie, 1999 MT 268, 296 M 444, 989 P2d 401, 56 St. Rep. 1085 (1999).

Restraining Order Issued Without Request and for Indefinite Time Improper: The husband requested a restraining order against his wife in an ongoing custody and visitation dispute. The wife objected on procedural and substantive grounds but did not request a restraining order against her husband. Without notice or hearing, the District Court issued a restraining order against both the husband and wife pursuant to this section, requiring each party to stay 1,500 feet away from the other's residence and workplace, designating where the parties would transfer custody of the child for visitation purposes, establishing a telephone contact protocol and a visitation schedule, and directing that the order remain in effect until further order of the court. The restraining order violated subsections (4) through (7) of this section because it was: (1) not entered for a fixed period of time, not to exceed 1 year; (2) issued against the husband without a request from his wife; and (3) issued without proper findings, a hearing, or notice to either party. In re Marriage of Christian, 1999 MT 189, 295 M 352, 983 P2d 966, 56 St. Rep. 738 (1999).

Justice's Court Continuance of TRO on Court's Own Initiative Invalid: The plain, unambiguous language of this section clearly provides that a temporary restraining order (TRO) is valid for only 20 days, absent a hearing and extension by the issuing court. Therefore, a charge of an August 27 violation of a TRO issued on August 4 should have been dismissed because there was no extension or hearing and the TRO thus expired after 20 days. The Justice's Court did not have jurisdiction under 40-4-123 to on its own initiative, based on defendant's petition for dissolution and request for a TRO against his wife, transmit the wife's TRO to the District Court and continue the wife's TRO pending District Court review of the wife's TRO. St. v. Asmundson, 283 M 141, 940 P2d 104, 54 St. Rep. 535 (1997).

Sworn Statement Concerning Mother's Threat Sufficient for Temporary Restraining Order: The sworn statement of the natural father that the mother had threatened to remove their children from the court's jurisdiction pending a determination of custody modification was sufficient grounds for issuing a temporary restraining order to prevent their removal. In re Marriage of Morazan, 237 M 294, 772 P2d 872, 46 St. Rep. 814 (1989).

Voluntary Maintenance Agreement — Findings of Need and Duration Not Required: Husband contended that, prior to awarding temporary maintenance, the District Court failed to make proper findings of need and duration required by this section and 40-4-203. However, the court was not required to make such findings since the parties voluntarily entered into a maintenance agreement. In re Marriage of Halverson, 230 M 226, 749 P2d 518, 45 St. Rep. 162 (1988).

Evidence Sufficient to Support Retroactive Maintenance Award — Rights Not Prejudiced by Award Made at Time of Dissolution: A temporary order of child support issued at the date of dissolution 2 years prior to final judgment did not prejudice the rights of the parties or the children adjudicated at the later hearings. It was clearly within the District Court's discretion, after hearing the matter of child support and maintenance, to make the award of maintenance retroactive to the date of dissolution. In re Marriage of Revious, 226 M 304, 735 P2d 301, 44 St. Rep. 674 (1987), followed in In re Marriage of Wersland, 249 M 169, 814 P2d 991, 48 St. Rep. 626 (1991), and In re Marriage of Spence, 257 M 188, 849 P2d 161, 50 St. Rep. 225 (1993).

Temporary Maintenance and Attorney Fees: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the wife's motions for temporary maintenance and attorney fees pending trial or for temporary maintenance, attorney fees, and costs and payment of medical expenses pending appeal since the court found that she was able to pay by executing upon her share of the marital estate without jeopardizing her appeal. Oster v. Oster, 186 M 160, 606 P2d 1075 (1980), following Ferguson v. Town Pump, Inc. v. Diteman, 177 M 122, 580 P2d 915 (1978).

No Responsive Pleading Required: Section 40-4-121 does not require a response but merely limits the time within which a response may be filed. This construction is required by the permissive terms of the provision and by reference to 40-4-103 and Rule 7(b), M.R.Civ.P., regarding the form of motions. A motion is not a pleading and does not require responsive pleadings, hence the husband's failure to file a response under 40-4-121 did not render the motion an order. Houtchens v. Houtchens, 181 M 70, 592 P2d 158 (1979).

Show Cause Hearing Contemplated: The trial court erred by holding the husband in contempt of a show cause order which was in substance both an ex parte restraining order, which does not require a response, and notice of a motion for temporary support and maintenance and in requiring the husband to pay temporary support and maintenance due thereunder. Since the terms of the court order clearly contemplated a show cause hearing before temporary support and maintenance would be ordered, it was not a final interlocutory order in the absence of a show cause hearing. Houtchens v. Houtchens, 181 M 70, 592 P2d 158 (1979).

Temporary Child Support Reduced in Final Judgment: It was not error when the District Court gave no reason for reducing child support awarded in the final judgment from that awarded in the order pendente lite because the order pendente lite was made before the District Court heard testimony or considered the evidence and was not a determination of the merits. Brown v. Brown, 179 M 417, 587 P2d 361 (1978).

Postjudgment Powers of Court: A District Court has power to award necessary maintenance, child support, and suit money after judgment in a marital dissolution case during the pendency of appeal. To hold otherwise would leave a hiatus in the remedial power of the court that could cause unmeasured hardship and distress. State ex rel. Kaasa v. District Court, 177 M 547, 582 P2d 772 (1978).

Temporary Support Payments: On application for money judgment for delinquent temporary support payments, it was not error to order sum of $8,174 plus interest to be paid by defendant in 63 monthly installments of $150. Latus v. Latus, 163 M 315, 517 P2d 356 (1973).

Attorney General's Opinions

Allegations Necessary for Petition for Injunctive Relief: A petition for injunctive relief under subsection (3) of this section must allege physical abuse, harm, or bodily injury. (See 1995 amendment.) 43 A.G. Op. 50 (1989).

Justice's Court Continuance of TRO on Court's Own Initiative Invalid: The plain, unambiguous language of 40-4-121 clearly provides that a temporary restraining order (TRO) is valid for only 20 days, absent a hearing and extension by the issuing court. Therefore, a charge of an August 27 violation of a TRO issued on August 4 should have been dismissed because there was no extension or hearing and the TRO thus expired after 20 days. The Justice's Court did not have jurisdiction under this section to on its own initiative, based on defendant's petition for dissolution and request for a TRO against his wife, transmit the wife's TRO to the District Court and continue the wife's TRO pending District Court review of the wife's TRO. St. v. Asmundson, 283 M 141, 940 P2d 104, 54 St. Rep. 535 (1997).

Property Transferred to Deny Spousal Interest in Marital Estate — Inclusion as Distributable Property Proper: A husband and wife owed about $6,000 in back taxes on their property, which was in jeopardy of being sold at a tax sale. The couple was unable to obtain a loan because of a prior bankruptcy, so they arranged to transfer the property to the husband's mother, who then took out a loan to pay the taxes, using the property as collateral. When the couple later sought to dissolve their marriage, their petition made no mention of any real property acquired during the marriage. The husband testified at the hearing, but the wife did not attend, and dissolution was granted without addressing the wife's interest in the property. She moved to set aside the judgment pursuant to this section, and the District Court voided the deed transferring the property to the mother, issued a court deed naming the mother as grantor and the husband and wife as grantees to hold the property as tenants in common, and included the property in the marital estate. The mother contended that the property transfer more than 2 years before commencement of the dissolution was final against the husband and wife as grantors, citing 70-20-303, and that the property was thus not available as an asset of the couple and was improperly included in the marital estate. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the couple had submitted false proposed findings and conclusions when they made no mention of any real property acquired during the marriage, which had the effect of defrauding the court and denying the wife her interest in the marital property. Inclusion of the property in the marital estate was proper. In re Marriage of Bell, 2000 MT 88, 299 M 219, 998 P2d 1163, 57 St. Rep. 381 (2000).

Full Faith and Credit Afforded Out-of-State Renewable Child Support Judgment — Res Judicata Applicable: Article IV, sec. 1, U.S. Const., provides that full faith and credit be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. As restated in Baker v. Gen. Motors Corp., 522 US 222, 139 L Ed 2d 580, 118 S Ct 657 (1998), a final judgment in one state, if rendered by a court with adjudicatory authority over the subject matter and persons governed by the judgment, qualifies for recognition throughout the land. When issues of jurisdiction have been determined by one court, the doctrine of res judicata precludes a second court from considering jurisdiction as long as the first court fully and fairly considered the issue, and that judgment, as to jurisdiction, is entitled to full faith and credit in the second court. In the present case, a Utah renewable child support judgment, in which the Utah court established jurisdiction of the parties, was entitled to full faith and credit in Montana, despite contentions by the husband that he no longer had minimum contacts with Utah after moving to Montana. The jurisdiction arguments raised before the Montana Supreme Court were identical to the arguments that were previously raised, fairly considered, and finally decided in Utah, precluding relitigation by the Montana court under res judicata. In re Child Support of Mason, 1998 MT 192, 290 M 253, 964 P2d 743, 55 St. Rep. 803 (1998).

Purpose and Applicability of Federal Parental Kidnapping Protection Act: The federal Parental Kidnapping Protection Act of 1980 (28 U.S.C. 1738A), enacted by Congress to address the problems of interstate forum shopping and child snatching, established national standards under which jurisdictions could determine whether they had jurisdiction and what effect to give the decisions made by courts of other jurisdictions by requiring that full faith and credit be accorded to decisions of a jurisdiction if the court appropriately exercised jurisdiction under the federal standards. The Act's general purposes are to promote cooperation and the exchange of information between state courts, to facilitate the enforcement of custody decisions of sister states, and to discourage continuing interstate controversies over child custody. The Act does not apply in a case in which there is no other state competing for jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Erler, 261 M 65, 862 P2d 12, 50 St. Rep. 1195 (1993).

Primary Physical Custody Not Properly Before Court — No Implied Consent Found for Trial of Issue: Appellant filed a petition for custody of the parties' minor child, asking that she be given custody. Respondent counterpetitioned for split custody until the child was 5 years old, at which time respondent would be granted primary physical custody. During trial, respondent moved for an order granting immediate primary physical custody. Appellant moved for a stay or continuation to respond to the motion. The Supreme Court held that the issue of respondent's primary physical custody was not properly before the District Court because the issue had not been raised in the pleadings. Citing Trust Bank v. Darrah, 152 M 256, 448 P2d 734 (1968), the Supreme Court also held that there was no implied consent by appellant to try the issue raised by respondent's motion as appellant received no notice of the motion prior to trial. The issue was therefore not properly before the District Court. In re Custody of C.J.K., 258 M 525, 855 P2d 90, 50 St. Rep. 645 (1993).

Party's Proposed Findings — Substantial Evidence: In regard to the issues of custody, child support, and visitation, when the findings and conclusions are sufficiently comprehensive and pertinent to the issue to provide a basis for decision and are supported by substantial credible evidence, they will not be overturned merely on the grounds the court relied on proposed findings and conclusions submitted by counsel. In re Marriage of Alt, 218 M 327, 708 P2d 258, 42 St. Rep. 1621 (1985). See also In re Marriage of Callahan, 233 M 465, 762 P2d 205, 45 St. Rep. 1639 (1988).

Motion to Enforce Decree — Frivolous Claims on Appeal: On wife's motion for enforcement of divorce decree, husband agreed to arrearages arrived at by trial court after considerable evidence was taken on the matter. Husband's claim on appeal that the arrearages found by the trial court were not supported by the evidence was frivolous. There was ample evidence supporting the arrearages, and no abuse of discretion was found. In re Marriage of Baker, 198 M 371, 646 P2d 522, 39 St. Rep. 1031 (1982).

Challenge of Decree and Property Settlement After Six Years — Res Judicata: A property settlement and decree entered in 1974 cannot be set aside in 1980 on the grounds of unconscionability. The failure of the spouse to appeal the court's decree in 1974 has rendered the issue res judicata. Hadford v. Hadford, 194 M 518, 633 P2d 1181, 38 St. Rep. 1308 (1981).

No Abuse of Discretion Shown in Award of Custody and Support and in Property Disposition: Where, following a decree of divorce, the appellant's ex-wife was awarded custody of the minor son of the parties subject to the reasonable visitation rights of the appellant and was awarded $200 a month child support and certain property of the parties, appellant failed to show there was a clear abuse of discretion by the District Court, failed to overcome the presumption that the judgment of the District Court is correct, and failed to show there was a clear preponderance of the evidence against the District Court findings. Thompson v. Thompson, 193 M 127, 630 P2d 243, 38 St. Rep. 1022 (1981).

Husband's Income Poorly Documented — Reversible Error — Admonition to Attorneys: The District Court's findings were clearly erroneous in a child support determination based upon sketchy and unsubstantiated income information on husband and upon erroneous allocations of debt otherwise handled in the decree. The Supreme Court, in noting that hasty work by the attorneys contributed to this error, reiterated that it is the duty of counsel to be complete and careful in dissolution actions; pretrial conferences, cooperation between attorneys, and availability of underlying documents are important in achieving the fairest possible results in each case. In re Marriage of Benjamin, 189 M 158, 615 P2d 218, 37 St. Rep. 1412 (1980).

Continuity of Custody Decree: Where grandparents are seeking to modify a custody decree awarded to a natural parent, courts are bound to follow the law as set out in Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978), and parallel cases indicating that 40-4-211 through 40-4-221 are designed to favor custodial continuity over the rights of the custodians. Thus here, custody remains with the father. In re Marriage of Korol, 188 M 351, 613 P2d 1016, 37 St. Rep. 1215 (1980).

Commissioners' Note

An important aspect of the effort to reduce the adversary trappings of marital dissolution is the attempt, made by Section 306 [40-4-201] to encourage the parties to reach an amicable disposition of the financial and other incidents of their marriage. This section entirely reverses the older view that property settlement agreements are against public policy because they tend to promote divorce. Rather, when a marriage has broken down irretrievably, public policy will be served by allowing the parties to plan their future by agreeing upon a disposition of their property, their maintenance, and the support, custody, and visitation of their children.

Subsection (b) [(2)] undergirds the freedom allowed the parties by making clear that the terms of the agreement respecting maintenance and property disposition are binding upon the court unless those terms are found to be unconscionable. The standard of unconscionability is used in commercial law, where its meaning includes protection against onesidedness, oppression, or unfair surprise (see section 2-302, Uniform Commercial Code [30-2-302]), and in contract law, Scott v. U.S., 12 Wall (U.S.) 443 (1870) ("contract...unreasonable and unconscionable but not void for fraud"); Stiefler v. McCullough, 174 N.E. 823, 97 Ind.App. 123 (1931); Terre Haute Cooperage v. Branscome, 35 So.2d 537, 203 Miss. 493 (1948); Carter v. Boone County Trust Co., 92 S.W.2d 647, 338 Mo. 629 (1936). It has been used in cases respecting divorce settlements or awards. Bell v. Bell, 371 P.2d 773, 150 Colo. 174 (1962) ("this division of property is manifestly unfair, inequitable and unconscionable"). Hence the act does not introduce a novel standard unknown to the law. In the context of negotiations between spouses as to the financial incidents of their marriage, the standard includes protection against overreaching, concealment of assets, and sharp dealing not consistent with the obligations of marital partners to deal fairly with each other.

In order to determine whether the agreement is unconscionable, the court may look to the economic circumstances of the parties resulting from the agreement, and any other relevant evidence such as the conditions under which the agreement was made, including the knowledge of the other party. If the court finds the agreement not unconscionable, its terms respecting property division and maintenance may not be altered by the court at the hearing.

The terms of the agreement respecting support, custody, and visitation of children are not binding upon the court even if these terms are not unconscionable. The court should perform its duty to provide for the children by careful examination of the agreement as to these terms in light of the standards established by Section 309 [40-4-204] for support and by Part IV for custody and visitation.

Subsection (c) [(3)] envisages that, if the court finds the agreement unconscionable, it will afford the parties the opportunity to negotiate further. If they are unable to arrive at an agreement that is not unconscionable, the court, on motion of either party, may decide the issues of property disposition, support, and maintenance in light of the standards established in Sections 307 through 309 [40-4-202 to 40-4-204]. The court's power to make orders for the custody and visitation of the children is set forth in Part IV [Chapter 4, part 2].

Subsection (d) [(4)] permits the parties, in drawing the separation agreement, to choose whether its terms shall or shall not be set forth in the decree. In the former event, the provisions of subsection (e) [(5)], making these terms enforceable through the remedies available for the enforcement of a judgment, but retaining also the enforceability of them as contract terms, apply. This represents a reversal of the policy of the original 1970 Act, which required a choice between "merging" the agreement in the judgment and retaining its character as a contract. Strong representations as to the undesirability of such a choice, in the light of foreign doctrines as to the enforceability of judgments, as compared with contract terms, in this area of the law, made by persons and groups whose expertise entitled them to respect, led the Conference, in 1971, to change its former decision.

There still remains a place for agreements the terms of which are not set forth in the decree, if the parties prefer that it retain the status of a private contract, only. In this instance, the remedies for the enforcement of a judgment will not be available, but the court's determination, in the decree, that the terms are not unconscionable, under the ordinary rules of res adjudicata, will prevent a later successful claim of unconscionability. Such an agreement, unless its terms expressly so permit, will not be modifiable as to economic matters. Other subjects, relating to the children, by subsection (b) [(2)] do not bind the Court.

Subsection (f) [(6)] allows the parties to agree that their provisions as to maintenance and property division will not be modifiable or can be modified only in accordance with the terms of the agreement, even though those terms are included in the decree. If the court finds that these are not unconscionable, it may include them in its decree. The effect of including in the decree a provision precluding or limiting modification of the terms respecting maintenance or property division is to make the decree nonmodifiable or modifiable only in the limited way as to those terms. Subsection (f) [(6)] thus permits the parties to agree that their future arrangements may not be altered except in accord with their agreement. Such an agreement maximizes the advantages of careful future planning and eliminates uncertainties based on the fear of subsequent motions to increase or decrease the obligations of the parties. However, as stated in the subsection, this does not apply to provisions for the support, custody, or visitation of children.

Concerning the effect of a decree as a lien on the property of the spouse against whom it is rendered, the Conference took the position that the general laws of the state, as to judgment liens, would apply. However, in jurisdictions with special statutes respecting the liens created by decrees for support, maintenance, and the like, care should be taken in preparing the repealer section not to disturb provisions it is desired to retain.

GENERAL

Allowance of Day-Care Expenses — Court Not Bound by Definition of "Day Care" in Property and Custody Agreement or in Administrative Rule — Anticipated Decrease in Support Not Binding on Court: At the time of Kimberly and Michael's divorce, they entered into a property settlement and custody agreement that provided that Michael would continue to pay a percentage of Kimberly's day-care expenses, defining "day care" as child care during a time when Kimberly was employed. After their divorce, Kimberly enrolled in college. Michael argued that the definition of "day care" as used in the agreement and as used in the child support guidelines, ARM 46.30.1525(1)(a), prohibited him from paying for a part of Kimberly's day-care expenses while she was a student and unemployed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court was not bound by the agreement and that the child support guidelines also prohibit the imputing of income to a party engaged in a plan of economic self-improvement, including education or retraining. The Supreme Court also reviewed Michael's argument that part of the agreement required a reduction in his support payments because of a change in employment and found that the language of the agreement contemplated his change in employment but only required that the support obligation be reviewed at that time. The Supreme Court noted that the agreement was reviewed and the District Court considered all the evidence before it, including the recommendations of the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) before increasing Michael's support obligation. For these reasons, the Supreme Court found that there was no abuse of discretion in the District Court's order. In re Marriage of Syverson, 281 M 1, 931 P2d 691, 54 St. Rep. 32 (1997).

Property Settlement Agreement Providing Child Support Not Binding on Court: When Kitty and Bernard divorced in 1983, they entered into a property settlement agreement that provided that neither would make child support payments to the other, although the three children of the parties were to live with Bernard. In 1987, the parties' oldest daughter went to live with Kitty, and in 1990, Bernard moved the District Court to modify the divorce decree and determine the child support obligations of both parties. Both parties argued the interpretation or misinterpretation of the agreement, but the Supreme Court found that property settlement agreements providing for child support, custody, or visitation are not binding upon the District Court, that the best interests of the child are paramount, and that a District Court does not, for that reason alone, commit error when the District Court disregards or modifies the child support provisions of a property settlement agreement. In re Marriage of Widhalm/Miller, 279 M 97, 926 P2d 748, 53 St. Rep. 1067 (1996). The rule that in the context of separation agreements made between spouses, parties cannot make binding agreements concerning the support, custody, or visitation of children was held to apply equally to postadoption agreements made between an adopted child's birth parents and adoptive parents in Groves v. Clark, 1999 MT 117, 294 M 417, 982 P2d 446, 56 St. Rep. 490 (1999).

Court Bound by Property Separation Agreement: A property separation agreement is binding on the trial court unless the agreement provides for the support, custody, or visitation of children or unless it is unconscionable. Absent those conditions, the court is required by law to abide by the maintenance agreement of the parties. The decision of whether to incorporate the separation agreement into the final decree is left to the parties. If the parties elect to have the terms incorporated into the final decree, the court has no discretion to engage in any sua sponte division of assets in the context of maintenance or property distribution, but rather must honor the parties' agreement if it is conscionable. Property Settlement Agreement Ineffective as to Renunciation of Beneficiary's Right to IRA: Upon dissolution of her marriage to Glendon, Isabel agreed to a property settlement awarding Glendon sole ownership of an IRA in which she was named as beneficiary. Later, Glendon died without having removed Isabel as the named beneficiary of the IRA and Isabel filed a renunciation of her interest in the IRA. The District Court held that Isabel could not renounce her interest in the IRA because the property settlement agreement deprived her of her interest in the IRA. Therefore, the District Court ruled that the contingent beneficiaries were not entitled to the IRA. Citing Sowell v. Teachers' Retirement Sys., 214 M 200, 693 P2d 1222 (1984), and Eschler v. Eschler, 257 M 360, 849 P2d 196 (1993), the Supreme Court held that under the property settlement agreement, Isabel lost only her marital interest in the IRA but not her interest as a beneficiary. Her renunciation of her interest was therefore operative against her interest as a beneficiary, and Isabel's interest in the IRA as a beneficiary vested in the contingent beneficiaries. In re Estate of Bruce, 265 M 431, 877 P2d 999, 51 St. Rep. 576 (1994).

Settlement Agreement From Parties' First Divorce Not to Be Set Aside Sua Sponte by Trial Court: The parties entered into a property settlement agreement that was incorporated into their divorce decree in 1989. Seven months later, they remarried; their marriage was again dissolved in 1993. The lower court found that the parties had not performed or complied with the terms of the prior decree and that they were estopped from asserting any rights under the previous agreement. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had no jurisdiction to declare the agreement null and void because neither party had requested that the agreement be set aside and there had been no finding that the agreement was unconscionable. In re Marriage of Nordberg, 265 M 352, 877 P2d 987, 51 St. Rep. 531 (1994).

Reliance on Oral Property Settlement Agreement Improper — Written Agreement Required: This section clearly requires that a separation agreement be reduced to writing. The District Court erred, on remand of In re Marriage of Hayes, 256 M 266, 846 P2d 272 (1993), by relying on an oral property settlement agreement between the parties to the underlying dissolution. A transcript of oral stipulations concerning property is insufficient for a court to determine whether the agreement itself is unconscionable. In re Marriage of Hayes, 264 M 350, 871 P2d 913, 51 St. Rep. 333 (1994), following In re Marriage of Simms, 264 M 317, 871 P2d 899, 51 St. Rep. 306 (1994).

Costs and Attorney Fees in Challenge of Separation Agreement: A District Court decision that each party pay its own costs and attorney fees was reversed and the case was remanded for determination of costs and attorney fees to be awarded to husband in wife's unsuccessful action to interpret and modify a separation agreement that provided for costs and attorney fees for the successful party in an action to enforce, modify, or interpret the agreement. In re Marriage of Caras, 263 M 377, 868 P2d 615, 51 St. Rep. 98 (1994).

Settlement Agreement — No Necessity of Findings on Statutory Factors: To the extent that any language in In re Marriage of Caras, 254 M 169, 835 P2d 715 (1992), suggests that a District Court commits reversible error by failing to make findings pursuant to 40-4-202 in considering a separation agreement that distributes the marital property, the language is overruled. The factors in that section must be considered only when a District Court divides the marital estate in absence of an agreement. In this case, the parties reached an agreement. Therefore, a determination of the net worth of the marital estate was not required in determining the conscionability of the agreement. There were no professional appraisals, the parties and one of their attorneys gave numerous conflicting appraisals, and the agreement covered maintenance, distribution of property, and child support and medical care. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in holding the agreement conscionable. In re Marriage of Caras, 263 M 377, 868 P2d 615, 51 St. Rep. 98 (1994).

Each Party to Pay Own Attorney Fees: Husband and wife each asked the court to hold the other in contempt, and each alleged failure to pay the other under a settlement agreement. The court refused both contempt requests and directed each party to pay the other what was owed, offsetting husband's $3,250 debt against wife's $4,200 debt. The settlement agreement provided that the successful party in an enforcement action was entitled to an attorney fee award. Neither party was totally successful, thus the lower court properly held that each party should pay its own attorney fees. In re Marriage of Hahn, 263 M 315, 868 P2d 599, 51 St. Rep. 73 (1994), followed in In re Marriage of Pfennigs, 1999 MT 250, 296 M 242, 989 M 327, 56 St. Rep. 981 (1999).

Laches Inapplicable to Bar Suit to Enforce Divorce Settlement Payments Fifteen Months in Arrears: A divorce settlement agreement that wife sought to enforce was a contract. It was subject to an 8-year statute of limitations. Wife filed the suit 15 months after husband stopped making payments under the agreement. Husband failed to show the extraordinary circumstances requiring application of laches that is required to dismiss a suit filed within the limitations period. In re Marriage of Hahn, 263 M 315, 868 P2d 599, 51 St. Rep. 73 (1994).

Maintenance Payments That Divorce Agreement States Are a Property Settlement — No Termination by Remarriage: Wife's remarriage did not allow husband to stop payment of maintenance to her because the written settlement agreement stated that the payments were in the nature of a property settlement. In re Marriage of Hahn, 263 M 315, 868 P2d 599, 51 St. Rep. 73 (1994).

Mutual Release — Effect on Insurance Beneficiary: A mutual release in a property settlement agreement that does not mention insurance policies does not divest the former spouse of the right to the proceeds of the policies when the former spouse is retained as the named beneficiary. Eschler v. Eschler, 257 M 360, 849 P2d 196, 50 St. Rep. 308 (1993).

Failure to Reduce Agreement to Writing: It was error for the District Court to enter a dissolution decree based on a verbal agreement when the record did not contain a written separation agreement and did contain a directive from the court to counsel, after lengthy negotiations, to prepare the document. In re Marriage of Hayes, 256 M 266, 846 P2d 272, 50 St. Rep. 87 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Simms, 264 M 317, 871 P2d 899, 51 St. Rep. 306 (1994).

Issues of Fact Arising From Separation Agreement — Summary Judgment Inappropriate: A separation agreement provided that the husband's partnership interests be liquidated and the proceeds be placed in trust for the payment of child support. When the interests had not been liquidated or child support paid in full 37 months after dissolution, the District Court granted summary judgment, holding husband responsible for $52,200 in support. Reversing and remanding, the Supreme Court found summary judgment inappropriate when issues of fact remained as to the value of the partnership, reasons for failure to liquidate, and husband's capacity to pay the support obligations. In re Marriage of Wilsey, 253 M 85, 831 P2d 590, 49 St. Rep. 406 (1992).

Improper Modification of Maintenance Awarded "for Life": The District Court modified a property settlement agreement, which provided that the wife receive $300 a month "as maintenance for life" in lieu of property for which she was to receive income, after husband unilaterally discontinued maintenance when wife began receiving social security payments. The maintenance agreement was a plain and unambiguous contract between the parties that was not subject to later interpretation or construction by a court. The agreement was drawn up by husband, a practicing attorney, who clearly understood the meaning of the term "for life". The District Court erred in modifying the agreement, absent a showing of substantial credible evidence that modification was warranted, without considering all necessary information in the original settlement agreement. In re Marriage of McKeon, 252 M 15, 826 P2d 537, 49 St. Rep. 127 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Woodford, 254 M 501, 839 P2d 574, 49 St. Rep. 887 (1992).

Separation Agreement Not Addressed in Findings: The lower court awarded an automobile to the wife. The husband appealed, arguing that the parties had signed a separation agreement that stated that he was to receive the vehicle if the parties divorced. The Supreme Court remanded the case, stating that although the agreement may have been unconscionable, the lower court was obligated to address the issue in its findings. In re Marriage of Cannon, 242 M 230, 790 P2d 479, 47 St. Rep. 752 (1990).

In-Court Stipulation Not Binding as to Custody: At the beginning of the trial before the District Court, the parties stipulated to joint custody. After hearing the evidence, the lower court awarded sole custody to the wife. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the best interests of the children were the determining factor regardless of whether the parents had entered into a written contract or an in-court stipulation. In re Marriage of Mager, 241 M 78, 785 P2d 198, 47 St. Rep. 97 (1990), followed in In re Marriage of Fesolowitz/Dechaine, 258 M 380, 852 P2d 658, 50 St. Rep. 575 (1993), and In re Marriage of Widhalm/Miller, 279 M 97, 926 P2d 748, 53 St. Rep. 1067 (1996). The rule that in the context of separation agreements made between spouses, parties cannot make binding agreements concerning the support, custody, or visitation of children was held to apply equally to postadoption agreements made between an adopted child's birth parents and adoptive parents in Groves v. Clark, 1999 MT 117, 294 M 417, 982 P2d 446, 56 St. Rep. 490 (1999).

Agreement Stating It Could Not Be Modified Incorporated in Decree — Modification of Maintenance for Subsequent Unconscionability Denied: An agreed upon property settlement incorporated into a divorce decree provided that for 4 ½ years, while she was attending college and obtaining employment thereafter, husband would pay wife $250 a month maintenance and $2,000 a year to help pay for tuition and books. The agreement provided that it could not be modified by subsequent court order except for child custody, support, and visitation modifications or upon express written consent of the parties. It mutually released the parties from all claims and rights that either had against the other. The maintenance was an inseverable part of the property settlement agreement. Wife had given up rights to property in exchange for it. The court erred in modifying the agreement to deprive wife of the maintenance and tuition and books payments. Because the decree could not be modified, the issue of whether, as the lower court found, there was a change in circumstances so substantial and continuing as to make the maintenance provisions agreement unconscionable was moot. In re Marriage of Robertson, 237 M 406, 773 P2d 1213, 46 St. Rep. 904 (1989), followed in King v. King, 276 M 500, 917 P2d 434, 53 St. Rep. 489 (1996).

No Provision in Property Settlement for Attorney Fees — Fees Improperly Awarded: Where the parties to a dissolution proceeding agreed to a property settlement that did not provide for payment of attorney fees and the District Court later issued an order providing for the attorney fees to be paid by the husband if he did not comply with the agreement, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in issuing the order for the payment of fees by the husband. The property settlement agreement was approved by the District Court but never incorporated by reference into the decree and therefore has the status of a private contract, and the remedies for enforcement of a judgment are unavailable. Absent a statute or contractual provision, attorney fees are generally not recoverable, and since neither is involved here, there was no right to those fees. Lorge v. Lorge, 207 M 423, 675 P2d 115, 41 St. Rep. 50 (1984).

Order Conditionally Setting Aside Prior Decree Found to Be Abuse of Discretion: Where the District Court entered a decree in 1981 finding the property settlement agreement of the parties not unconscionable within the meaning of 40-4-201(2) and in 1983 issued an order stating that the property settlement agreement would be set aside if not complied with by the husband by a specific date, the Supreme Court found that the District Court erred in making the 1983 order. The 1981 decree and property settlement could, under the rationale of Hadford v. Hadford, 194 M 518, 633 P2d 1181, 38 St. Rep. 1308 (1981), be modified only if the conditions specified in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., were found to exist. Because the court issued no findings of fact indicating conditions that justified the reopening of the 1981 decree, the court abused its discretion in making the 1983 order. Lorge v. Lorge, 207 M 423, 675 P2d 115, 41 St. Rep. 50 (1984).

Marital Separation Agreement Not Conveyance: A marital separation agreement is not a conveyance. A separation agreement incorporated into a divorce decree is enforceable only as a judgment. A judgment can be reopened if obtained through fraud but not for lack of fair consideration. It was error to annul a marital separation agreement under 31-2-311 (now repealed). Witbart v. Witbart, 204 M 446, 666 P2d 1217, 40 St. Rep. 994 (1983).

Unclean Hands Doctrine — Applicability: Where wife sought to avoid compliance with terms of decree of dissolution, arguing that husband's unclean hands prevented specific performance under 27-1-415, the court held that section is only applicable to contracts. It is not applicable to the enforcement of a settlement agreement incorporated into a decree of dissolution, which must be enforced as a judgment. The unclean hands doctrine is not a defense to enforcement of a judgment, especially when the defense is based on acts occurring before the entry of judgment, and the judgment has not been set aside. Lawrence v. Lawrence, 197 M 262, 642 P2d 1043, 39 St. Rep. 548 (1982).

Using Threat of Custody Dispute as Violation of Public Policy: Threat of a custody dispute in order to gain leverage in the property distribution is not violative of public policy such that the separation agreement and property settlement will be set aside. Lawrence v. Lawrence, 197 M 262, 642 P2d 1043, 39 St. Rep. 548 (1982).

Effect of Property Settlement Agreement on Life Insurance Beneficiary Designation: A husband designated his wife as primary beneficiary on a life insurance policy 1 month prior to their execution of a property settlement agreement. The property settlement agreement contained language ending the claims of one party against the other but did not specifically mention the life insurance policy. Since the nature and extent of the parties' consents to the property settlement agreement required a factual determination, the case was remanded. Soha v. West, 196 M 95, 637 P2d 1185, 38 St. Rep. 2153 (1981), distinguished in Sowell v. Teachers' Retirement System, 214 M 200, 693 P2d 1222, 41 St. Rep. 2413 (1984), and overruled in part in Eschler v. Eschler, 257 M 360, 849 P2d 196, 50 St. Rep. 308 (1993).

Challenge of Decree and Property Settlement After Six Years — Res Judicata: A property settlement and decree entered in 1974 cannot be set aside in 1980 on the grounds of unconscionability. The failure of the spouse to appeal the court's decree in 1974 has rendered the issue res judicata. Hadford v. Hadford, 194 M 518, 633 P2d 1181, 38 St. Rep. 1308 (1981).

Maintenance Modification Under Agreement Referring to Statute — Appropriateness of Employment Properly Determined: Where the parties to a previous dissolution action agreed that the wife would not have to seek employment as a condition of maintenance in order that she be able to care for their handicapped child and agreed to modification of maintenance upon a showing of those factors set out in 40-4-203, the District Court did not err in denying the husband's petition for modification where the husband proved only that his former wife was capable of working. The statute requires only that the District Court determine whether it is appropriate under the circumstances that she work. Based upon evidence that the child of the parties still needed special care at home, the District Court determined it was not appropriate. Tidball v. Tidball, 192 M 1, 625 P2d 1147, 38 St. Rep. 482 (1981).

Custody Agreement Interpreted as Contract — No Contempt Found Under Joint Custody Agreement: Where the plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement for the joint custody of their three children and the agreement was incorporated into a decree divorcing the parties, the trial court committed reversible error in finding, upon a later petition by the plaintiff for modification of the divorce decree, that the decree granted custody of the children to the defendant and in holding the plaintiff in contempt for her custody of one of the children. Agreements for the dissolution of marriage are to be interpreted by the law of contracts, and the language of the agreement controls if it is clear and unambiguous. The plaintiff committed no contemptuous act by retaining custody of one child under a joint custody agreement. Quinn v. Quinn, 191 M 133, 622 P2d 230, 38 St. Rep. 93 (1981).

Necessity of Proper Findings and Conclusions — Incorporation of Property Settlement: An action for the dissolution of marriage was brought, and dissolution was granted. The parties entered into a property settlement a week before the decree of dissolution was entered. About 3 months later, one party brought a motion to incorporate the agreement in the court's final decree. The other party objected to the adoption of the visitation provisions. After a hearing, the District Court entered a supplemental decree of dissolution, incorporating all the terms of the property settlement agreement. On appeal, the appellant argued that the trial court erred in incorporating the property settlement without making specific findings of fact regarding the impact of the visitation provided for on the best interests of the child. The Supreme Court held that the purpose of the findings and conclusions required under the rules of civil procedure was to provide a foundation for the court's judgment. The record should include the essential and determining facts upon which the court rested its conclusions of law and without which the judgment would lack support. The finding of a fact and conclusion of law that the visitation provision in the property settlement agreement was in the best interest of the child failed to set forth the essential and determining facts upon which the court rested its conclusion. Without those factors, the Supreme Court was unable to determine the propriety of the determination. The case was remanded for the required factual findings. Jones v. Jones, 190 M 221, 620 P2d 850, 37 St. Rep. 1973 (1980).

Old Separation Agreement as Marital Property Settlement: An agreement that was entered into with separation in mind, that accomplished what was expected to happen as a result of separation, and that was intended to include a disposition of the marital assets was held to be a marital property settlement agreement in a dissolution proceeding held 8 years after the agreement was entered into and separation occurred. Tureman v. Tureman, 190 M 267, 620 P2d 1200, 37 St. Rep. 1922 (1980).

Marital Property — Separate Hearings: Marital property can be distributed in a hearing separate from a divorce decree without either hearing discussing the totality of the marital estate where as here, there is a mutual agreement in the form of a separation agreement as to its disposition. Persons must be able to separate amicably and divide their property without interference when such division is feasible. In re Marriage of Miller, 189 M 356, 616 P2d 313, 37 St. Rep. 1523 (1980).

Separation Agreement — Effect of Reconciliation: Attempts of two parties to reconcile their marriage in the time between execution of a separation agreement and a final decree for dissolution does not have any effect on the separation agreement. When the terms of an agreement have been executed and the agreement does not disclose overreaching by either party, the instrument is binding as to both parties in the absence of a new agreement. Section 40-4-201, specifically the portion which states that the terms of a separation agreement are binding upon the court, is controlling here. In re Marriage of Miller, 189 M 356, 616 P2d 313, 37 St. Rep. 1523 (1980).

Contractual Obligation for Support Incorporated in Decree — Not Subject to Modification: Husband, to avoid having his divorce contested and thereby besmirching his girlfriend's name, agreed, in a property settlement agreement incorporated into the divorce decree, to pay $500 per month for 10 years for support of his children and maintenance of their home. In husband's petition for modification of this amount, the District Court was correct in identifying the property settlement agreement as a contract supported by valid consideration that, in the absence of any showing that the welfare of the children was affected, could not be modified. Winters v. Winters, 188 M 43, 610 P2d 1165 (1980).

Terms Concerning Home as Child Support — Modification: A property settlement provided that the family home be sold after the second youngest child graduated from high school. The trial court modified this to allow the wife and the youngest child to remain in the home until that child graduated from high school. The home was an integral part of the child support provisions so long as the second child was still in high school. There is no reason why the availability of the home to the wife and third child should become any less important as a term of child support once the second child has graduated from high school. Consequently, the terms concerning the home were part of the child support provision and as such may be modified by further order. Phennicie v. Phennicie, 185 M 120, 604 P2d 787 (1979).

Determination of Whether a Provision Is for Maintenance or a Property Settlement: The court stated that it would "look past mere labels to the substance" of the agreement to make the determination. It found that a provision for the payment of a lump sum over a period of time to the wife or her beneficiary, although expressed in terms of "support and maintain", was a provision for the distribution of property rather than one for maintenance. Hopper v. Hopper, 183 M 543, 601 P2d 29 (1979), followed in King v. King, 276 M 500, 917 P2d 434, 53 St. Rep. 489 (1996).

Interpretation of Agreement: A court has no right to interpret an agreement as meaning something different from what the parties intended as expressed by the language they used. Fraunhofer v. Price, 182 M 7, 594 P2d 324 (1979).

Term "Property Settlement Agreement" as Not Conveying Estate: Agreement termed "property settlement" providing one-half the income from mineral rentals for wife's support not to exceed 20 years is alimony terminated on wife's death and not property right to be paid her estate. Jones v. Flasted, 169 M 60, 544 P2d 1231 (1976).

CONSCIONABILITY

Nature of Settlement Agreement and Review of Unconscionability Determination: When a District Court determines the unconscionability of a marital and property settlement agreement, it engages in discretionary action that cannot be accurately categorized as either a finding of fact or a conclusion of law. The determination is presumed to be correct and will not be disturbed on review absent an abuse of discretion. The agreement is a contract and must be construed under the law of contracts. If the language is clear, it controls the interpretation. In re Marriage of Rolf, 2000 MT 361, 303 M 349, 16 P3d 345, 57 St. Rep. 1536 (2000).

Settlement Agreement Not Enforced Because of Economic Disparity Between Parties and Lack of Consent: A married couple signed a settlement agreement. A week later, the husband's petition for divorce prefaced his proposals as to distribution of property with the statement "If the parties are unable to reach an agreement as to division of property and indebtedness". The agreement provided that the husband would give the wife $10,000, the same amount that he had promised before the marriage to put in a bank account in her name to ensure that she would have funds to live on if the marriage fell apart. It was her third marriage, and she probably would not have considered the agreement final until she reviewed it with her attorney. The agreement ambiguously failed to state that it was either a temporary or a final agreement. Therefore, there was no meeting of the minds regarding final settlement terms. Moreover, the economic disparity between the two allowed him to take unfair advantage of her situation. The District Court did not err in failing to enforce the agreement. In re Marriage of Rolf, 2000 MT 361, 303 M 349, 16 P3d 345, 57 St. Rep. 1536 (2000).

Qualified Domestic Relations Order Authorized — Statutory Criteria Met: The husband developed health problems and began receiving short-term disability and supplemental pay from his employer. It was obvious that he would not be gainfully employed again, so he opted for early retirement benefits, resulting in cessation of his disability payments. The wife filed for legal separation, and the District Court issued a qualified domestic relations order (QDRO) to provide the wife with a portion of her husband's retirement benefits. The husband asserted that the court lacked authority to issue the QDRO because the parties did not stipulate to the entry of the order in writing or record a stipulation in open court. Pursuant to In re Marriage of Simms, 264 M 317, 871 P2d 899, 51 St. Rep. 306 (1994), a District Court may enforce a written agreement between the parties if the agreement is not unconscionable. Here, the agreement was apparently reduced to writing but no finding of conscionability was made. Nevertheless, a District Court may also enforce a QDRO if it applies the criteria in 40-4-202 governing the division of a marital estate and enters appropriate findings of fact and conclusions of law. The District Court found that distribution of the retirement benefits as set forth in the QDRO represented a fair and equitable distribution of the marital estate given the factors in 40-4-202 and made findings regarding those factors, including duration of the marriage, the wife's occupation, sources of income, employability, and needs. Accordingly, the court was authorized to enter the QDRO, and the Supreme Court affirmed. In re Marriage of Harkin, 2000 MT 105, 299 M 298, 999 P2d 969, 57 St. Rep. 422 (2000).

Later Finding of Unconscionability Proper Upon Failure to Make Initial Determination of Conscionability: Wife contended that a dissolution agreement was unconscionable as a matter of law because: (1) her understanding of English was limited; (2) both parties were initially represented by the same attorney; and (3) the agreement did not include a statement of the parties' incomes, property valuations, or child support calculations. Husband maintained that the trial court was estopped from finding unconscionability because of its initial finding that the agreement was not unconsiconable. However, in this case, the District Judge did not make a specific inquiry into conscionability because the parties had reached a separation agreement. The Supreme Court held that when a District Court fails to make an initial investigation of conscionability of an agreement, it is not estopped from later finding that the agreement is unconscionable if the decree adopting the agreement is set aside pursuant to Rule 60(b)(3), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). In re Marriage of Gudmundson, 1998 MT 54, 288 M 70, 955 P2d 648, 55 St. Rep. 226 (1998).

Conscionability of Inclusion of Veteran's Disability Payments in Maintenance Award — Approval by State Court of Maintenance Award in Any Amount: Parties entered into a maintenance agreement that was clearly intended to include husband's Veterans Administration disability payments within the maintenance award. The agreement provided that husband would pay wife one-half of his gross retirement benefits, including his veterans disability pay. The District Court did not err in authorizing the maintenance award, even though the payments potentially exceeded 50% of husband's disposable income. Although 10 U.S.C. 1408 states that the federal government will not garnish more than 50% of a service member's retirement pay, it does not prohibit a state court from approving a maintenance or custody award in any amount. The agreement constituted a voluntary contract between the parties that did not purport to assign the disability benefits to wife, and the District Court properly required husband to do what he had agreed to do. In re Marriage of Stone, 274 M 331, 908 P2d 670, 52 St. Rep. 1256 (1995).

Unconscionable Support Agreement — Attribution of Monthly Payments as Support or Maintenance and Method of Determining Disposable Income: Ann and Ed entered into a property settlement agreement for the dissolution of their marriage. The agreement provided for Ann to have actual physical control of the parties' four children, for Ann to make payments to Ed for 1 year, and for Ann to make payments of one-half of her disposable income to Ed for 10 years. The District Court refused to enforce those portions of the agreement relating to child custody, child support, and maintenance. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to enforce these parts of the agreement because the agreement did not indicate whether the monthly payments to Ed were child support or maintenance and did not specify how Ann's disposable income was to be determined. Because the parties did not submit a revised agreement, the District Court was free to make its own order with regard to maintenance. In re Marriage of Bukacek, 274 M 98, 907 P2d 931, 52 St. Rep. 1141 (1995).

Oral Stipulations and Written Agreements Used to Determine Conscionability in Property and Maintenance Awards — Not Binding for Custody, Visitation, and Support Matters: Husband and wife entered into an oral settlement agreement regarding custody, visitation, support, property, and maintenance but failed to reduce the agreement to writing as required by statute. Acknowledging the parties' failure to follow the statutory requirement to reduce the stipulations to writing, the District Court rejected the parties' on-record stipulations and agreements and disposed of all issues at trial. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the District Court erred by failing to consider the parties' on-record stipulations and agreements to the extent possible in applying the statutory criteria. Harmonizing the statutory requirements of this section with Miller, Mager, McLean/Fleury, and Hayes, the Supreme Court ruled that stipulations and agreements regarding property and maintenance are binding on a court only if written and found conscionable, while custody, visitation, and support must be decided by statutory criteria regardless of any oral stipulations or written agreements. In re Marriage of Simms, 264 M 317, 871 P2d 899, 51 St. Rep. 306 (1994), followed, as to parties' in-court stipulations, in In re Marriage of Schnell, 273 M 466, 905 P2d 144, 52 St. Rep. 1059 (1995). Simms also followed in In re Marriage of Bukacek, 274 M 98, 907 P2d 931, 52 St. Rep. 1141 (1995), and In re Marriage of Franks, 275 M 66, 909 P2d 712, 53 St. Rep. 41 (1996).

Failure to Address Conscionability of Separation Agreement When Converting to Dissolution Decree — Remand: It was reversible error warranting remand for the District Court to neglect to address the conscionability of a separation agreement when converting the agreement to a final decree of dissolution, especially in light of the circumstances and understanding of the parties. In re Marriage of Caras, 254 M 169, 835 P2d 715, 49 St. Rep. 684 (1992).

Stipulated Modification Limitation — Events Following Dissolution Not Justification for Reopening Judgment: The parties signed a property settlement agreement that included a modification limitation authorized under this section and that required the agreement of both parties for modification. Wife contended that several events substantially altered the valuation of the marital estate, making it necessary to reopen the agreement, including: (1) the forgiveness of a substantial debt owed to husband's parents, knowledge of which was allegedly withheld from wife during settlement negotiations; (2) gifts of stock interests made to husband by his parents after dissolution; (3) the diagnosis of cancer in wife's father and his pending divorce, which precluded his financial help to her; and (4) action by her former attorney for unpaid fees. The District Court did not find any of the changed circumstances to be substantial and continuing so as to make the terms of the agreement unconscionable, nor did the Supreme Court, which noted that the parties freely stipulated to the modification limitation and that although the changed conditions resulted in a predictably better financial condition for the husband, he could not be held responsible for the events. After-acquired property did not become part of the marital estate, and there was no evidence of fraud perpetrated by husband to deny wife her rightful share of the estate. In re Marriage of Hamilton, 254 M 31, 835 P2d 702, 49 St. Rep. 604 (1992), distinguishing In re Marriage of Madden, 211 M 237, 683 P2d 493 (1984), and In re Marriage of Dalley, 232 M 235, 756 P2d 1131 (1988).

Reopening of Dissolution Decree Without Finding of Unconscionability — Reversible Error: A dissolution decree found that although husband's military pension was not included in a separation agreement, it was included in the general terminology of the agreement. The District Court applied Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), in granting wife's motion for reconsideration because wife had been advised by counsel that she had a vested interest in the pension and that mention of the pension was therefore not required. The District Court found that the lack of mention of the pension was intentional and did not constitute a waiver or relinquishment of the pension by wife. After reopening the decree, the court granted wife 50% of the pension and made further modifications in property disposition. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied subsection (3) of this section, which governs separation agreements, in stating that the standard that justifies reopening the judgment is unconscionability. As in Patzer v. Patzer, 243 M 34, 792 P2d 1101 (1990), absent facts or allegations by wife that the agreement was unconscionable, reopening the decree constituted reversible error. In re Marriage of Laskey, 252 M 369, 829 P2d 935, 49 St. Rep. 322 (1992).

Terms of Separation Agreement Precluding Modification of Maintenance: A separation agreement provided that maintenance payments were intended to be temporary and that wife would receive maintenance for 24 months or until her death or remarriage, whichever occurred first. Following satisfaction of the maintenance obligation in full, wife struggled financially and sought a modification based on changed circumstances that rendered the prior agreement unconscionable. By law, parties are free to preclude or limit any future modification of maintenance by the terms of the separation agreement. The District Court found that the limiting language in the agreement expressly prohibited any attempt to modify maintenance provisions in the original decree. Summary dismissal of the motion for modification was not improper. In re Marriage of Johnson, 252 M 258, 828 P2d 388, 49 St. Rep. 240 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Pearson, 1998 MT 236, 291 M 101, 965 P2d 268, 55 St. Rep. 992 (1998).

Unconscionability Standard — Applies Only to Separation Agreements: In a divorce proceeding, the trial court stated that the wife's contribution in raising three children and running the family home was negligible and that therefore it was not unconscionable to give the husband 75% of the marital property. The Supreme Court reversed the decision, ruling that the standard of conscionability only applies to separation agreements and in divorce proceedings the property must be divided on an equitable basis. The court also ruled that the lower court had abused its discretion in finding that the wife's contribution was negligible. In re Marriage of Miller, 238 M 197, 777 P2d 319, 46 St. Rep. 1199 (1989).

Question of Full Disclosure in Property Settlement Agreement — Fraud and Misrepresentation Not Found: Wife appealed the lower court denial of her motion to set aside a property settlement agreement, contending that the court approved the settlement without knowing of certain assets which formed part of the marital estate. However, she overlooked the fact that even after the court became aware of the disputed items, it still found nothing on the face of the agreement which made it unconscionable. Ample evidence indicated that there was no fraud or misrepresentation. Denial of the motion to set aside was affirmed. In re Marriage of Gerleman, 228 M 158, 741 P2d 426, 44 St. Rep. 1421 (1987).

No Basis to Reopen Dissolution Decree: The appellant did not claim the existence of unconscionability, fraud, or any other inequitable situation that would give a court a legal basis upon which to reopen a dissolution decree. She attempted to enhance enforcement of the judgment that incorporated the parties' stipulations as to the property division by making a motion to modify. She was precluded by statutory time limits and by the fact that she had no legal basis to compel a court to reopen the judgment. Since no conditions existed that would justify reopening the judgment, the District Court was not required to enter findings of fact. Keirle v. Keirle, 210 M 214, 681 P2d 703, 41 St. Rep. 1016 (1984).

Agreement Unconscionable When Instigated to Get Wife's Property as Condition of Continuing Marriage: Petitioner appealed a judgment awarding approximately one-sixth of the marital property to him and the balance to the respondent wife. Petitioner contended that the trial court abused its discretion when it refused to divide the marital property 50-50 under an agreement executed between the parties. The Supreme Court held that the trial court properly refused to divide the property according to the agreement, stating that the result would be the same whether the agreement was a separation agreement or, as the husband contended, a postnuptial agreement. The evidence showed that in instigating the agreement the husband took advantage of his wife regarding her property as a condition to continuing the marriage, contrary to what is required of one in a confidential relationship. The agreement was unconscionable as a matter of law even though the trial court did not specifically find unconscionability. Myers v. Myers, 210 M 173, 682 P2d 718, 41 St. Rep. 990 (1984).

District Court Altering Property Settlement Agreement — No Finding of Unconscionability — Reversible Error: A real property description in a property settlement agreement was unambiguous, although cluttered and alleged by counsel for both parties to be confusing. Counsel signed an addendum to the agreement changing a property dividing line in the description, and the District Judge altered the property settlement description, substituting that in the addendum for that in the original agreement. Because a property settlement agreement entered into by the parties is binding on the court unless the court finds the agreement unconscionable and there was no such finding in this instance, it was reversible error for the court to alter the agreement. The addendum signed by counsel was irrelevant. Blankenship v. Blankenship, 210 M 31, 682 P2d 1354, 41 St. Rep. 901 (1984), followed in In re Marriage of Franks, 275 M 66, 909 P2d 712, 53 St. Rep. 41 (1996).

Enforceability of Nonmodification Clause: Parties filed a joint petition for dissolution of marriage in 1979. With their petition they filed a separation and property settlement agreement that included a provision requiring the husband to pay the wife $375 a month until she died or remarried. The agreement contained a nonmodification clause. The court found the agreement was not unconscionable and incorporated it into the decree. In 1982, the wife petitioned the District Court to order the husband to appear and show cause why he had not complied with the agreement. The husband cross-petitioned for an order terminating his maintenance obligation. The District Court granted the husband's petition. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded, finding that under 40-4-201(6) the nonmodifiability clause was valid and enforceable regarding maintenance. In re Marriage of Bolstad, 203 M 131, 660 P2d 95, 40 St. Rep. 344 (1983).

Duress in Entering Property Settlement Agreement: Where appellant sought to set aside prior separation agreement and property settlement on grounds of duress, the court held the totality of circumstances in this case indicated any threat by respondent to seek custody rights of children or to impugn appellant's reputation because of adultery was not sufficient to constitute duress in entering the agreement. Lawrence v. Lawrence, 197 M 262, 642 P2d 1043, 39 St. Rep. 548 (1982).

Agreement Not Unconscionable: An agreement reached at the time of separation, whereby the husband paid the wife 50% of the net value of their assets and assumed the debts of the business, appeared fair on its face. Though the record reflects that the wife testified that she had been beaten, was in fear of further beatings, and was denied counsel, the court held that the record did not establish fraud, undue influence, duress, or unconscionability and therefore did not set aside the agreement. Tureman v. Tureman, 190 M 267, 620 P2d 1200, 37 St. Rep. 1922 (1980).

Conscionability of Divorce Settlement Agreement Not Same as Sufficiency — Finding of Conscionability Not Res Judicata on Completeness of Agreement: At the conclusion of a hearing on the enforcement of his divorce settlement agreement several months after his divorce, the former husband moved to amend the finding of deficiency of the settlement agreement or, in the alternative, to grant a new trial. The motion was denied and the former husband appealed. The District Court had found in its decree of legal separation that the settlement agreement executed by the parties and incorporated into the decree was conscionable and should be approved. The husband appealed that this finding was res judicata as to the issue of the marital agreement, thus barring any further requests by the wife. The Supreme Court found that the res judicata requirement of identity of issue was not met because there was sufficient dissimilarity between the issues in the two actions. The agreement disposed of the marital property but made no provision for any future support. The property disposition had no direct bearing on any contemporary agreement for obligations to be fulfilled in the near future. Res judicata, therefore, did not bar further action on any alleged agreements between the parties as to matters not involving the disposition of marital property. In re Marriage of Harris, 189 M 509, 616 P2d 1099, 37 St. Rep. 1696 (1980).

Jurisdiction to Determine Conscionability Following Decree — Res Judicata: The District Court had no jurisdiction to determine conscionability when its earlier decree of dissolution found the agreement to be not unconscionable and the parties, subject matter of the action, issues, and capacities of the parties were the same. The issue of conscionability was thus res judicata. Hopper v. Hopper, 183 M 543, 601 P2d 29 (1979). However, see In re Marriage of Blair, 271 M 196, 894 P2d 958, 52 St. Rep. 401 (1995).

Commissioners' Note

Alternative A, which is the alternative recommended generally for adoption, proceeds upon the principle that all the property of the spouses, however acquired, should be regarded as assets of the married couple, available for distribution among them, upon consideration of the various factors enumerated in subsection (a) [(1)]. It will be noted that among these are health, vocational skills and employability of the respective spouses and these contributions to the acquisition of the assets, including allowance for the contribution thereto of the "homemaker's services to the family unit." This last is a new concept in Anglo-American law.

Subsection (b) [(2)] affords a way to safeguard the interests of the children against the possibility of the waste or dissipation of the assets allotted to a particular parent in consideration of being awarded the custody or support of a child or children.

1987 Amendment: In (1), in second sentence, deleted "antenuptial agreement of the parties" from list of factors court must consider; and inserted (5) providing that premarital agreements must be enforced as provided in Title 40, chapter 2, part 6.

1983 Amendment: Throughout (1), substituted references to division of property for references to disposition of property; inserted (3) regarding ownership of spouse's interest in property that vests prior to entry of decree; and inserted (4) stating effects of division of property.

Source of 1983 Amendment: The 1983 amendment to this section is based on a similar provision in Minnesota's version of the UMDA.

GENERAL

Collateral Estoppel Applied to Preclude Reopening Settlement Agreement Regarding Disposition of Jointly Owned Marital Property — Property Interest Not Altered by Filing of Partition Action: When the husband and wife separated, they entered a property settlement agreement dividing all their real and personal property, agreeing that they would continue to jointly own their residence, with the right of survivorship. In the decree of dissolution, the District Court affirmed that the property settlement agreement was fair and equitable. Several years after the divorce, seeking to wrap up financial affairs with her former husband, the wife moved to partition the residence and obtain an equal division of the value of the property. At trial, the husband argued that the property settlement agreement was unfair and that the wife should be denied any recovery for her interest in the residence because it was purchased prior to the marriage and because she did not contribute to the marriage financially. The wife moved in limine to preclude the husband from reopening matters that should have been raised in the divorce proceedings. The court denied her motion, reasoning that the property was not divided in the divorce and that because the partition action was an action at equity, surrounding circumstances could be considered. The court found that the filing of the partition action severed the joint tenancy, and the husband was then allowed to introduce evidence regarding the marital equities. The court ultimately concluded that the wife's interest in the residence was not compensable because she had not contributed significantly to the acquisition or improvement of the property or contributed to the parties' assets during the marriage. The wife appealed. The Supreme Court found that res judicata and equitable estoppel barred relitigation of the fairness of the joint ownership issue, which was considered and approved in the decree of dissolution. Further, the mere filing of the partition action does not sever one's interest in property. Rather, the parties' respective interests remain intact until the judgment severing the tenancy is entered. The rebuttable presumption that underlies a joint tenancy in property is equal shares, and there was nothing in the evidence to rebut that presumption and no evidence of postdecree events that would justify a different result. The husband failed to carry the burden of rebutting the presumption of equal shares, and the Supreme Court remanded for a 50-50 partition of the value of the residence. Rausch v. Hogan, 2001 MT 123, 305 M 382, 28 P3d 460 (2001).

Order to Pay Dental Expenses First Claimed at Hearing and Not Supported by Record: An order that husband pay up to $3,000 for repair of wife's tooth was reversed because wife first raised the issue at the dissolution hearing, the issue was a personal injury claim and not a dissolution issue, the record did not support wife's claim that husband injured her tooth and that a doctor had made a repair estimate, and the record showed that husband objected to the findings and conclusion regarding the tooth. In re Marriage of Bradshaw, 270 M 222, 891 P2d 506, 52 St. Rep. 154 (1995).

Veteran's Disability Benefits Not to Be Included in Total of Marital Estate: The Supreme Court held that the District Court, relying on the U.S. Supreme Court's interpretation of the federal Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act in Mansell v. Mansell, 490 US 581 (1989), had properly excluded the husband's veteran's disability pay in calculating the total of the marital estate. In holding that Montana state courts may not include in a marital estate military retirement pay that has been waived in order to receive veteran's disability benefits, the state Supreme Court stated that it was partially overruling In re Marriage of Cooper, 243 M 175, 793 P2d 810 (1990). The state Supreme Court also indicated that the disability benefits could be considered when the lower courts were considering the potential future earning power of the parties in a dissolution action. In re Marriage of Murphy, 261 M 363, 862 P2d 1143, 50 St. Rep. 1360 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Strong, 2000 MT 178, 300 M 331, 8 P3d 763, 57 St. Rep. 709 (2000).

Court to Order Division of Property in Lieu of Maintenance: James Dowd alleged that the District Court had erred in awarding his wife the bakery business. The Supreme Court held that 40-4-203 and this section, when read together, compel a District Court, when proper, to order a division of marital property, as opposed to an award of maintenance, to satisfy the financial need of the parties. In re Marriage of Dowd, 261 M 319, 862 P2d 1123, 50 St. Rep. 1341 (1993).

Distribution of Property Pursuant to Agreement Not Governed by Statutory Factors: Thomas and Dorothy were married in 1987 after signing a premarital agreement at Dorothy's request. Before they were married, Dorothy raised cattle on leased land. Later, as a condition of remaining married, Thomas insisted that Dorothy give up the leased land, which she did. Dorothy was subsequently forced to sell her cattle. The parties were then divorced. Dorothy claimed that the District Court erred in some of its findings pursuant to this section. The Supreme Court held that while that may be true, the Supreme Court would not address those alleged errors because the factors under this section are no longer to be considered and are irrelevant once a premarital agreement is found to be enforceable. The Supreme Court also held that the error of the District Court in considering the factors listed in this section was harmless because the District Court enforced the terms of the premarital agreement. In re Marriage of Stout, 261 M 10, 861 P2d 856, 50 St. Rep. 1119 (1993).

"Law of the Case" Doctrine:

Once a decision has been rendered by the Supreme Court on a particular issue between the parties, the decision is binding upon the courts and those parties and cannot be relitigated in a subsequent appeal. Implicit in this court's holding in a prior appeal in this case, that the District Court had sufficient grounds to modify the distribution of marital assets to allow the husband what he would have received if he had been paid child support payments, is agreement with the District Court's child support grant and valuation of the marital personal property. Therefore, the doctrine of the law of the case applies, and the wife could not have those matters addressed again in the present (second) appeal following remand after the first appeal. In re Marriage of Becker, 255 M 357, 842 P2d 332, 49 St. Rep. 983 (1992).

Supreme Court dismissed appeal on issue of partition of real property in marital dissolution proceeding addressed and decided in prior appeal of this case on ground that, where decision has been rendered by the court on a particular issue between the same parties in the same case, such decision is binding on the parties and the courts and cannot be relitigated in a subsequent appeal. In re Marriage of Gies, 218 M 433, 709 P2d 635, 42 St. Rep. 1715 (1985).

Balance Sheets Sufficient Disclosure: The wife alleged that the husband had not sufficiently disclosed all of his assets because he did not provide her with the books to his family's farming business. The Supreme Court ruled that his providing her with the balance sheets of the business was sufficient. In re Marriage of McFarland, 240 M 209, 783 P2d 409, 46 St. Rep. 2060 (1989).

Award of Trust Property in Dissolution Action: Items of personal property were placed in trust for the husband and children of the marriage, but the house and land were not made part of the trust, and there is no evidence that they were held in the resulting trust. The language of the trust agreement was unambiguous and clearly stated which property was placed in the trust. The District Court correctly held that the husband voluntarily gave up interest in the trust and that therefore the award of the trust property to the wife was proper. In re Marriage of Malquist, 234 M 419, 763 P2d 1116, 45 St. Rep. 2020 (1988).

Will Provisions — Improper Consideration of Waiver of Property Rights in Distribution of Marital Property: It was improper for the District Court to find that wife's signing of a release of claims to husband's property, as part of her will and contingent upon husband's death, constituted a waiver of property rights upon dissolution of marriage. In re Marriage of Dow, 230 M 416, 750 P2d 1064, 45 St. Rep. 317 (1988).

Title Not Controlling in Distribution of Assets — Joint Tenants: Title does not control the distribution of marital assets. Therefore, the lower court properly refused to base its decision on the fact that the parties held the property as joint tenants. In re Marriage of Fitzmorris, 229 M 96, 745 P2d 353, 44 St. Rep. 1809 (1987).

Question of Whether Court Improperly Referred to Marital Misconduct: Where the lower court referred to the husband's placement in Galen Hospital by the wife and the fact that the husband was not permitted to return to the family home or entitled to access to the parties' liquid assets, such references did not comprise improper comment on marital misconduct but rather helped explain the court's decision to order the sale of the family home and divide the proceeds equally in the interests of both parties. In re Marriage of Bultman, 228 M 136, 740 P2d 1145, 44 St. Rep. 1402 (1987).

Trust Property: In determining whether trust property is properly included in the marital estate, the trust agreement controls. The court must determine whether the trust is revocable or irrevocable, whether the trust is for the present or future benefit of the beneficiaries, and whether the intention to create the trust is clearly ascertainable. Where the record reveals little information from which the Supreme Court can establish the elements of trust, the case must be remanded for findings regarding the trust disposition. In re Marriage of Malquist, 227 M 413, 739 P2d 482, 44 St. Rep. 1193 (1987).

Attorney Fees as Liabilities of the Marital Estate: There was no clear abuse of discretion when the District Court found that the wife was unable to pay her attorney fees, so both husband's and wife's attorney fees were listed as liabilities to be paid out of the marital estate. The court then subtracted these and all other liabilities from the marital estate to find a net marital estate. Finally, the court awarded husband the marital estate but required him to pay all liabilities and to pay wife one-half the net marital estate. The effect was to have husband pay one-half of wife's attorney fees and vice versa. Because each party received one-half the net marital estate, each liability subtracted from the gross marital estate cost each party one-half the amount of each liability. In re Marriage of Cole, 224 M 207, 729 P2d 1276, 43 St. Rep. 2136 (1986).

Sale of Personal Property Awarded in Property Settlement — Left By Other Party — No Contempt: The Supreme Court determined that there was substantial credible evidence that sale of some tools by the former wife did not constitute noncompliance with the property settlement agreement after former husband came to the house and took all the tools he could find. Since he took all the tools he wanted, it was not contempt for wife to sell whatever remained. In re Marriage of Purkett, 222 M 225, 721 P2d 349, 43 St. Rep. 1217 (1986).

District Court Adoption of Party's Proposed Findings: The test applied by the Supreme Court to determine if the District Court's use of proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law was proper is whether the proposed findings are sufficiently comprehensive and pertinent to the issues to provide a basis for decision and whether they are supported by the evidence presented. In re Marriage of Benner, 219 M 188, 711 P2d 802, 42 St. Rep. 1943 (1985), followed, with regard to lack of evidence of valid loan agreement, in In re Marriage of Malquist, 227 M 413, 739 P2d 482 (1987), and in In re Marriage of Schmitz, 255 M 159, 841 P2d 496, 49 St. Rep. 919 (1992).

Defense Against Child Abuse Charges — Debt for Attorney Fee: The attorney fee incurred by the husband to defend himself against child abuse charges is not a "necessary" within the meaning of 40-2-106. Thus, in a subsequent dissolution action, the wife is not liable for this debt, although it was incurred during the couple's marriage, since only the husband contracted with the attorney. In re Marriage of White, 218 M 343, 708 P2d 267, 42 St. Rep. 1634 (1985) , distinguished in Missoula YWCA v. Bard, 1999 MT 177, 295 M 260, 983 P2d 933, 56 St. Rep. 692 (1999).

Equal Liability for Payment of Loan: The lower court was within its discretion in ordering wife and husband to share equally in paying back a loan to them from his mother, because both signed a note on the loan and wife was legally obligated to pay on the note as well as husband. In re Marriage of Perry, 217 M 162, 704 P2d 41, 42 St. Rep. 1101 (1985).

Error to Refuse Intervention in Proceeding to Enforce Foreign Divorce Decree: An Oregon divorce decree awarded Montana property to the wife. Before the wife filed an action under 26-3-203 to enforce the foreign decree, husband conveyed the Montana property to Christiana, who later proposed to intervene in the instant action. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erroneously refused intervention. Insofar as the Oregon court attempted to directly transfer husband's Montana property to wife, its act was not effective in this state. The District Court erred in treating the foreign decree as a direct and self-executing transfer of Montana property. However, in an enforcement action in this state, the Oregon decree is an enforceable determination of the rights and equities of husband and wife with respect to the Montana real property in question. Gammon v. Christiana, Inc., 210 M 463, 684 P2d 1081, 41 St. Rep. 1161 (1984). For application of principle to effect of Montana divorce decree on out-of-state property, see In re Marriage of Bahm, 225 M 331, 732 P2d 846, 44 St. Rep. 279 (1987).

Workers' Compensation Benefits as Marital Assets — Error to Preclude as Matter of Law: The District Court found as a matter of law that workers' compensation benefits of the husband were not marital assets. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment, ordering an evidentiary hearing because it was unable to make an informed opinion from the record. At the hearing, findings should address the terms and purpose of the workers' compensation award. Blankenship v. Blankenship, 210 M 31, 682 P2d 1354, 41 St. Rep. 901 (1984).

Award of Maintenance After Equitable Division of Property: Sections 40-4-202 and 40-4-203 are to be read together. Thus, if the District Court has made an equitable distribution of property but then determines that the property was insufficient to provide for the spouse's financial needs, it may award maintenance. Such a determination must be made individually in each case, requiring the District Court to balance the considerations of both sections, supported by substantial evidence with appropriate findings to form an adequate basis for review. Hilt v. Hilt, 209 M 140, 679 P2d 783, 41 St. Rep. 604 (1984).

Interest Payable on Cash Award Property Settlement: Where the defendant husband in a divorce proceeding argued unsuccessfully that the parties had orally modified a property settlement agreement requiring a cash award to the wife, the Supreme Court awarded interest on the unpaid cash award from the date it was required to be paid under the dissolution decree until the time of actual payment. Under the rationale of Knudson v. Knudson, 191 M 204, 622 P2d 1025, 38 St. Rep. 154 (1981), once a person is liable for a money judgment resulting from a property settlement and payment is not made, the person entitled to the settlement is further entitled to a fair rate of interest. Gibson v. Gibson, 206 M 460, 671 P2d 629, 40 St. Rep. 1780 (1983).

Postdissolution Death of Spouse — Debts and Taxes Not Marital Debt Payable Before Property Distribution: Husband died after the effective date of the dissolution of the marriage. Wife was not responsible for the debts of and taxes on his estate, and it was error for trial court to include them as a marital debt that must be paid before distribution of the property. In re Marriage of Beck, 203 M 455, 661 P2d 1282, 40 St. Rep. 565 (1983).

Overly Extended Proceedings — Valuation of Property — Present Fair Market Values to Be Used: The parties were granted a decree of dissolution on May 17, 1978. The decree did not make a property disposition, but rather the District Court expressly reserved jurisdiction to make the disposition at a later date. A special master completed a report valuing stocks and oil and gas interests on January 31, 1981. On March 3, 1981, the property distribution hearing was held. The court made findings of facts and conclusions of law on June 22 and entered judgment on September 16, 1982. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted the time lapse of 34 months from the date of dissolution to the hearing on property distribution. The Supreme Court encouraged District Court to conclude all matters upon entry of a decree of dissolution. In unusual cases where it is not able to make the property distribution at the time, the District Court must make written findings that a postponement of the property disposition is in the best interest of the parties and must set either a time for a specific hearing date or a time period for final disposition. Present fair market values should be used for valuation although there may be more than one valuation point. There was abuse of discretion because there were substantial differences in the value of assets from the court's valuation dates to the time of the dispositional hearing. Krause v. Krause, 200 M 368, 654 P2d 963, 39 St. Rep. 1809 (1982).

Property Settlement Hearing — Delay a Denial of Justice: A husband filed for dissolution of his marriage on February 27, 1980. On January 28, 1981, the marriage was dissolved, with the property settlement hearing set for May 11, 1981. On the hearing date the husband's attorney failed to appear without court approval for his absence. To have continued the hearing to the next available date, 7 months later, would have been a denial of justice to the wife under Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const. Bolich v. Bolich, 199 M 45, 647 P2d 844, 39 St. Rep. 1197 (1982).

Discovery of Documents — Time Allowance: Husband failed to comply with court's order allowing shorter time for him to respond to interrogatories, and wife had complained of insufficient time to examine one of his tax returns, which contained information regarding a piece of property over which there was a dispute as to whether it should be included in the marital estate for property disposition purposes. Since the Supreme Court was returning the case to the District Court for reconsideration of the marital estate assets, the Supreme Court directed that wife be allowed to pursue examination of the disputed piece of property. Hill v. Hill, 197 M 451, 643 P2d 582, 39 St. Rep. 723 (1982).

FELA Settlement Funds Properly Considered in Amendment of Award of Permanent Maintenance: Where, following the injury of the defendant in a railroad accident, the District Court eliminated an award of permanent maintenance, the court did not abuse its discretion in reinstating the award based upon the defendant's receipt of money in settlement of a Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) claim for his injuries. The fact that the FELA funds cannot be awarded as a property settlement under federal law does not mean that the same money cannot be considered by the District Court in reevaluating its previous denial of permanent maintenance for the plaintiff. Heintzelman v. Heintzelman, 193 M 183, 631 P2d 290, 38 St. Rep. 1074 (1981).

Tax Consequences of Property Distribution to Be Considered by Court: When, in an action for divorce, the District Court failed to consider the tax consequences of the property distribution before entering its final judgment, the judgment was vacated and the cause remanded for further hearing. When a property distribution ordered by a court includes a taxable event precipitating a concrete and immediate tax liability, such tax liability should be considered by the District Court. But a District Court does not abuse its discretion by refusing to consider theoretical tax consequences when the court-ordered property distribution does not contemplate any taxable event that triggers present tax liability. Beck v. Beck, 193 M 166, 631 P2d 282, 38 St. Rep. 1054 (1981), followed in In re Marriage of Turbes, 234 M 152, 762 P2d 237, 45 St. Rep. 1805 (1988), and in In re Marriage of Lee, 249 M 516, 816 P2d 816, 48 St. Rep. 816 (1991), and distinguished in In re Marriage of Taylor, 257 M 122, 848 P2d 478, 50 St. Rep. 186 (1993).

Maintenance Versus Property Settlement — Termination on Remarriage — Intent of Court Decree: In a divorce decree, the language of the decree provided that payments to the wife were to be in lieu of a division of property and were to be for her support and maintenance. This language showed that the intent of the court was clearly that the payments were for support and maintenance, not a division of property, and could therefore be terminated upon the wife's remarriage. Bertagnolli v. Bertagnolli, 185 M 1, 604 P2d 299 (1979).

Second Appeal — "Law of the Case" Rule Applied: When the Supreme Court states a principle or rule of law necessary to the decision of a case, such pronouncement becomes the "law of the case" and must be adhered to throughout its subsequent progress, both in the trial court and upon subsequent appeal. Here, a previous case involving the same parties established the "law of the case" for this appeal. The former husband was estopped, in the previous case, from challenging monthly payments to the former wife, having successfully availed himself of the benefits of the property settlement provisions of the marriage dissolution decree (the monthly payments having been held to be a part of the property settlement). Therefore, the denial of the former husband's second petition to terminate the payments is affirmed on the "law of the case" of his first petition. Englund v. Englund, 184 M 488, 603 P2d 1048, 36 St. Rep. 2211 (1979).

Property Disposition — Insufficient Evidence: Lack of a court reporter's record was not a fatal error. As substitute, a bystander's bill and exhibits admitted at trial disclosed insufficient credible evidence to support a property disposition because certain assets were not considered. Martinez v. Martinez, 175 M 280, 573 P2d 667 (1978).

Parties to Contract — Effect of Property Disposition: Because the obligations of a contract are limited to the contracting parties, plaintiff properly sued defendant for recovery on two retail installment contracts executed by defendant, even though the object of the contracts became part of a property disposition to defendant's wife in a divorce decree which transferred the indebtedness along with the subject property. Gambles v. Perdue, 175 M 112, 572 P2d 1241 (1977).

Applicability of Act: The Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act applied to a trial on property disposition held before the effective date of the Act because the court did not enter judgment until after the effective date. Morse v. Morse, 174 M 541, 571 P2d 1147 (1977).

"Property Settlement" Payments Mistakenly Labeled "Alimony" — Not Subject to Modification: District Court properly denied husband's motion to set aside alimony award payments on grounds they were void because divorce was granted to him. Husband was estopped after relying upon divorce decree to compel wife to transfer certain property to him to challenge validity of decree because what obviously was intended to be a part of the "property settlement" became mistakenly labeled "alimony". Englund v. Englund, 169 M 418, 547 P2d 841 (1976).

POWERS OF DISTRICT COURT

Due Process Violated by Entry of Judgment After Scheduling Hearing Without Scheduling Hearing to Determine Amount of Judgment: The parties had divorced in 1987. At that time, the husband was required to pay a total of $50,000 to his wife within a 2-year period. The parties remarried within 5 months of the dissolution and divorced again in 1993. Upon first hearing their case, the Supreme Court remanded the matter and instructed the District Court to reinstate the judgment against the husband from the first divorce. The lower court held a telephone conference to consider scheduling matters and at that time asked the wife to submit the amount that she believed her husband owed her. Subsequently, the District Court entered a judgment against the husband. The Supreme Court held that the husband's due process rights had been violated because the judgment was a lien against his property and he was not allowed a hearing in which to present evidence as to the amount that he believed he owed. The Supreme Court also rejected the wife's argument that a hearing was not required and that the amount owed could be determined just by looking at the record. In so doing, the Supreme Court distinguished the case before it from Young v. Flathead County, 241 M 223, 786 P2d 658 (1990). In re Marriage of Nordberg, 271 M 328, 896 P2d 447, 52 St. Rep. 468 (1995), followed in In re Marriage of Pospisil, 2000 MT 132, 299 M 527, 1 P3d 364, 57 St. Rep. 547 (2000).

Trust Account Improperly Ordered: The District Court exceeded the authority granted in this section to set up a trust when the record did not establish that the trust was needed for the support, maintenance, education, and general welfare of the parties' minor child until he reached majority. In re Marriage of Smith, 264 M 306, 871 P2d 884, 51 St. Rep. 277 (1994).

Proper Methodology for Deciding Issue on Remand: On remand for further consideration of the valuation of marital real property, the Supreme Court did not require the District Court to use any particular methodology, and it was not error for the judge, who was not involved in the original proceedings, to conduct a hearing rather than base his decision on the record. In re Marriage of Becker, 255 M 357, 842 P2d 332, 49 St. Rep. 983 (1992).

Power of Court to Award Dependency Exemptions: The 1984 federal amendments to 26 U.S.C. 152(e), regarding exemptions for dependent children of divorced parents, did not divest state courts of jurisdiction to allocate the exemptions in a decree of dissolution. A state District Court may assign the exemptions if it finds that the allocation would serve the best interests of the children and the parties. However, a District Court's refusal to award the exemptions does not constitute an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Milesnick, 235 M 88, 765 P2d 751, 45 St. Rep. 2182 (1988), followed in In re Marriage of Foreman, 1999 MT 89, 294 M 181, 979 P2d 193, 56 St. Rep. 373 (1999).

Factors Necessary to Show Extrinsic Fraud in Property Disposition: Wife contended that husband's failure to fully inform her of family assets, his misrepresentations concerning certain debts and property, and his forging of her name on the couple's joint income tax return were sufficient factors to demonstrate extrinsic fraud. However, in order to demonstrate extrinsic fraud, it must be shown that there was a material misrepresentation or concealment of assets that prevented a party from fully trying the case and that other equities, such as laches or negligence, were not present. In re Marriage of Lyman, 233 M 283, 762 P2d 203, 45 St. Rep. 1491 (1988), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Power to Create Trust: Under this section, the District Court does not have the authority to establish a trust to support a child after his 18th birthday unless the child is incompetent, retarded, or otherwise unable to care for himself. The trust created by the District Court in this case would have been distributed to the child on his 18th birthday. Since the child is not retarded, incompetent, or disabled, the trust was contrary to this section. In re Marriage of Alt, 218 M 327, 708 P2d 258, 42 St. Rep. 1621 (1985).

Proper to Consider Entire Marital Estate on Remand: On remand for hearing and specific findings on the disposition of an inheritance received by the wife shortly before dissolution, the District Court properly reconsidered the prior valuation and distribution of the marital estate to the extent necessary to allow the court to inform itself of the total estate and the proper equitable apportionment of all assets, including the inheritance. In re Marriage of Morse, 217 M 339, 708 P2d 559, 42 St. Rep. 1235 (1985).

Error to Order Liquidation of Family Corporation in Marital Property Disposition Decree: The court agreed with husband's contention that the trial court erred in ordering contingent liquidation of a family corporation for the enforcement and security of the wife's property division if the husband failed to make installment payments as ordered. The corporation was not a party, and thus the court had no jurisdiction over its property. Section 35-1-921 (now repealed) does not include dissolution of a corporation for nonpayment of marital obligations by one of the corporation's stockholders. However, the court remanded the case, since the trial court does have power to secure a marital settlement by granting a security interest in stock or such further security arrangements necessary to enforce the decree. In re Marriage of Buxbaum, 214 M 1, 692 P2d 411, 41 St. Rep. 2243 (1984).

Distinction Between Modification and Clarification of Decree: A final dissolution decree was entered on March 3, 1983. Because of later disputes between the parties concerning the property settlement, the District Court held two hearings and then entered an order: (1) setting March 3, 1983, as the date of valuation for some corporate stock that was awarded to the wife; and (2) giving the wife the right to choose the stock. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that neither action by the District Court was a modification of the dissolution decree in violation of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, but rather each was a clarification of the decree. In re Marriage of Rohrich, 211 M 130, 683 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 1261 (1984).

Ex Parte Maintenance Order Entered After Final Decree Upheld: It was proper for the District Court to award wife temporary maintenance ex parte even though the effect of the award was amendment of the dissolution decree without holding the hearing required by Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court held that since the intent of the District Court's earlier order, i.e., that the wife be maintained pending final disposition of the matter, was not being carried out, it was within the District Court's discretion to grant the wife temporary maintenance. In re Marriage of Rohrich, 211 M 130, 683 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 1261 (1984).

Conflict Between Divorce Decree and Insurance Policy — Terms of Property Agreement to Prevail: The deceased's children, beneficiaries of the deceased's life insurance policy under the terms of a prior divorce decree, brought an action against their stepmother to recover the proceeds of the policy, paid to her under policy provisions conflicting with the divorce decree. The District Court did not err in following the terms of the divorce decree and awarding the proceeds to the plaintiffs. The provisions of the divorce decree making the children the policy beneficiaries were merely a written incorporation of the deceased's offer to his former wife and to the court. This agreement created equitable rights of the plaintiffs in the policy and cannot be defeated by a subsequent attempt to change the named beneficiary in the policy. Herrig v. Herrig, 199 M 174, 648 P2d 758, 39 St. Rep. 1274 (1982).

Water Right as Marital Property — Division: In a marriage dissolution, the court divided a ranch into two parcels, giving one to each spouse. The water rights to the land were divided, and easements were provided to allow access to the divided parcels. The wife, whose parcel contained the well, argued that the District Court lacked the power to divide the existing water right and that the power to make such a division rests in the Water Judge alone. On appeal, the Supreme Court said that although the Water Judges have exclusive jurisdiction over the determination and interpretation of existing water rights, a District Judge has original jurisdiction to dissolution of marriage proceedings and is required by statute to divide and distribute all marital property involved, including any water rights. Jensen v. Jensen, 193 M 247, 631 P2d 700, 38 St. Rep. 1109 (1981).

Lump-Sum Award of Double to Wife Where Husband Has Greater Earning Capacity: A lump-sum award to the wife in a marriage dissolution of a proportion of the marital estate of 2 to 1 was not an abuse of discretion by the District Court where the husband did have a greater earning capacity, despite his unemployment at the time of dissolution and immediately prior to the dissolution. Section 40-4-202 requires the District Court to consider the opportunity of the parties for future acquisition of capital assets and income. "Opportunity" is a broad word that includes the capacity of the parties to earn future income. Karr v. Karr, 192 M 388, 628 P2d 267, 38 St. Rep. 506 (1981).

Lack of Findings on Marital Home Not Correctable by District Court After Time Limitations Expire: In a divorce settlement, the trial court findings contained no determination of the net worth of the parties, the net worth of the husband's medical practice, or the relative financial contributions of the two parties. The findings of fact also were inconclusive as to the value and disposition of the family home. Five months after the decree was entered, the husband petitioned for amendment, requesting award of the family home to him. Eleven months later the District Court found that it was the original intention of the court to distribute the home to the husband. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred in its attempt to amend the decree. Under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., clerical errors in judgments may be corrected at any time since correction does not alter substantive rights of the parties. Here the attempted change adversely affected the wife's substantive rights by depriving her of her interest in the family home, a major asset of the marriage. Such error is judicial in nature and could not be corrected by the District Court except by motion made within the time limitations of Rules 50(b), 52(b), 59, or 60(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P. No such motion having been made, the error would have been correctable by appeal, which was never taken by either of the parties. The District Court therefore lacked jurisdiction to make the change effected by its entry of the amended findings and decree. The case was remanded. Thomas v. Thomas, 189 M 547, 617 P2d 133, 37 St. Rep. 1710 (1980).

Award of Money Remaining Unpaid Under Prior Court Order: The District Court did not err in awarding respondent money appellant had been obligated to pay under a previous court order. Respondent's remedy is not limited to the statutes relating to the collection of judgments on accrued obligations. It is proper for the District Court to determine how much was owed and to enter a judgment for that amount, thus avoiding duplication of proceedings. In re Marriage of Dahl, 188 M 128, 612 P2d 196 (1980).

Fraud in Property Settlement: Fraud upon the court is a species of extrinsic fraud that will afford equitable relief. Fraud upon the court and upon one of the parties to the property settlement agreement is within the scope of 40-4-208, justifying a reopening of the provisions of a divorce decree as to property disposition. Pilati v. Pilati, 181 M 182, 592 P2d 1374 (1979), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Equitable Powers: District Court has equitable powers to deal with the judgment of property rights between parties in a divorce action. In re Marriage of Blair, 178 M 220, 583 P2d 403 (1978).

Disposition in Annulment: Husband, having clearly requested District Court to use its equitable powers in annulment action to make disposition of property acquired in joint names of husband and wife before marriage, could not complain on appeal from disposition order that District Court had no right to do so. Houser v. Houser, 173 M 65, 566 P2d 73 (1977).

Property Division: Property division could not be decreed in same suit in which husband was denied divorce and wife was granted separate maintenance. Stapleton v. Stapleton, 158 M 96, 488 P2d 1144 (1971), following Decker v. Decker, 56 M 338, 185 P 168 (1919), and Boggs v. Boggs, 119 M 540, 177 P2d 869 (1947).

DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT

General

District Court's Failure to Determine Net Worth of Marital Estate Not Improper: The District Court divided the marital estate of the parties without determining the net worth of the property. The Supreme Court ruled that the statute did not require such a determination. Rather, the test is whether the findings as a whole are sufficient to determine the net worth and to decide if the distribution was equitable. In re Marriage of Stephenson, 237 M 157, 772 P2d 846, 46 St. Rep. 700 (1989).

General District Court Discretion in Achieving Equitable Distribution: Generally, the District Court is vested with wide discretion in the performance of its duty to achieve an equitable distribution of property in dissolution proceedings. In valuing property, the court is not bound by the opinion of a particular party or expert; rather, the court remains free, in its discretion, to adopt any reasonable valuation of property that is supported by the record. In re Marriage of Luisi, 232 M 243, 756 P2d 456, 45 St. Rep. 1023 (1988), followed in In re Marriage of Johns, 238 M 256, 776 P2d 839, 46 St. Rep. 1249 (1989), In re Marriage of Becker, 244 M 469, 798 P2d 124, 47 St. Rep. 1729 (1990), In re Marriage of Scott, 246 M 10, 803 P2d 620, 47 St. Rep. 2237 (1990), In re Marriage of Dzivi, 247 M 165, 805 P2d 567, 48 St. Rep. 140 (1991), In re Marriage of Spence, 257 M 188, 849 P2d 161, 50 St. Rep. 225 (1993), In re Marriage of Rada, 263 M 402, 869 P2d 254, 51 St. Rep. 110 (1994), In re Marriage of Robinson, 269 M 293, 888 P2d 895, 51 St. Rep. 1243 (1994), and In re Marriage of Harper, 1999 MT 321, 297 M 290, 994 P2d 1, 56 St. Rep. 1280 (1999). See also In re Marriage of Zander, 262 M 215, 864 P2d 1225, 50 St. Rep, 1522 (1993), In re Marriage of McNellis, 267 M 492, 885 P2d 412, 51 St. Rep. 1125 (1994), In re Marriage of Foreman, 1999 MT 89, 294 M 181, 979 P2d 193, 56 St. Rep. 373 (1999), and In re Marriage of Hanni, 2000 MT 59, 299 M 20, 997 P2d 760, 57 St. Rep. 279 (2000).

Amendment of Property Division: The trial court awarded the wife less than one-half of the marital estate after specifically finding that an equal division was appropriate. The issue of property division was remanded to the trial court to consider whether an amendment was appropriate. In re Marriage of Reich, 222 M 192, 720 P2d 286, 43 St. Rep. 1167 (1986).

Equal Liability for Payment of Loan: The lower court was within its discretion in ordering wife and husband to share equally in paying back a loan to them from his mother, because both signed a note on the loan and wife was legally obligated to pay on the note as well as husband. In re Marriage of Perry, 217 M 162, 704 P2d 41, 42 St. Rep. 1101 (1985).

Sale of House — House Large Part of Assets — Sale and Even Proceeds Division Upheld: The lower court was within its discretion in ordering the family house sold and the proceeds evenly divided. The house constituted a very large part of the total marital assets, husband would have substantially less than half the assets if he did not get his even share of the sale proceeds, and though wife wished to remain in the house because it was close to the childrens' school and the mortgage payment was low, she should be able to obtain adequate housing with her $17,750 share of the sale proceeds. In re Marriage of Perry, 217 M 162, 704 P2d 41, 42 St. Rep. 1101 (1985).

Consideration of Dissipation of Marital Assets Not Reliance on Marital Misconduct: In making a distribution of marital assets, the Supreme Court held that although there was considerable evidence relating to the use of assets by the husband, including waste, dissipation, and need for a wage assignment for payment of child support, such evidence was not considered by the District Court to be marital misconduct. Pursuant to this section, a court must consider dissipation of an estate by one party. Thus, such evidence was admissible, and there was sufficient evidence before the trial court to justify its division of marital assets. In re Marriage of Merry, 213 M 141, 689 P2d 1250, 41 St. Rep. 2009 (1984).

Consideration of Support of Stepchildren: In an appeal of a decree of dissolution of marriage, the husband claimed District Court error in that the court did not find that the wife made a negative contribution to the marriage because the wife and her two sons consumed three-fourths of the marital income while she contributed only one-third of that income. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that evidence presented by the husband did not rebut the presumption set forth in 40-6-217 that his support of the wife's sons was given as a parent. In re Marriage of Peterson, 211 M 118, 683 P2d 1304, 41 St. Rep. 1252 (1984).

Agreement Unconscionable When Instigated to Get Wife's Property as Condition of Continuing Marriage: Petitioner appealed a judgment awarding approximately one-sixth of the marital property to him and the balance to the respondent wife. Petitioner contended that the trial court abused its discretion when it refused to divide the marital property 50-50 under an agreement executed between the parties. The Supreme Court held that the trial court properly refused to divide the property according to the agreement, stating that the result would be the same whether the agreement was a separation agreement or, as the husband contended, a postnuptial agreement. The evidence showed that in instigating the agreement the husband took advantage of his wife regarding her property as a condition to continuing the marriage, contrary to what is required of one in a confidential relationship. The agreement was unconscionable as a matter of law even though the trial court did not specifically find unconscionability. Myers v. Myers, 210 M 173, 682 P2d 718, 41 St. Rep. 990 (1984).

Excessive Mortgage to Secure Payments Nullified: Attachment by the trial court of a mortgage to all of husband's property (value totaling $203,236) to secure court-imposed obligation to pay $9,000 to wife over 10 years as part of property division was reversed as unreasonable and inequitable. Hunter v. Hunter, 196 M 235, 639 P2d 489, 39 St. Rep. 59 (1982).

Closely Held Corporation — Stock Interest Unchanged: A major asset of the marriage was Stratford Farms, Inc. The District Judge concluded that it would be in the best interest of the estate if each spouse was awarded his/her existing shares of stock in the corporation. This conclusion was based on the serious tax consequences if she ordered the liquidation of the corporation and on testimony of two of three sons who owned stock in the corporation, both of whom said they could vote their stock without regard to the personal dispute between their parents. The District Judge did not abuse her discretion in treating the stock as she did. Stratford v. Stratford, 193 M 195, 631 P2d 296, 38 St. Rep. 1093 (1981), followed in In re Marriage of Youngs, 215 M 330, 698 P2d 404, 42 St. Rep. 405 (1985).

Attorney Fees — Related to Property Distribution: In an appeal from the modification of a decree issued upon dissolution of her marriage, the wife urged that the District Court erred in not awarding her attorney fees. She argued that the improper determination of net worth and improper distribution of property necessitated reversal of the fees decision. The Supreme Court felt it was best, in light of its decision to remand the case regarding the property issues, to vacate the order of the District Court regarding the attorney fees and leave it to the discretion of that court to modify the attorney fees order or not after rehearing. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981).

Liability for Rental Value of Property Awarded to Spouse: Where, following dissolution of the parties' marriage, the husband continued to live in a house awarded to the wife, the trial court did not err in awarding the wife the reasonable rental value of the property. The fact that the wife took no steps notifying the husband that he would be liable for rental value is immaterial, as the husband knew or should have known he was occupying property that was not his. Because no abuse of discretion was shown, the trial court's determination as to the value of the property will not be disturbed on appeal. Knudson v. Knudson, 191 M 204, 622 P2d 1025, 38 St. Rep. 154 (1981).

Title to House in Joint Tenancy: In an action for dissolution, it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to order that the title to the house remain in joint tenancy with the right of survivorship. Vashler v. Vashler, 183 M 444, 600 P2d 208 (1979).

Contribution of Wife: The trial court did not abuse its discretion in rejecting the husband's contention that the marital property awarded the wife was excessive and did not accurately reflect her contribution because she did not have a farming and ranching background and that it was his labor and financing that increased the value of the property. Kaasa v. Kaasa, 181 M 18, 591 P2d 1110 (1979).

Review of Discretion: In determining whether District Court abused its discretion in rendering property division, question is whether District Court acted arbitrarily without employment of conscientious judgment or exceeded bounds of reason in view of all the circumstances. Zell v. Zell, 174 M 216, 570 P2d 33 (1977). See also In re Marriage of Gallinger & Weissman, 221 M 463, 719 P2d 777, 43 St. Rep. 976 (1986).

Discretion of Trial Court to Adjust Property Rights in Favor of Wife: Trial court did not abuse its discretion by awarding wife proportionately larger share of marital property to offset her increased obligations where husband was unable to contribute to support of minor children. Perkins v. Perkins, 168 M 78, 540 P2d 957 (1975).

Abuse of Discretion

Separation Agreement Overlooked — Discretion Abused: The District Court acted unreasonably and arbitrarily in abuse of its discretion by: (1) concluding that the parties' separation agreement, which provided maintenance to the wife, was abandoned in absence of supporting evidence; (2) distributing the marital estate 4 to 1 favoring the husband; (3) ordering the wife fully responsible for the family home payments and liable to the husband for his equity in the home upon default; and (4) not providing any maintenance to the wife to make these payments after finding that she was in need of maintenance. In re Marriage of Bowman, 226 M 99, 734 P2d 197, 44 St. Rep. 488 (1987).

Error to Award Portion of Estate Directly to Wife for Education of Adult Son: District Court erred in two respects in awarding 65% of the net marital estate to the wife in order to compensate wife for the expense she would incur in educating the parties' son. First, it was error to award a portion of the marital estate directly to the wife for education of the son instead of using a separate fund or trust. Second, it was error to consider the wife's educational expenses since, by doing so, the District Court effectively placed an improper obligation on the husband to support his son beyond majority. In re Marriage of Hurley, 222 M 287, 721 P2d 1279, 43 St. Rep. 1271 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Heckler, 274 M 277, 908 P2d 208, 52 St. Rep. 1231 (1995).

Distribution of Corporate Asset — Election Ordered: Although there was a proper factual basis for distribution of a corporate asset to the wife, as a matter of law the trial court did not have the power to order the distribution of corporate property as the corporation was not a party to the dissolution action. The issue was remanded to allow the husband, who owned all shares of the corporation, to elect to accept distribution of the corporate asset to the wife or accept a property substitution equal in value to the value assigned the corporate asset. In re Marriage of Reich, 222 M 192, 720 P2d 286, 43 St. Rep. 1167 (1986), distinguished in In re Marriage of Martin, 265 M 95, 874 P2d 1219, 51 St. Rep. 443 (1994).

Financial Condition of Parties at Time of Marriage — Major Factor in Property Division: When the record indicated that the wife brought $425,618 into the marriage at its outset and the husband brought in $12,355, the award by the District Court was inadequate and an abuse of discretion. The Supreme Court held that the source of marital property is a major factor to be considered in dividing the property. In re Marriage of Summerfelt, 212 M 332, 688 P2d 8, 41 St. Rep. 1775 (1984).

Abuse of Discretion to Consider Factors Not Supported in Record: In a dissolution of marriage proceeding, husband and wife presented conflicting testimony on the total value of the marital estate, principally composed of a ranch. In its findings, the District Court applied factors not found in the record and arrived at a value that was different from that put forth by either the husband or wife. The Supreme Court reversed on this issue, holding that the District Court had abused its discretion by using factors not supported in the record to determine the value of the ranch. In re Marriage of Garst, 199 M 393, 649 P2d 450, 39 St. Rep. 1477 (1982).

Equal Division of Residence — Abuse of Discretion: After purchasing a residence, the house payments for the first 5 years were made from the husband's income while the wife cared for the children and the house. A 1971 dissolution decree provided for the wife and children to remain in the house, its disposition to be decided at a later time. The wife made all house payments for the next 10 years. In 1981 the District Court apportioned the parties' interest in the residence, ordering an equal division of the net proceeds upon its sale. This was a clear abuse of discretion because the contributions of the parties were not equal, nor were the parties' relative abilities to acquire property in the future. Torma v. Torma, 198 M 161, 645 P2d 395, 39 St. Rep. 839 (1982), distinguished in In re Marriage of Stoneman, 2000 MT 274, 302 M 107, 14 P3d 12, 57 St. Rep. 1145 (2000), in which equal division of proceeds from sale of the family home was proper because both parties retained an interest in the property by making one-half the mortgage payments until the home was sold.

Prohibiting Sale of Residence Past Majority Age of Child — Abuse of Discretion: A 1971 dissolution decree apportioned only the personal property of the parties. In 1981, in a proceeding for modification of the decree, the District Court abused its discretion by ordering that the parties' residence not be sold until the youngest child finished college at the age of 22. This in effect amounted to child support past the age of majority when no express agreement or decree provision provided for such support. Torma v. Torma, 198 M 161, 645 P2d 395, 39 St. Rep. 839 (1982).

Use of Outdated Financial Statement: The court abused its discretion in dividing marital property estimated at a value of $63,714 in a manner resulting in the husband receiving only a 1975 truck and by making such award based on an outdated financial statement presented by the wife. Kramer v. Kramer, 177 M 61, 580 P2d 439 (1978).

Award Contrary to Finding: When the court, in a finding of fact, stated that the properties of the parties should be divided as equally as possible but proceeded to make a very disparate award, it clearly abused its discretion. Berthiaume v. Berthiaume, 173 M 421, 567 P2d 1388 (1977), distinguished in In re Marriage of Scoffield, 258 M 337, 852 P2d 664, 50 St. Rep. 560 (1993), and In re Marriage of Corey, 266 M 304, 880 P2d 824, 51 St. Rep. 859 (1994).

No Abuse of Discretion

Land Valuation Consistent With All Evidence — Remand for Errors in Inconsistent Application of Confusing Valuation Methodology: The District Court did not act arbitrarily or abuse its discretion in valuing two lots. The valuation was consistent with the testimony of both the husband and the wife and with the county's valuation and bills submitted for improvements. However, the court was directed to correct two omissions in the calculations in its oftentimes confusing valuation methodology, a methodology not consistently applied. In re Marriage of Hockaday, 237 M 413, 773 P2d 1217, 46 St. Rep. 910 (1989).

Power of Court to Award Dependency Exemptions: The 1984 federal amendments to 26 U.S.C. 152(e), regarding exemptions for dependent children of divorced parents, did not divest state courts of jurisdiction to allocate the exemptions in a decree of dissolution. A state District Court may assign the exemptions if it finds that the allocation would serve the best interests of the children and the parties. However, a District Court's refusal to award the exemptions does not constitute an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Milesnick, 235 M 88, 765 P2d 751, 45 St. Rep. 2182 (1988), followed in In re Marriage of Foreman, 1999 MT 89, 294 M 181, 979 P2d 193, 56 St. Rep. 373 (1999).

Award of Estate Property to Husband — Assumption of Marital Debts: It was proper for the District Court to award the marital estate property to the husband as long as he assumed full responsibility for the marital debts, which equaled the value of the property, to relieve the wife of responsibility for payment of estate obligations. There was a possibility of a deficiency judgment if the property were sold, and award to the husband was a reasonable alternative. In re Marriage of Hall, 228 M 36, 740 P2d 684, 44 St. Rep. 1321 (1987).

Evidence to Support Valuation of Ranch and Offset of Award: Following the dissolution of marriage proceeding, the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it considered the source of marital property as a major function in the division of ranch property or when it offset a prior maintenance award from the husband's property settlement. Citing In re Marriage of Summerfelt, 212 M 332, 688 P2d 8, 41 St. Rep. 1775 (1984), the court stated that the $520,000 grant to the husband, who at the time of his marriage into an established ranching family had little ranching experience and brought five head of cattle into the marriage, constituted an equitable settlement. Likewise, since the trial court awarded the husband $28,000 for living expenses, despite the fact that his bank accounts contained over $27,000, the Supreme Court ruled that the award should be offset against the property award. In re Marriage of Watson, 227 M 383, 739 P2d 951, 44 St. Rep. 1167 (1987).

Wife's Valuation More Credible: It was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to find the wife's valuation of property more credible than the husband's and to impose a depreciation factor of .25 on the values to ensure against an inflated estimation. In re Marriage of Dunn, 226 M 394, 735 P2d 1117, 44 St. Rep. 749 (1987).

No Abuse of Discretion in Divorce Settlement:

District Court did not abuse its discretion when it substantially adopted wife's valuation of the marital estate. The court's conclusions were not arbitrary or unreasonable, and husband's own testimony supported wife's evaluation, the two differing by estimates of 10% or less on the total value and the value of wife's share. In re Marriage of Manus, 225 M 457, 733 P2d 1275, 44 St. Rep. 398 (1987).

Following dissolution of the marriage, husband and wife negotiated and signed a property settlement and child support agreement. The husband subsequently informed his attorney of his dissatisfaction with the agreement. The District Court allowed the amended agreement to be incorporated into the supplementary decree of dissolution. A year later the husband filed a motion to amend the judgment, alleging unconscionability. After a hearing to determine the parties' financial condition, the court held the agreement valid. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, stating that the husband had knowingly entered into the agreement and was competently represented by counsel. Prior to the execution of the final decree, the agreement was twice revised. In re Marriage of Hangas, 223 M 343, 725 P2d 1205, 43 St. Rep. 1773 (1986).

Unequal Division When Wife Has Custody of Two Children: Parties married for 10 years were in their mid-thirties and had children aged 7 and 10 when they separated. He was in the construction business, and she had 2 years of college, training as a legal secretary, and experience as a keypunch operator and bookkeeper. Their major asset was the home, worth $67,000-$70,000, with $40,000 left to pay on it. They owed nearly $10,000 in other debts. The wife was granted physical custody of the children and the right to live in the home until the oldest child reached 18, at which time the home was to be sold and the equity evenly distributed. The husband was ordered to pay the mortgage and other debts, child support, health insurance for the children, and the wife's attorney fees. Of the parties' personal property, valued at $12,000, the husband was granted property worth approximately $2,000. There was no abuse of discretion in the apportionment of the marital estate. The husband argued the court made a wholesale adoption of the wife's estimates of the value of personal property, but the record showed no estimates offered by the husband. In re Marriage of Johnson, 225 M 404, 732 P2d 1345, 44 St. Rep. 353 (1987).

Nearly Equal Division of Assets and Income From Assets — Retirement Income Split 70/30 — Limited Duration Maintenance for Wife's Education: Upon dissolution of 35-year marriage, it was not abuse of discretion for the trial court to award approximately equal value of property and resultant income to each party, to split the husband's civil service retirement benefits, and to award $150 a month maintenance to the wife for a short period to help her while she returned to school. Maintenance, although diminishing the husband's income for a while, differed from an award of marital assets and was clearly permissible for the purpose of making wife self-supporting. The award of 30% of husband's retirement benefits was necessary because the wife's benefits at retirement would be small, since she had to forgo employment to care for her husband and family prior to his retirement. In re Marriage of Singer, 222 M 255, 721 P2d 755, 43 St. Rep. 1242 (1986).

Court Order That Husband Buy Wife's Stock in Ranch Not Abuse of Discretion: The court did not err in ordering husband to exercise option to purchase wife's stock for $117,000 by October 1, 1985, or execute and deliver to wife a promissory note for the principal sum of $117,000 at 8% interest over 30 years in annual payments of $10,300 and a final balloon payment. Husband argued that the judgment should be modified to provide for a lower annual payment without interest. The Supreme Court rejected his argument, finding the evidence sufficient to support the size of the annual payments. The court held that there was equitable apportionment of the marital assets. In re Marriage of Wessel, 220 M 326, 715 P2d 45, 43 St. Rep. 405 (1986). See also In re Marriage of Kovarik, 1998 MT 33, 287 M 350, 954 P2d 1147, 55 St. Rep. 117 (1998).

Land Bought With Wife's Premarital Money and Husband's Marital Income — Even Distribution of Proceeds of Sale: The lower court was within its discretion in equally dividing the proceeds of the sale of a piece of property, despite wife's claim that she used $5,000 from her premarital savings for its downpayment, because husband's income was used for the rest of the payments. In re Marriage of Perry, 217 M 162, 704 P2d 41, 42 St. Rep. 1101 (1985).

Equal Allocation of Ranch Debt — No Abuse of Discretion: The District Court did not err in making an equal allocation of ranch operating debt incurred prior to separation. Both husband and wife worked on the ranch and together incurred the ranch indebtedness. The debt is a marital debt, and the court may order it to be borne by both parties. In re Marriage of Staudt, 216 M 196, 700 P2d 175, 42 St. Rep. 740 (1985).

No Abuse of Discretion in Excluding Car Wash From Marital Estate: A District Court order divided the marital estate, disregarding a car wash, equally between the parties. The District Court concluded that husband's interest in car wash would be maintained by him in order to provide an opportunity for future income because his physical disability affected his ability to earn a living. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court decision and held that trial judge properly considered the positions of the parties at the outset of the marriage, the contributions of each party to the marriage, each party's age, health, and occupation, as well as each party's future prospects. In re Marriage of Childers, 216 M 125, 700 P2d 594, 42 St. Rep. 692 (1985).

District Court to Consider All Factors: The District Court awarded nearly all of marital estate to wife in lieu of child support from husband, whose occupation was professional gambler. The trial court found that the best interests of the children would be served by allowing them to remain in the family home, that forced sale of the family home would divert and dissipate assets needed for support, and that the only reasonable means to protect and promote the best interests of the children were to award the home to the mother. Husband appealed on the division of property issue, and the Supreme Court found that the District Court had not abused its discretion. Issues of property and support are not totally irrelevant to each other or inextricably interwoven; the court properly considered all factors and made a decision based on the extent to which they were interrelated. In re Marriage of King, 216 M 92, 700 P2d 591, 42 St. Rep. 666 (1985).

Alleged Ambiguity and Indefiniteness in Method of Payment — No Abuse of Discretion: The Supreme Court upheld the method of payment ordered by the trial court where assets were to be divided equally by calculating a net value of marital assets, subtracting the amount for personal property and other marital assets awarded wife, with husband to pay wife's residual equity in the marital estate ($461,170.87) over 10 years with interest at 2% below the prime rate as used by local banks. The court rejected husband's assertion that such a method of payment violates public policy because of its indefiniteness and ambiguity as to when payments are due and the interest to be paid, noting that the trial court's order does not prevent husband from refinancing his obligation to acquire more satisfactory terms. In re Marriage of Ziegler, 215 M 208, 696 P2d 983, 42 St. Rep. 298 (1985).

Inclusion in Marital Estate of Husband's Earnings After Separation — Not Abuse of Discretion: The court distinguished Wagner v. Wagner, 208 M 369, 679 P2d 753 (1984), from the present case and held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion by including husband's earnings after separation since, unlike the facts in Wagner, the Loegerings did not embark upon totally divergent financial courses at the time of separation. Additionally, the parties in this case did not negotiate any settlement agreement at separation as in Tureman v. Tureman, 190 M 267, 620 P2d 1200 (1980). Any determination of the marital assets at the time of separation would clearly have been inequitable. In re Marriage of Loegering, 212 M 499, 689 P2d 260, 41 St. Rep. 1892 (1984). See also In re Marriage of Staudt, 216 M 196, 700 P2d 175, 42 St. Rep. 740 (1985).

No Abuse of Discretion in Apportioning Marital Assets for Failure to Address Each Item Separately: The Supreme Court found no abuse of discretion by the District Court in apportioning the marital assets. Division of the house on other than a 50-50 basis was not erroneous when a review of the record shows that the District Court conscientiously gave consideration to the elements set forth in In re Marriage of Jorgensen, 180 M 294, 590 P2d 606 (1979), and cases cited therein, even if the court failed to "articulate" each item separately within its findings and conclusions. Sell v. Sell, 193 M 88, 630 P2d 222, 38 St. Rep. 956 (1981), followed in In re Marriage of Bell, 220 M 123, 713 P2d 552, 43 St. Rep. 226 (1986).

Division of Property — Failure of Husband to Supply Financial Information: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in dividing property between the parties based on the information before it when the husband failed to supply financial information as ordered and then appealed the court's division of property. In re Marriage of Dahl, 188 M 128, 612 P2d 196 (1980).

Court's Optional Plan Allowing Husband to Purchase Wife's Share of Ranch Not an Abuse of Discretion: The court did not abuse its discretion in giving the husband an option to purchase his wife's interest in the family ranch over a period of 30 years at 7% interest. It was implicit in the court's judgment and there is sufficient evidence in the record to support the conclusion that the payment plan set up by the court was economically feasible for the husband to comply with. Jacobson v. Jacobson, 183 M 517, 600 P2d 1183 (1979).

Use of Conscientious Judgment: The court did not abuse its discretion in an award of support and maintenance to appellant or in the property disposition since the record failed to disclose an arbitrary exercise of discretion without employment of conscientious judgment. Jerome v. Jerome, 175 M 429, 574 P2d 997 (1978). See also In re Marriage of Gallinger & Weissman, 221 M 463, 719 P2d 777, 43 St. Rep. 976 (1986), and In re Marriage of J.J.C. & P.R.C., 227 M 264, 739 P2d 465, 44 St. Rep. 1068 (1987).

Sufficiency of Evidence, Findings

Trial Court Discretion in Discounting Stock and Considering Profit-Sharing Plan — No Fault Ascribed to Findings and Assignment of Debt: The wife claimed error in division of marital property because the trial court imposed a de facto stock discount on shares of the husband's corporation, failed to include the interest in the husband's profit-sharing plan, and interjected fault into a no-fault dissolution through consideration of the fact that the wife's management of the family casino had resulted in large debts to the marital estate. The Supreme Court affirmed on each issue. The trial court was within its discretion in setting the stock value within the range of evidence presented at trial, and in light of the considerable amount of debt ascribed to the husband, it was reasonable for the court to grant the husband his profit-sharing plan proceeds. As to the claim of fault, the financial findings that the wife took issue with were proper and aided the court in considering the equitable distribution of the property, so no fault was interjected through the court's consideration of the business debts. In re Marriage of Hanni, 2000 MT 59, 299 M 20, 997 P2d 760, 57 St. Rep. 279 (2000). See also In re Marriage of Maedje, 263 M 262, 868 P2d 580, 51 St. Rep. 47 (1994).

Convoluted Argument Not Supported by Record: James Dowd did not work in the family bakery and was not active in its management. He did not contribute any of his earnings to pay family debts. On appeal, Dowd alleged that the trial court erred in determining the net worth of the parties. The Supreme Court held that Dowd's argument that he should be credited with one-half of the marital debts paid by his wife from her earnings achieved by running the bakery was absurd and was not supported by the record or Montana law. In re Marriage of Dowd, 261 M 319, 862 P2d 1123, 50 St. Rep. 1341 (1993).

Extensive Findings — Negation of Appellant's Argument: James Dowd argued that the trial court failed to consider the factors required by this section when dividing the parties' property and failed to consider his contribution as the homemaker that allowed his wife to develop her bakery business. The Supreme Court set out facts in the record and held that the excerpted barrage of facts confirmed that the trial court had covered the gambit of factors required by state law and that the trial court had not abused its discretion when it did not rely on the husband's testimony to determine his contribution to the bakery as the homemaker. In re Marriage of Dowd, 261 M 319, 862 P2d 1123, 50 St. Rep. 1341 (1993).

Adoption of Proposed Findings — Test Met: Husband contended that the almost verbatim adoption of wife's proposed findings was error. The Supreme Court held that the findings met the ultimate test for adequacy. The District Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law were comprehensive and pertinent to issues presented. All findings were supported by sufficient evidence on record. In re Marriage of Hurley, 222 M 287, 721 P2d 1279, 43 St. Rep. 1271 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Bolt, 259 M 54, 854 P2d 322, 50 St. Rep. 672 (1993), and In re Marriage of Craib & Rhodes, 266 M 483, 880 P2d 1379, 51 St. Rep. 937 (1994).

Equal Contributions to Marriage — Equitable Distribution of Property — No Abuse of Discretion: The District Court concluded that in spite of equal contributions to the marriage, it was equitable to award the wife less than 20% of the net marital estate. She argued that the findings of fact did not support the conclusion as to an equitable distribution. The Supreme Court found that the District Court adequately examined the statutory considerations outlined in 40-4-202(1), and in the absence of a showing of clear abuse of discretion, the District Court's division of the marital estate was affirmed. In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2065 (1985).

Two-Thirds, One-Third Division Proper: Award of 67% of marital estate to husband and the rest to wife was not an abuse of discretion. There were extensive, detailed findings and conclusions, and equal division is not mandated. Snell v. Snell, 205 M 359, 668 P2d 238, 40 St. Rep. 1359 (1983).

Adoption of Proposed Findings — Test: Findings adopted practically verbatim from those proposed by one of the parties did not meet the tests that: (1) the court should not rely too heavily on findings and conclusions submitted by the winning party, and reliance is too heavy when the findings are used to the exclusion of a consideration of the facts and the exercise of the judge's own judgment; and (2) the ultimate test for adequacy of findings is whether they are sufficiently comprehensive and pertinent to the issues to provide a basis for decision and are supported by the evidence presented. In re Marriage of Wolfe, 202 M 454, 659 P2d 259, 40 St. Rep. 211 (1983).

Widely Conflicting Valuations — Statement of Reasons for Judge's Choice: Trial court adopted husband's proposed findings and conclusions including, without a statement of the court's reasons, husband's opinion that ranch awarded husband was worth $450,000. Husband's professional appraiser valued the ranch at $1,184,725 as a working ranch, and wife's professional appraiser valued it at $1,649,166 at its highest and best use. In view of the widely conflicting valuations, the trial court was required to give reasons for selecting one value over the others. In re Marriage of Wolfe, 202 M 454, 659 P2d 259, 40 St. Rep. 211 (1983).

No Findings as to Alleged Assets — Abuse of Discretion: In a property settlement proceeding, the petitioner submitted evidence of respondent's checking account balance, a growing wheat crop, and bank stock. The trial court did not include the items in its valuation of the marital estate and failed to give an explanation for so excluding. Although item-by-item findings are not required in a property settlement proceeding, the findings must be sufficiently adequate so as to allow for appellate review. The trial court abused its discretion. In re Marriage of Larson, 200 M 134, 649 P2d 1351, 39 St. Rep. 1628 (1982).

Appraisals Averaged — Failure to Set Forth Reasons Not Error: The District Court did not err in failing to set forth reasons for its valuation of a parcel of real property. It was clear from the evidence that the two varying appraisals were averaged. In re Marriage of Converse, 198 M 227, 645 P2d 413, 39 St. Rep. 887 (1982).

Sufficient Evidence to Sustain Property Award — Discretion of Court: Where the parties were married in Mexico but had never lived together, the appellant had never contributed to the support of the respondent, and the respondent had not contributed to the marital estate, there was sufficient evidence to sustain the property award under the totality of circumstances; the District Court has broad discretion to make property awards. Wilson v. Wilson, 186 M 290, 607 P2d 539 (1980).

Findings Not Based on Abuse of Discretion: Appellant asserts that the facts do not support the finding of the District Court. The record indicates that the District Court heard testimony and reviewed other evidence concerning the relevant factors set out in 40-4-202 and 40-4-203. The judgment of the District Court will not be altered unless a clear abuse of discretion is shown. No such abuse of discretion is found. Reese v. Reese, 185 M 52, 604 P2d 326 (1979).

Award Contrary to Finding: When the court, in a finding of fact, stated that the properties of the parties should be divided as equally as possible but proceeded to make a very disparate award, it clearly abused its discretion. Berthiaume v. Berthiaume, 173 M 421, 567 P2d 1388 (1977).

Equitable Jurisdiction

Restriction on Execution Lien — Within Equitable Power: As part of a dissolution proceeding, the District Court awarded two parcels of real property to the wife and ordered her to pay the husband designated amounts for his interest therein. Nine months after the dissolution, the husband moved for leave to execute on the property in order to satisfy the money judgment in his favor. The District Court found that a special execution, restricting levy and sale of the land for specified amounts, would further the intention of the original decree. The husband appealed, contending the District Court had abused its discretion by restricting the execution liens and limiting the right to enforce the money judgment. The Supreme Court held that the District Court had molded its decree to do equity to both parties. It was within the court's discretion to fashion a Writ of Execution in compliance with and designed to enforce its original order. Miller v. Miller, 206 M 515, 672 P2d 271, 40 St. Rep. 1819 (1983).

Enforcement of Property Division — Discretion of Trial Court: Wife cannot complain of minor arrangements which trial court judge may have decided differently when, after a hearing on exceptions to the findings of a special master to distribute marital property which should have been divided under a divorce decree decided 4 years earlier, both parties failed during that time to comply with the earlier judgment. In equitably straightening out the property division, the trial court judge (Holter, J.), who was commended for having the patience of Job (see James 5:11), may, under the decision of Zell v. Zell, 174 M 216, 570 P2d 33 (1977) (the second Zell case; the first is found at 172 M 496, 565 P2d 311 (1977)), exercise far-reaching discretion and his judgment will not be altered by the Supreme Court unless there is a clear abuse of discretion shown by arbitrary acts or by his exceeding the bounds of reason. Zell v. Zell, 188 M 265, 613 P2d 702 (1980).

Equitable Jurisdiction: The court was held to have the power to exercise its discretion in the division of property interests as a necessary incident of its equitable jurisdiction, and the judgment was upheld when an abuse of discretion was not shown. Roe v. Roe, 171 M 79, 556 P2d 1246 (1976).

Expert's Value

Qualifications of Real Estate Experts — Differing Valuation: At a hearing concerning the valuation and division of property in the dissolution of Maureen and Joseph's marriage, an agricultural real estate broker testified for Maureen that the parties' ranch was worth $398,000 to $400,000, while a certified and licensed property appraiser testified for Joseph that the ranch was worth $182,500. Joseph contended that the District Court erred in accepting the value of the ranch as testified to by the real estate broker because the broker had no experience as a real property appraiser. Citing Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248 (1994), the Supreme Court held that whether an adequate foundation has been established for the admission of expert testimony is an issue largely within the discretion of the District Court and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it relied upon the testimony of the real estate broker. The Supreme Court therefore affirmed the part of the District Court's order that valued the parties' ranch at $400,000. In re Marriage of Ortiz, 282 M 500, 938 P2d 1308, 54 St. Rep. 446 (1997).

Conflicting Valuation Testimony by Experts — Court's Findings Affirmed: Each party presented expert testimony regarding the value of a veterinary practice. One party set the value at $83,227, the other at $185,000. The trial court accepted the $83,227 appraisal, noting that the practice was a solo practice in an increasingly competitive market. The Supreme Court affirmed, citing In re Marriage of Milesnick, 235 M 88, 765 P2d 751 (1988), for its holding that when confronted with substantial though conflicting evidence, the court must use its factfinding power to determine which evidence is more credible and that unless there is a clear preponderance of the evidence against the court's valuation, its findings will not be disturbed on appeal. In re Marriage of Otto, 245 M 271, 800 P2d 706, 47 St. Rep. 2080 (1990).

Valuation of Insurance Business — Determination of Qualification of Expert Witness: The determination of the qualification of an expert witness is a matter of discretion for the trial court. Absent a showing of abuse of that discretion, the decision will not be disturbed. The District Court did not abuse its discretion when it found a certified public accountant qualified to testify as an expert witness on the value of goodwill of an insurance business in a dissolution hearing. In re Marriage of Arrotta, 244 M 508, 797 P2d 940, 47 St. Rep. 1775 (1990).

Court Discretion When Expert Testimony Conflicting: When conflicting expert testimony is given, the trier of fact has full discretion to give weight to the testimony as he sees fit. In re Marriage of Sessions, 231 M 437, 753 P2d 1306, 45 St. Rep. 744 (1988).

Life Estate Valuation Substantially Different From Expert's — No Reasons Given: It was error for the District Court to fail to give reasons why it assigned a specific value to a life estate when that value was substantially greater than an expert witness had set. In re Marriage of Summerfelt, 212 M 332, 688 P2d 8, 41 St. Rep. 1775 (1984).

Adoption of Layman's View of Value Over Expert's View: In distributing marital property pursuant to a divorce and adopting proposed values or setting its own values, the District Court is free in its discretion to adopt the recommendation of a party or a layman over that of an expert. In re Marriage of Goodmundson, 201 M 535, 655 P2d 509, 39 St. Rep. 2295 (1982), followed in Garst v. Garst, 206 M 89, 669 P2d 1063, 40 St. Rep. 1526 (1983).

Averaging Experts' Valuations: In valuing property to be distributed pursuant to a divorce, the court may average the values given by experts to arrive at an equitable solution. In re Marriage of Goodmundson, 201 M 535, 655 P2d 509, 39 St. Rep. 2295 (1982), followed in Garst v. Garst, 206 M 89, 669 P2d 1063, 40 St. Rep. 1526 (1983).

Property Disposition — Expert Testimony on Valuation: The District Court in a dissolution of marriage proceeding made a substantially equitable property disposition. The husband contended that the trial court erred in determining the per-acre value of the couple's ranch. Conflicting testimony was presented. The husband's expert presented a much higher figure based upon the possibility of subdividing the land. The District Court, as the trier of fact in the trial without a jury, accepted the valuation of the wife's expert. This is not reversible error. The trier of fact has the discretion to give whatever weight he sees fit to the testimony of an expert. Dickerson v. Dickerson, 188 M 492, 614 P2d 521 (1980), followed in In re Marriage of McCormack, 223 M 410, 726 P2d 319, 43 St. Rep. 1833 (1986), and In re Marriage of Voelkel, 226 M 143, 734 P2d 217, 44 St. Rep. 538 (1987).

Partition of Property

All Things Considered — No Abuse of Discretion in Partition of Marital Estate: The trial court did not abuse its discretion or err in: (1) distributing a portion of the husband's retirement benefits to the wife; (2) holding the husband responsible for marital debts and liabilities attributable to him; (3) dividing personal property between the parties according to their agreed plan, which generally partitioned property according to the wife's proposal unless the property was not listed, in which case the husband's proposal was followed; (4) considering tax implications to both parties; (5) distributing interest in out-of-state real property to the wife according to the husband's recommendation; (6) granting the wife her entire retirement pension; and (7) awarding stock in the husband's jewelry business to the husband with an equalizing payment to the wife. In re Marriage of Harkin, 2000 MT 105, 299 M 298, 999 P2d 969, 57 St. Rep. 422 (2000).

Property Transferred to Deny Spousal Interest in Marital Estate — Inclusion as Distributable Property Proper: A husband and wife owed about $6,000 in back taxes on their property, which was in jeopardy of being sold at a tax sale. The couple was unable to obtain a loan because of a prior bankruptcy, so they arranged to transfer the property to the husband's mother, who then took out a loan to pay the taxes, using the property as collateral. When the couple later sought to dissolve their marriage, their petition made no mention of any real property acquired during the marriage. The husband testified at the hearing, but the wife did not attend, and dissolution was granted without addressing the wife's interest in the property. She moved to set aside the judgment pursuant to 40-4-135, and the District Court voided the deed transferring the property to the mother, issued a court deed naming the mother as grantor and the husband and wife as grantees to hold the property as tenants in common, and included the property in the marital estate. The mother contended that the property transfer more than 2 years before commencement of the dissolution was final against the husband and wife as grantors, citing 70-20-303, and that the property was thus not available as an asset of the couple and was improperly included in the marital estate. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the couple had submitted false proposed findings and conclusions when they made no mention of any real property acquired during the marriage, which had the effect of defrauding the court and denying the wife her interest in the marital property. Inclusion of the property in the marital estate was proper. In re Marriage of Bell, 2000 MT 88, 299 M 219, 998 P2d 1163, 57 St. Rep. 381 (2000).

Consideration of Contribution of Nonacquiring Spouse Required — Gifted Property Included at Court's Discretion — Absence of Significant Spousal Contribution: In evaluating whether preacquired or gifted property should be included in the marital estate, a District Court is required to consider the contributions of the nonacquiring spouse, including the nonmonetary contributions of a homemaker. When the nonmonetary contributions of a homemaker are found to have facilitated the maintenance of preacquired or gifted property, the court may include that property in the marital estate. However, in the absence of a significant contribution on the part of the nonacquiring spouse, the court is free to exclude gifted assets or property from the marital estate. In the present case, the court did not clearly err in finding an absence of a significant contribution by the wife to the increase of value of stock, as supported by substantial credible evidence, and the court properly applied this section in concluding that the value of the husband's gifted stock shares should not be included in the marital estate. In re Marriage of Harper, 1999 MT 321, 297 M 290, 994 P2d 1, 56 St. Rep. 1280 (1999), following In re Marriage of Luisi, 232 M 243, 756 P2d 456, 45 St. Rep. 1023 (1988), and In re Marriage of Engen, 1998 MT 153, 289 M 299, 961 P2d 738 (1998), and distinguishing In re Marriage of Davies, 266 M 466, 880 P2d 1368, 51 St. Rep. 929 (1994).

Requirement for Removal of Personal Property From Parties' Residence Not Abuse of Discretion: A District Court has broad discretion in devising methods to accomplish an equitable distribution of marital property. Given the history of the issuance of several temporary restraining orders against husband during the course of dissolution proceedings and his refusal to comply with several pretrial and posttrial orders that necessitated the issuance of enforcement orders, the District Court was justified in ordering husband to retrieve his personal property from the parties' residence within 30 days of entry of the decree, in order to facilitate a quick, supervised exchange of property. In re Marriage of Zander, 262 M 215, 864 P2d 1225, 50 St. Rep. 1522 (1993).

Division of Property — Standard of Review: The Supreme Court specifically rejected phraseology for the standard of review regarding division of marital property, as stated in prior cases, and adopted the standard set out in In re Marriage of Watson, 227 M 383, 739 P2d 951, 44 St.

Rep. 1167 (1987), that the District Court's judgment, when based on substantial credible evidence, will not be altered unless a clear abuse of discretion is shown. One Party Divides Property, Other Chooses Portion: An equal division of property generally will result when one party draws the line dividing the property and the other party makes the first choice between the parcels. In re Marriage of Hancock, 226 M 383, 736 P2d 101, 44 St. Rep. 740 (1987), followed in In re Marriage of Binsfield, 269 M 336, 888 P2d 889, 52 St. Rep. 16 (1995).

Discretion of Court to Order Sale of Marital Property to Facilitate Division:

In a dissolution proceeding, the wife argued that the District Court should have been required to order the sale of the ranch and division of the sale proceeds. She contended that the ranch was not an economic unit and that all of the factors which traditionally mitigate in favor of keeping the ranch intact had been eliminated. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court did in fact consider these factors, as well as the other factors enumerated in 40-4-202, including the husband's desire to stay on the ranch and the fact that he had been a farmer and rancher all of his life. The Supreme Court ruled that although the District Court had the power to require sale of the ranch, had it chosen in its discretion to do so, it was not required to do so. The apportionment of the marital property was affirmed. In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2065 (1985).

District Court has broad discretion in devising methods to accomplish an equitable division of property. Where District Court foresaw problems and required sale of property held jointly if husband and wife failed to reach agreement on its division otherwise, the court did not abuse its discretion. Kis v. Kis, 196 M 296, 639 P2d 1151, 39 St. Rep. 119 (1982).

Court order that farm be sold and proceeds divided was not an abuse of discretion as entire investment was in jeopardy because of delinquent taxes and mortgage, plus it would have been difficult for one person to manage farm. Turville v. Turville, 166 M 358, 533 P2d 962 (1975).

No Abuse of Discretion for Refusing to Order Property Partitioned: The trial court found that due to hard feelings and problems with visitation, the parties could not exist as neighbors and that partition of the property would have an adverse effect on the salability of the property. The trial court did not abuse its discretion since the findings were supported by the record. Gies v. Gies, 210 M 234, 681 P2d 1092, 41 St. Rep. 1028 (1984).

Prohibiting Sale of Residence Past Majority Age of Child — Abuse of Discretion: A 1971 dissolution decree apportioned only the personal property of the parties. In 1981, in a proceeding for modification of the decree, the District Court abused its discretion by ordering that the parties' residence not be sold until the youngest child finished college at the age of 22. This in effect amounted to child support past the age of majority when no express agreement or decree provision provided for such support. Torma v. Torma, 198 M 161, 645 P2d 395, 39 St. Rep. 839 (1982).

Appreciated Value of Property to Be Partitioned: Payments for support under a divorce decree were not shown to have been intended as returnable to the father in the form of an equity in the house after the children of the marriage were emancipated. The father was a cotenant in the property, however, and as such was entitled to a pro rata share of the property's appreciation in value. The children, who received their mother's interest in the form of a quitclaim deed, should be credited with payments in excess of their share expended by them after the divorce for principal and interest and taxes on the property. The father is not entitled to an offset against this credit for the reasonable rental value of the property during the period of time before the partition action was begun. It was an abuse of the District Court's discretion to deny the father a pro rata share in the increased value of the property. Lawrence v. Harvey, 186 M 314, 607 P2d 551 (1980).

When Partition Is Proper — Open Divorce Decree: An open divorce decree failed to make a final disposition of the family residence, which the husband and wife owned as joint tenants. The wife quitclaimed her interest to her children. The wife later died. The children and their father became tenants in common. The father sought the sale and partition of the property. A cotenant is entitled to partition as a matter of right, although it may be denied where it would be against public policy or legal or equitable principles. Here, where all the cotenants were of legal age, it was an abuse of discretion to deny partition. Lawrence v. Harvey, 186 M 314, 607 P2d 551 (1980).

STATUTORY MANDATES IN DISTRICT COURT FINDINGS

Statutory Guidelines Not Requisite Criteria to Be Individually Itemized: The Supreme Court declared that it did not wish to restrict the liberal discretionary power vested in the District Courts by requiring rigid adherence to technical forms of property distribution orders. It recognized that the trial court must evidence the basis of its ultimate conclusion in the findings of fact. However, the statutory guidelines in this section were not designed as requisite criteria to be individually itemized in every property distribution decree. From the confusing crossfire of conflicting evidence on the valuation of marital assets, the trial court issued 25 findings of fact in an effort to substantiate the basis upon which the subsequent conclusions of law were entered. The trial court's findings of fact and conclusions of law were sufficiently responsive to the statutory guidelines enacted in 40-4-202. In re Marriage of Ziegler, 215 M 208, 696 P2d 983, 42 St. Rep. 298 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Mouat, 228 M 430, 743 P2d 602, 44 St. Rep. 1654 (1987).

Grant to Wife of Exclusive Occupancy of Family Residence Supported by Findings: The court rejected husband's contention that the trial court granted wife exclusive occupancy of family residence without findings. In entering the decree in this case, the District Court made detailed findings of each parties' financial status. The court carefully weighed the parties' expenditures and past arrearages versus their projected income, following the policy established in Vert v. Vert, 188 M 358, 613 P2d 1020 (1980). In re Marriage of Hickey, 213 M 38, 689 P2d 1222, 41 St. Rep. 1931 (1984).

Agreement Unconscionable When Instigated to Get Wife's Property as Condition of Continuing Marriage: Petitioner appealed a judgment awarding approximately one-sixth of the marital property to him and the balance to the respondent wife. Petitioner contended that the trial court abused its discretion when it refused to divide the marital property 50-50 under an agreement executed between the parties. The Supreme Court held that the trial court properly refused to divide the property according to the agreement, stating that the result would be the same whether the agreement was a separation agreement or, as the husband contended, a postnuptial agreement. The evidence showed that in instigating the agreement the husband took advantage of his wife regarding her property as a condition to continuing the marriage, contrary to what is required of one in a confidential relationship. The agreement was unconscionable as a matter of law even though the trial court did not specifically find unconscionability. Myers v. Myers, 210 M 173, 682 P2d 718, 41 St. Rep. 990 (1984).

Care of Child During Pendency of Divorce Proceedings — Contribution to Marital Estate: Where the District Court divided the marital property of the parties by awarding 60% of the property to the husband and 40% to the wife but failed to explain the reasons for its award, the Supreme Court remanded the case for findings of fact. The Supreme Court also held that care of the parties' youngest child during the divorce proceedings was a significant contribution to the marital estate and required the District Court to reconsider its findings with regard to the wife's contribution to the estate. Popp v. Popp, 206 M 415, 671 P2d 24, 40 St. Rep. 1747 (1983). Valuation and distribution of marital estate were considered on later appeal in In re Marriage of Popp & Martin, 235 M 372, 767 P2d 871, 46 St. Rep. 64 (1989).

Needs of Retarded Adult Child: Trial court had and should have exercised jurisdiction to consider the needs of the parties' adult mentally retarded child, who resided with her mother, in distributing the marital property and should have entertained wife's request to have a trust established for the benefit of the child. Trial court was ordered to consider the child's needs on remand. In re Marriage of Wolfe, 202 M 454, 659 P2d 259, 40 St. Rep. 211 (1983).

Statutory Factors Considered and Referred to Sufficient — Findings as to Mineral Interest and Attorney Fees Required: In awarding child custody to the husband, the court included in its finding the factors outlined in 40-4-212. In ordering the husband to pay maintenance, the court applied the factors set forth in 40-4-203 and referred to them in its findings of fact. There is no clear abuse of discretion by the District Court on either of these issues, and therefore the findings are affirmed. The District Court did not, however, place a value on a mineral interest, and the findings do not explain this exclusion. The court also failed to substantiate why attorney fees were not awarded to the wife. The case is therefore remanded to make findings on the value of the mineral interest and to state reasons as to the grant or denial of the wife's attorney fees. Hammeren v. Hammeren, 201 M 443, 663 P2d 1152, 39 St. Rep. 2222 (1982).

Failure to Consider Homemaker Contributions and Future Financial Picture: The evidence did not show on appeal that the District Court considered the factors required by this section to be considered in apportioning the marital assets, and in particular did not show that the court considered the wife's contributions as homemaker or the apparent significant difference between the spouses in regard to future acquisition of capital assets and income. Thus, additional findings were required as a proper foundation for an equitable property distribution. The award of maintenance to the wife would be vacated as well as the property disposition. Upon redetermining the property distribution, the District Court should further consider the needs of both spouses and decide whether the wife lacked sufficient property to provide for her needs and whether she would be able to support herself. The husband in this case had a net worth of $194,809; the wife had a $10,000 equity in real estate she purchased for $42,000 and owned an interest in a Paris apartment on which the court had not placed a value; husband had a $28,000 a year 1979 income; and wife had an income of approximately $500 a month with little chance that it would increase significantly. In re Marriage of Lewis, 198 M 51, 643 P2d 604, 39 St. Rep. 759 (1982).

Disposition of Marital Assets — Failure to Consider Earning Potential: In an action for dissolution of marriage, the trial court erred in not applying its findings of fact concerning the future earning potential of both the husband and wife to the judgment it rendered requiring the wife to execute a mortgage on certain real property to the husband. The trial court found that the husband had a gross earning potential of $2,500 per month, that the wife had little earning potential but imposed a $14,161 mortgage on the wife. These factors, plus a significant difference in life expectancy of the parties, show that the trial court failed to consider the wife's inability to acquire property in the future. Smith v. Smith, 191 M 200, 622 P2d 1022, 38 St. Rep. 146 (1981). See also Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981).

Land Gifted to Husband as One Factor in Determining Contribution to Marital Property: Contrary to plaintiff/husband's claim in a property valuation dispute that he should be given credit for the value, exclusive of appreciation, of the land he received by gift from his grandmother, the acquisition of property by gift is only one factor to be considered in determining the respective contributions of both spouses under 40-4-202. Collett v. Collett, 190 M 500, 621 P2d 1093, 38 St. Rep. 36 (1981).

No Finding Ergo Reversal: The trial court failed to make findings establishing the net worth of the parties prior to dividing the marital property and divided it in an inequitable manner without regard to the husband's contributions and inheritance. These failures on the part of the District Court necessitated reversal with directions to ascertain the net worth of the parties in arriving at a proper division. Schultz v. Schultz, 188 M 363, 613 P2d 1022 (1980), proper findings and conclusions made and judgment affirmed, In re Marriage of Schultz, 203 M 473, 662 P2d 286, 40 St. Rep. 576 (1983), followed by Peterson v. Peterson, 195 M 157, 636 P2d 821, 38 St. Rep. 1723 (1981). See also In re Marriage of Peterson, 211 M 118, 683 P2d 1304, 41 St. Rep. 1252 (1984); In re Marriage of Gerhart, 245 M 279, 800 P2d 698, 47 St. Rep. 2106 (1990).

Evidentiary Basis Required: In entering a property disposition in a divorce, the trial court adopted the husband's proposed findings verbatim. The Supreme Court on appeal found that these findings were not supported by the evidence. The trial court is required to apply the factors set out in 40-4-202 to the evidence presented at trial and make its findings based on this evidence. That was not done here, and the case was remanded with instructions to obtain a proper evidentiary basis for whatever judgment the trial court reached. In re Marriage of Vert, 188 M 359, 613 P2d 1020 (1980). See also Beck v. Beck, 193 M 166, 631 P2d 282, 38 St. Rep. 1054 (1981).

Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law — Consistent and Ascertainable Property Division Required: The trial court erred when it determined, as a conclusion of law without any written findings, that marital assets would be split 50/50 between the parties, yet the court in its findings and conclusions apparently proceeded to divide up certain enumerated properties other than on a 50/50 basis. In re Marriage of Gohner, 187 M 206, 609 P2d 288 (1980), followed in Popp v. Popp, 206 M 415, 671 P2d 24, 40 St. Rep. 1747 (1983).

Case Remanded — No Findings Made: The trial court awarded the wife one-half interest in the equity in a home acquired by the husband before he married his wife, without entering findings to support its conclusion. Judgment is vacated and remanded. Robinson v. Robinson, 186 M 312, 607 P2d 550 (1980), following In re Marriage of Johnson, 175 M 117, 572 P2d 902 (1977), and In re Marriage of Reilly, 176 M 239, 577 P2d 840 (1978).

Findings Required: Because the required findings in relation to the valuation of the marital estate are totally inadequate, the Supreme Court cannot review the case on the merits but remands it to the District Court. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 186 M 282, 607 P2d 102 (1980), distinguished in Lupo v. Lupo, 197 M 290, 642 P2d 1056, 39 St. Rep. 565 (1982). See also Tomaskie v. Tomaskie, 191 M 508, 625 P2d 536, 38 St. Rep. 416 (1981).

Review of Property Disposition: Applying the test in Kramer v. Kramer, 177 M 61, 580 P2d 439 (1978), the Supreme Court found no abuse of discretion in the District Court's division of the marital property since this section was followed as evidenced by the findings of fact. Oster v. Oster, 186 M 160, 606 P2d 1075 (1980); Jacobson v. Jacobson, 183 M 517, 600 P2d 1183 (1979). See also Item-by-Item Finding Unnecessary: The District Court did not err as a matter of law in its division of the marital property by not crediting respondent with funds allegedly not accounted for, since the District Court is in the best position to judge the weight and credibility of the witnesses, especially where there is a conflict of testimony, and it made a specific finding that unaccounted for funds were dissipated by expenditures for living expenses, although it did not make an item-by-item finding based on the factors in 40-4-202. Caprice v. Caprice, 178 M 455, 585 P2d 641 (1978), followed in In re Marriage of Bell, 220 M 123, 713 P2d 552, 43 St. Rep. 226 (1986).

Guidelines Not Ignored: The court did not abuse its discretion in awarding a lump-sum settlement and interest on any deferred payment. Interest payments could not be properly characterized as maintenance. Hebel v. Hebel, 176 M 339, 578 P2d 305 (1978).

Mandates Ignored — Effect: It was readily apparent from the District Court record that the trial court judge in his exercise of discretion over the property settlement abused his discretion when he ignored statutory mandates and refused to consider the needs of appellant for some financial assistance during the transition from housewife to a single person. Cromwell v. Cromwell, 174 M 356, 570 P2d 1129 (1977).

PROPERTY SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

Collateral Estoppel Applied to Preclude Reopening Settlement Agreement Regarding Disposition of Jointly Owned Marital Property — Property Interest Not Altered by Filing of Partition Action: When the husband and wife separated, they entered a property settlement agreement dividing all their real and personal property, agreeing that they would continue to jointly own their residence, with the right of survivorship. In the decree of dissolution, the District Court affirmed that the property settlement agreement was fair and equitable. Several years after the divorce, seeking to wrap up financial affairs with her former husband, the wife moved to partition the residence and obtain an equal division of the value of the property. At trial, the husband argued that the property settlement agreement was unfair and that the wife should be denied any recovery for her interest in the residence because it was purchased prior to the marriage and because she did not contribute to the marriage financially. The wife moved in limine to preclude the husband from reopening matters that should have been raised in the divorce proceedings. The court denied her motion, reasoning that the property was not divided in the divorce and that because the partition action was an action at equity, surrounding circumstances could be considered. The court found that the filing of the partition action severed the joint tenancy, and the husband was then allowed to introduce evidence regarding the marital equities. The court ultimately concluded that the wife's interest in the residence was not compensable because she had not contributed significantly to the acquisition or improvement of the property or contributed to the parties' assets during the marriage. The wife appealed. The Supreme Court found that res judicata and equitable estoppel barred relitigation of the fairness of the joint ownership issue, which was considered and approved in the decree of dissolution. Further, the mere filing of the partition action does not sever one's interest in property. Rather, the parties' respective interests remain intact until the judgment severing the tenancy is entered. The rebuttable presumption that underlies a joint tenancy in property is equal shares, and there was nothing in the evidence to rebut that presumption and no evidence of postdecree events that would justify a different result. The husband failed to carry the burden of rebutting the presumption of equal shares, and the Supreme Court remanded for a 50-50 partition of the value of the residence. Rausch v. Hogan, 2001 MT 123, 305 M 382, 28 P3d 460 (2001).

Settlement Agreement Not Enforced Because of Economic Disparity Between Parties and Lack of Consent: A married couple signed a settlement agreement. A week later, the husband's petition for divorce prefaced his proposals as to distribution of property with the statement "If the parties are unable to reach an agreement as to division of property and indebtedness". The agreement provided that the husband would give the wife $10,000, the same amount that he had promised before the marriage to put in a bank account in her name to ensure that she would have funds to live on if the marriage fell apart. It was her third marriage, and she probably would not have considered the agreement final until she reviewed it with her attorney. The agreement ambiguously failed to state that it was either a temporary or a final agreement. Therefore, there was no meeting of the minds regarding final settlement terms. Moreover, the economic disparity between the two allowed him to take unfair advantage of her situation. The District Court did not err in failing to enforce the agreement. In re Marriage of Rolf, 2000 MT 361, 303 M 349, 16 P3d 345, 57 St. Rep. 1536 (2000).

Qualified Domestic Relations Order Authorized — Statutory Criteria Met: The husband developed health problems and began receiving short-term disability and supplemental pay from his employer. It was obvious that he would not be gainfully employed again, so he opted for early retirement benefits, resulting in cessation of his disability payments. The wife filed for legal separation, and the District Court issued a qualified domestic relations order (QDRO) to provide the wife with a portion of her husband's retirement benefits. The husband asserted that the court lacked authority to issue the QDRO because the parties did not stipulate to the entry of the order in writing or record a stipulation in open court. Pursuant to In re Marriage of Simms, 264 M 317, 871 P2d 899, 51 St. Rep. 306 (1994), a District Court may enforce a written agreement between the parties if the agreement is not unconscionable. Here, the agreement was apparently reduced to writing but no finding of conscionability was made. Nevertheless, a District Court may also enforce a QDRO if it applies the criteria in this section governing the division of a marital estate and enters appropriate findings of fact and conclusions of law. The District Court found that distribution of the retirement benefits as set forth in the QDRO represented a fair and equitable distribution of the marital estate given the factors in this section and made findings regarding those factors, including duration of the marriage, the wife's occupation, sources of income, employability, and needs. Accordingly, the court was authorized to enter the QDRO, and the Supreme Court affirmed. In re Marriage of Harkin, 2000 MT 105, 299 M 298, 999 P2d 969, 57 St. Rep. 422 (2000).

Interpretation of Latent Ambiguity in Marital Property Settlement Agreement — Wife Entitled to Value of Improvements to Real Property Made Between Time of Dissolution and Time of Sale: A property settlement agreement provided that the wife would receive the family home subject to the debt owed upon it (although no debt was owing) and that when she sold it, she would return one-half of the proceeds of the sale of the house to the husband. The wife's subsequent improvements to the home increased its value from $55,500 at the time of dissolution to $75,000 at the time of sale. The wife requested an interpretation of the settlement agreement to address the division of proceeds in light of her substantial improvements to the property, as well as her payment of all property taxes since the date of dissolution. The District Court concluded that the property settlement agreement created a latent ambiguity by failing to address what would happen to the expenditures of one party that were for neither maintenance nor repairs. The court concluded that the agreement contemplated that the wife would maintain the value of the home at the time of dissolution and divide that value when the house was sold and that the property taxes were an item of maintenance that the wife was responsible for pursuant to the agreement. The Supreme Court affirmed. In light of the latent ambiguity in the agreement, the District Court did not introduce an additional provision to the agreement that deprived the husband of his contractual rights, but merely interpreted the agreement to clarify what was meant by "one-half of the proceeds of the sale of the house" in the context of nonmaintenance expenditures. Upon finding a latent ambiguity, the District Court properly admitted parol evidence to interpret the agreement and correctly allowed the wife to retain the proceeds from the sale of the house attributable to her expenditures for improvements beyond maintenance and repairs. In re Marriage of Holloway, 2000 MT 104, 299 M 291, 999 P2d 980, 57 St. Rep. 418 (2000).

Property Settlement Agreement Ineffective as to Renunciation of Beneficiary's Right to IRA: Upon dissolution of her marriage to Glendon, Isabel agreed to a property settlement awarding Glendon sole ownership of an IRA in which she was named as beneficiary. Later, Glendon died without having removed Isabel as the named beneficiary of the IRA and Isabel filed a renunciation of her interest in the IRA. The District Court held that Isabel could not renounce her interest in the IRA because the property settlement agreement deprived her of her interest in the IRA. Therefore, the District Court ruled that the contingent beneficiaries were not entitled to the IRA. Citing Sowell v. Teachers' Retirement Sys., 214 M 200, 693 P2d 1222 (1984), and Eschler v. Eschler, 257 M 360, 849 P2d 196 (1993), the Supreme Court held that under the property settlement agreement, Isabel lost only her marital interest in the IRA but not her interest as a beneficiary. Her renunciation of her interest was therefore operative against her interest as a beneficiary, and Isabel's interest in the IRA as a beneficiary vested in the contingent beneficiaries. In re Estate of Bruce, 265 M 431, 877 P2d 999, 51 St. Rep. 576 (1994).

Settlement Agreement — No Necessity of Findings on Statutory Factors: To the extent that any language in In re Marriage of Caras, 254 M 169, 835 P2d 715 (1992), suggests that a District Court commits reversible error by failing to make findings pursuant to this section in considering a separation agreement that distributes the marital property, the language is overruled. The factors in that section must be considered only when a District Court divides the marital estate in absence of an agreement. In this case, the parties reached an agreement. Therefore, a determination of the net worth of the marital estate was not required in determining the conscionability of the agreement. There were no professional appraisals, the parties and one of their attorneys gave numerous conflicting appraisals, and the agreement covered maintenance, distribution of property, and child support and medical care. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in holding the agreement conscionable. In re Marriage of Caras, 263 M 377, 868 P2d 615, 51 St. Rep. 98 (1994).

Marital Debt Including Medical Expenses of Step-Children: Husband appealed from a District Court order, claiming that the court erred in holding that an agreement to assume "all marital debts" in exchange for the court's denial of ex-wife's maintenance and attorney fees included the medical expenses incurred for step-children. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the husband's promise to assume "all marital debts" in exchange for denial of maintenance and attorney fees obligated the husband to pay all marital debts, even those incurred on behalf of the wife's children from a prior marriage. Marital debt may include all debt incurred by either party during the marriage. In re Marriage of Scoffield, 258 M 337, 852 P2d 664, 50 St. Rep. 560 (1993).

Wife as Partner in Real Estate Investments — Distribution of Property Sale Proceeds Proper: The District Court properly awarded wife her share of proceeds of the sale of real property when deeds and the property settlement agreement identified her as a partner in the jointly held property. In re Marriage of Sabo, 224 M 252, 730 P2d 1112, 43 St. Rep. 2175 (1986).

Effect of Property Settlement Agreement on Pension Beneficiary Designation: While married to his first wife, a husband became a member of the state Teachers' Retirement System. He designated in writing his first wife as beneficiary of the proceeds of the retirement account. That designation was never changed. When the couple divorced, they executed a property settlement agreement whereby each waived any right to the other's estate. The husband did not submit a change of beneficiary form after he remarried. Upon his death, his surviving widow brought the present action to recover proceeds contributed to the retirement system, a large portion of which was contributed during her marriage to the decedent. Pursuant to the provisions of 19-4-1001, which provides that the proceeds of the account may be paid only to the person nominated by a written designation or, in the absence of such nomination, to the decedent's estate, the proceeds were awarded to the first wife. The property settlement agreement executed by the husband and his first wife at the time of dissolution did not divest the first wife of her future interest in the retirement account. The statute concerning distribution of the pension proceeds controls this issue. Sowell v. Teachers' Retirement System, 214 M 200, 693 P2d 1222, 41 St. Rep. 2413 (1984), distinguished in In re Marriage of Butler, 243 M 521, 795 P2d 467, 47 St. Rep. 1376 (1990).

Child Support Paid Into Escrow and Returned to Satisfy Note — Substantial Evidence That Agreement Not Unconscionable: Under the terms of a property settlement agreement, the wife received the house and also executed a note for $6,600 payable to the husband at the rate of $300 a month. Since the husband's monthly child support payments were also $300, for several years, until the wife's note was paid, the husband paid $300 in child support to an escrow account each month and the bank then returned the $300 to the husband as the wife's payment on the note. On appeal, the wife claimed that this was an abandonment of the husband's obligation to support the children so the property settlement was unconscionable. The Supreme Court ruled that there was substantial evidence to support the District Court's conclusion that the agreement was not unconscionable. In re Marriage of Beitz, 211 M 111, 683 P2d 485, 41 St. Rep. 1247 (1984).

Agreement Unconscionable When Instigated to Get Wife's Property as Condition of Continuing Marriage: Petitioner appealed a judgment awarding approximately one-sixth of the marital property to him and the balance to the respondent wife. Petitioner contended that the trial court abused its discretion when it refused to divide the marital property 50-50 under an agreement executed between the parties. The Supreme Court held that the trial court properly refused to divide the property according to the agreement, stating that the result would be the same whether the agreement was a separation agreement or, as the husband contended, a postnuptial agreement. The evidence showed that in instigating the agreement the husband took advantage of his wife regarding her property as a condition to continuing the marriage, contrary to what is required of one in a confidential relationship. The agreement was unconscionable as a matter of law even though the trial court did not specifically find unconscionability. Myers v. Myers, 210 M 173, 682 P2d 718, 41 St. Rep. 990 (1984).

Attorney Fees Payable Under Property Settlement Agreement: Where a property settlement agreement between parties to a divorce proceeding required the court to award attorney fees to any party successfully bringing an action to enforce, modify, or interpret the agreement, the Supreme Court found under the rationale of In re Marriage of Bolstad, 203 M 131, 660 P2d 95, 40 St. Rep. 344 (1983), that the wife was the successful party in an action to collect a past-due cash award and remanded the case to the District Court for a determination of the amount of attorney fees to be awarded. Gibson v. Gibson, 206 M 460, 671 P2d 629, 40 St. Rep. 1780 (1983). The rationale of Bolstad was also applied in In re Marriages of Boyer & Overman, 261 M 179, 862 P2d 384, 50 St. Rep. 1277 (1993).

Oral Stipulation of Parties to Be Given Effect — Remand for Amendment of Findings and Judgment: Where counsel for the petitioner and respondent in a divorce proceeding agreed on the record to a distribution of certain property but the findings and judgment of the District Court made no reference to the stipulation, the case was remanded to the District Court for amendment of the findings and judgment to award the property in accordance with the agreement. Parenteau v. Parenteau, 204 M 239, 664 P2d 900, 40 St. Rep. 815 (1983).

Negotiated Agreement — Not Required to Be Reopened by Later Court Decision: At the time of their divorce, the parties entered a property agreement which was approved by the court and entered into the decree of dissolution. Appellant failed to perform as agreed, and respondent filed a petition seeking to have him held in contempt and requiring him to perform under the agreement. The District Court ordered appellant to perform the agreement. Appellant contends the court erred in refusing to set aside the property settlement agreement on the basis of McCarty v. McCarty, 453 US 210, 69 L Ed 2d 589, 101 S Ct 2728 (1981), excluding military pensions from marital estates. Appellant contends he entered the agreement in exchange for respondent relinquishing her claim to his military retirement, and the agreement was therefore unfair. The Supreme Court distinguished McCarty, saying appellant chose to settle the property distribution by contractual relations with respondent. He was not coerced into the agreement by the District Court, so there was no basis to overrule the District Court. In re Marriage of Grace, 198 M 97, 643 P2d 1188, 39 St. Rep. 791 (1982).

Property Distribution — Findings Required — Partial Agreement Inadequate: The parties were granted a dissolution of marriage in 1980. The husband appealed the property distribution as inequitable and done without considering the criteria set forth in 40-4-202. The husband received substantially less than the wife under the distribution. Unequal distributions will be upheld where there are good reasons for doing so and where the trial court has clearly identified those reasons. Here, the trial court found that the husband had agreed to assume the majority of the marital liabilities. That agreement was based on the husband's proposed settlement that he would assume all the marital liabilities in exchange for the wife's acceptance of the duty to support the children. It was error for the trial court to order the husband to assume the liabilities solely upon the finding that he had agreed to assume them. Slayton v. Slayton, 195 M 249, 635 P2d 1303, 38 St. Rep. 1824 (1981).

Separation Agreement Binding on Court: Where the trial court did not find the separation agreement unconscionable, the terms of the agreement were binding upon the court and the court did not err in not considering the factors set out in this section. The wife cannot claim in a dissolution proceeding held 8 years after the separation that she is entitled under this section to a share of the husband's estate accumulated subsequent to the separation but before dissolution. Tureman v. Tureman, 190 M 267, 620 P2d 1200, 37 St. Rep. 1922 (1980).

Particularity of Findings on Property Distribution — Not Necessarily Required if Directive Items Considered: On appeal relating to his divorce settlement agreement, the former husband contended that the trial court erred in making an "equitable" grant of personal property without making certain findings, such as the net worth of the marital estate. The Supreme Court reiterated an earlier holding that a District Court need not set forth its findings with particularity if there is substantial evidence that the court was aware of and considered the directive items of 40-4-202. The trial court held a hearing on all elements in a marital estate, and there was no substantial evidence that the court did not consider the whole estate in finding that the separation agreement was deficient. The existence of a valid agreement presumes that the net worth of the parties has been considered in their disposing of their property by the agreement. There was substantial evidence here that the net worth of the parties was established by the District Court and by the settlement agreement. In re Marriage of Harris, 189 M 509, 616 P2d 1099, 37 St. Rep. 1696 (1980).

Marital Property — Separate Hearings: Marital property can be distributed in a hearing separate from a divorce decree without either hearing discussing the totality of the marital estate where, as here, there is a mutual agreement in the form of a separation agreement as to its disposition. Persons must be able to separate amicably and divide their property without interference when such division is feasible. In re Marriage of Miller, 189 M 356, 616 P2d 313, 37 St. Rep. 1523 (1980).

Trust Contingency: The property settlement agreement between Molly and Keith Herrin contained a qualified assignment of stocks to Molly Herrin. The agreement said that if Keith Jr. died while there was any money or property in any trust, then the trust would cease and all property and income of the trust would revert to Keith Herrin and become his sole property. Keith Jr. died but no trust existed since a trust was to be established only if Molly died or remarried during Keith Jr.'s lifetime. Neither of these events occurred. The Supreme Court found that the stocks belonged to Molly after the death of Keith Jr. Herrin v. Herrin, 182 M 142, 595 P2d 1152 (1979).

Modification of Property Settlement Agreement: A property settlement agreement which provided for the execution of a quitclaim deed from the defendant to the plaintiff and the payment of indebtedness on the property by the defendant was a property settlement and not support, and the agreement could not be modified upon the motion of the defendant. Thompson v. Thompson, 170 M 447, 554 P2d 1111 (1976).

VALUATION OF MARITAL ESTATE

General

Failure of Appellant to Establish Error in Determining Marital Assets — Valuation Affirmed: The husband appealed the District Court's determination of marital assets, contending that the court failed to include several financial accounts in the marital estate. The appellant has the duty to establish error, and in this case, the husband failed to establish any evidence in the record to support the existence of the alleged accounts or evidence that the court improperly excluded certain rental income from the marital estate. No error having been established, the District Court's determination of the marital assets was affirmed. In re Marriage of Hochhalter, 2001 MT 268, 307 M 261, __P3d__ (2001).

Parties Separated for Twelve of Twenty-Nine Years of Marriage — Marital Estate Valued as of Separation Date, Rather Than Dissolution Date: As a general rule, the value of a marital estate should be determined at or near the time of the dissolution. However, the unique circumstances of marital relationships can modify the generally accepted date for the valuation of assets. Here, the parties were separated several times during their marriage, living apart for over 12 years during the course of their 29-year marriage. After their final separation, the parties lived in different residences in different cities, maintained their own finances, filed separate tax returns, maintained their own retirement accounts, and did not contribute financially to each other. Thus, for all practical purposes, the marriage ended with the final separation, and the District Court did not err in valuing the marital estate as of the date of the parties' final separation in 1995, rather than the date of the actual dissolution in 2000. In re Marriage of Hochhalter, 2001 MT 268, 307 M 261, __P3d__ (2001). See also In re Marriage of Geror, 2000 MT 60, 299 M 33, 996 P2d 381 (2000).

Analysis Regarding Irretrievable Breakdown Distinct From Criteria for Division of Property — Property Valuation at Time of Separation Proper: The analysis regarding irretrievable breakdown of a marriage is distinct from the criteria for division of the property of the marital estate. Here, the wife contended that the District Court improperly valued the estate at the time of the parties' separation because the marriage was not irretrievably broken until she filed the petition for dissolution. However, the point in time of irretrievable breakdown does not determine when the court values the marital estate or how the court distributes marital property, but rather provides the necessary basis for dissolving the marriage. It is the point at which, for practical purposes, the marital relationship ended, not the point of irretrievable breakdown, that is relevant to the valuation of the marital estate. In the present case, following the date of separation, the parties lived at separate locations, maintained separate financial and retirement accounts, made separate financial decisions, did not jointly own property, and did not contribute either monetary or nonmonetary resources to each other for 9 years. The District Court did not err in using the separation date as the point of valuation of the marital estate, rather than the date on which the petition for dissolution was filed. In re Marriage of Geror, 2000 MT 60, 299 M 33, 996 P2d 381, 57 St. Rep. 285 (2000), following In re Marriage of Kraut, 215 M 170, 696 P2d 981, 42 St. Rep. 268 (1985).

Apportionment of Debts of Parties — Failure of Parties to Agree to Apportionment: As part of proceedings for dissolution of her marriage to Joseph, the District Court ordered that Maureen assume responsibility for payment of a $7,856 debt remaining on the purchase of her automobile and that Joseph assume responsibility for the payment of all his medical bills, amounting to $15,100. Joseph contended that the District Court erred because Maureen had agreed that her assumption of part of his medical bills was fair. The Supreme Court reviewed the District Court testimony and the petition for dissolution in which Maureen asserted that Joseph should assume the debts of his own medical bills and distinguishing In re marriage of Beck, 203 M 455, 661 P2d 1282 (1983), concluded that there was nothing in the record demonstrating that Maureen agreed to pay a portion of those bills. In re Marriage of Ortiz, 282 M 500, 938 P2d 1308, 54 St. Rep. 446 (1997).

Valuation of Parties' Assets at Different Times — No Abuse of Discretion: Generally a District Court must determine the net value of the marital estate at or near the time of dissolution, prior to dividing the property. In the present case, the court valued the assets given to the husband at the time of trial, but valued the assets given to the wife at the time of separation. Wife had several assets stolen from her car during the time that the parties were separated, and their loss was charged against the wife's share of the estate. Wife had also used $5,000 of her money to pay a retainer to her attorney prior to trial, and again the court found it to be an expense incurred on her behalf and valued the asset as if it were still in her possession. Under In re Marriage of Hurley, 222 M 287, 721 P2d 1279 (1986), dissipation of a party's assets can justify a court's selection of separate valuation dates for the estates of the respective parties. Such was the case here; thus, the use of different valuation dates was not an abuse of the court's discretion. In re Marriage of Walls, 278 M 413, 925 P2d 483, 53 St. Rep. 974 (1996).

Valuation of Farm Property — Adoption of Appraisal as Factual Issue Determined by District Court — "Clearly Erroneous" Standard Applicable: Upon the dissolution of Alan's and Linda's marriage, the District Court adopted the appraisal of Alan's expert witness, to the exclusion of the appraisal by Linda's expert. Linda raised numerous objections to the appraisal by Alan's expert. Citing Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 250 M 175, 819 P2d 158 (1991), the Supreme Court held that the valuation of property is a factual issue to be determined by the trial court and that when reviewing findings of fact on this subject, the Supreme Court is precluded from substituting its judgment for that of the trier of fact and may only set aside the findings of the trial court if they are clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court noted that the District Court set out specific reasons why the appraisal by Alan's expert was adopted and the appraisal by Linda's expert rejected. In re Marriage of Meeks, 276 M 237, 915 P2d 831, 53 St. Rep. 365 (1996), followed and the clearly erroneous standard applied in In re Marriage of Geror, 2000 MT 60, 299 M 33, 996 P2d 381, 57 St. Rep. 285 (2000).

Refusal to Include Property Acquired After Termination of Marriage Upheld: After Helen filed a petition for dissolution of her marriage to Fred, there were numerous delays in the proceedings because of substitutions of counsel, continuances, attempts to compel discovery, and motions for sanctions. The trial was finally held approximately 4 ½ years after the petition was filed. Fred argued that the valuation of the marital estate should have included property and liabilities acquired after termination of the marriage relationship. Citing In re Marriage of Wagner, 208 M 369, 679 P2d 753 (1984), the Supreme Court held that because of the circumstances of the case, inherent delays, and accumulation of assets in the interim, it would be inequitable to include in the marital estate property and liabilities acquired after termination of the marriage relationship. In re Marriage of Rada, 263 M 402, 869 P2d 254, 51 St. Rep. 110 (1994).

Settlement Agreement — No Necessity of Findings on Statutory Factors: To the extent that any language in In re Marriage of Caras, 254 M 169, 835 P2d 715 (1992), suggests that a District Court commits reversible error by failing to make findings pursuant to this section in considering a separation agreement that distributes the marital property, the language is overruled. The factors in that section must be considered only when a District Court divides the marital estate in absence of an agreement. In this case, the parties reached an agreement. Therefore, a determination of the net worth of the marital estate was not required in determining the conscionability of the agreement. There were no professional appraisals, the parties and one of their attorneys gave numerous conflicting appraisals, and the agreement covered maintenance, distribution of property, and child support and medical care. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in holding the agreement conscionable. In re Marriage of Caras, 263 M 377, 868 P2d 615, 51 St. Rep. 98 (1994).

Damages for Husband's Fraud Assessed Equally Against Divided Property: Clarence and Marcia were divorced in a proceeding in which the District Court awarded the marital property (consisting of a farm) in nearly equal parts. In a separate action, Clarence had been found guilty of fraud for commingling property from his mother's estate with his own finances, to the detriment of his sisters, who obtained a judgment against him. The District Court awarded the damages for fraud equally out of each half of the farm awarded to Clarence and Marcia. Marcia argued that the award of damages against her part of the farm was an abuse of discretion by the District Court because she was being penalized for her former husband's fraud. The Supreme Court found no abuse of discretion because the District Court found that because of commingling, the addition of the stolen funds had increased the value of the entire marital estate. Therefore, the entire estate should be charged with the value of the funds. In re Marriage of Kimm, 260 M 479, 861 P2d 165, 50 St. Rep. 1146 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Meeks, 276 M 237, 915 P2d 831, 53 St. Rep. 365 (1996).

Failure to Consider Personal Property and Child Support on Remand on Real Property Issue: Because the remanded divorce proceeding issue was whether the District Court abused its discretion in its valuation of the marital real property, it was not error for the District Court on remand to refuse testimony on personal property and computation of child support. In re Marriage of Becker, 255 M 357, 842 P2d 332, 49 St. Rep. 983 (1992).

Failure to Make Finding on Basis of Stipulation and Evidence — Remand Denied: Wife disputed the amount of debt found owing against the marital real property. The parties stipulated that the debt in June 1984 was $20,704. Wife's exhibit number 3 supported that stipulation. The District Court concluded that the June 1984 debt was $21,078. The $374 discrepancy does not affect the conscionability of the property settlement and does not require a remand for further proceedings. In re Marriage of Becker, 255 M 357, 842 P2d 332, 49 St. Rep. 983 (1992).

Disability Benefits Properly Included in Marital Estate: Disability benefits, including workers' compensation permanent total disability payments, may be properly included in the marital estate because they clearly come within the definition in this section of property "however and whenever acquired". The provisions of 39-71-743 that prohibit attachment or assignment of workers' compensation benefit payments do not bar classification of workers' compensation awards as marital property. In re Marriage of Schmitz, 255 M 159, 841 P2d 496, 49 St. Rep. 919 (1992).

School Loan Taken After Separation but Before Dissolution as Marital Debt: Following separation, wife's employment was terminated through no fault of her own. In order to find other work, she took out a $4,000 student loan to pay for additional schooling. Although the marital estate generally should be valued at or near the time of dissolution, it was within the trial court's discretion to consider the loan as a marital debt in determining the net value of the estate. In re Marriage of Lopez, 255 M 238, 841 P2d 1122, 49 St. Rep. 890 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Meeks, 276 M 237, 915 P2d 831, 53 St. Rep. 365 (1996).

Value of Partnership Interest in Building: Husband had a 25% interest in a partnership that owned a commercial building as its sole asset. The building was purchased for $231,000, with husband's initial investment share at $7,500. At the time of trial, the outstanding loan balance was $207,000. Although no evidence of fair market value was presented at trial, the partnership agreement provided that in the event of the death of a partner, the building would be valued at $275,000. The District Court did not err in adopting this figure, subtracting the outstanding loan balance, determining the partnership equity to be $68,000, and then valuing husband's 25% interest in the building at $17,000. In re Marriage of Lopez, 255 M 238, 841 P2d 1122, 49 St. Rep. 890 (1992).

Averaging of Expert Valuations Within Court's Discretion: Husband's expert valued husband's dental practice at $65,000, and wife's expert valued the practice at $200,000. The District Court found the first valuation too low because the expert failed to give sufficient consideration to the lack of competition in rural areas and to husband's recent increased income. The second valuation was considered too high because the expert based calculations on a study that used cities that were large by Montana standards and failed to consider the uniqueness of the practice being in four separate areas. The court averaged the values to arrive at a $133,000 value. It is within a court's discretion to average the values given by experts to arrive at an equitable distribution. In re Marriage of Sacry, 253 M 378, 833 P2d 1035, 49 St. Rep. 452 (1992).

Marital Property Disposed of During Separation Properly Excluded From Marital Estate: Various items of marital property were sold by the parties during the period that they were separated, and the District Court disregarded the value of the items in determining the worth of the marital estate. Given the fact that the sale proceeds were used to pay normal living expenses and marital debts, failure to include the proceeds in the marital estate was not an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Keedy, 249 M 47, 813 P2d 442, 48 St. Rep. 572 (1991).

Interest Not Allowable Until Amount Due Ascertained: The rule in this jurisdiction, as set out in Daly v. Swift & Co., 90 M 52, 300 P 265 (1931), is that interest is not allowable until the exact amount due is ascertained or is ascertainable. In re Marriage of Gerhart, 245 M 279, 800 P2d 698, 47 St. Rep. 2106 (1990).

House Not Part of Marital Estate Under Constructive Trust Theory: The wife argued that the family home, purchased by the husband's parents, should be included in the marital estate on the basis of a constructive trust. The Supreme Court held that although the husband and wife had chosen the house and made the arrangements for the purchase, the husband's parents had title to the home and had assumed the rights and responsibilities of ownership. Under the facts, a constructive trust did not exist. In re Marriage of Owen, 244 M 306, 797 P2d 226, 47 St. Rep. 1634 (1990).

Discounting Value of Partnership Interest: Wife contended that the District Court erred in valuing the marital estate by applying a 35% discount to husband's interest in a business partnership. While a partner may have management rights in a partnership, generally the partner may not transfer the management rights. This inability to transfer, regardless of the size of the partner's interest, decreases the merchantability of even a large partnership interest. The inalienability of the management rights made discounting appropriate in this case because the interest would be worth less in the hands of an assignee than in the hands of a partner. In re Marriage of Novakovich, 240 M 249, 783 P2d 937, 46 St. Rep. 2099 (1989). See also In re Marriage of Cole, 234 M 352, 763 P2d 39, 45 St. Rep. 1965 (1988).

Title to Land Held by Husband's Mother — Wife Only Entitled to Husband's Limited Equity Under Contract for Deed: Husband's mother held title to a piece of land, and husband had only a limited equity by virtue of a few payments credited to him under a contract for deed. The court could only award wife husband's equity in the land, and it was error to award the entire value of the land. In re Marriage of Hockaday, 237 M 413, 773 P2d 1217, 46 St. Rep. 910 (1989).

District Court's Failure to Determine Net Worth of Marital Estate Not Improper: The District Court divided the marital estate of the parties without determining the net worth of the property. The Supreme Court ruled that the statute did not require such a determination. Rather, the test is whether the findings as a whole are sufficient to determine the net worth and to decide if the distribution was equitable. In re Marriage of Stephenson, 237 M 157, 772 P2d 846, 46 St. Rep. 700 (1989).

Adoption of Different Valuation Dates Not Error: Husband contended that the District Court erred by valuing a farming debt at a time different from the time at which it evaluated other assets and liabilities. While valuation of assets should generally be made at or near the time of the dissolution hearing, if a single valuation date would result in an inequitable distribution of property, the court may choose several different times for valuation. In re Marriage of Milesnick, 235 M 88, 765 P2d 751, 45 St. Rep. 2182 (1988).

Failure to Set Forth Total Value of Property — No Error: Both parties stipulated to a temporary distribution of personal property providing that all unlisted property be awarded to wife. In adopting the stipulation, the court implicitly adopted that provision. It was not necessary that the court set forth in its findings a statement of the total value of the personal property. In re Marriage of Purdy, 234 M 502, 764 P2d 857, 45 St. Rep. 2084 (1988).

Heavily Indebted Property With Profits-Use Limitation: A partnership loan agreement with a bank requiring all profits of the heavily indebted partnership to be applied to debt reduction did not change the character of the partnership from income-producing to income-consuming, and the partnership remained income-producing. In re Marriage of Cole, 234 M 352, 763 P2d 39, 45 St. Rep. 1965 (1988).

General District Court Discretion in Achieving Equitable Distribution: Generally, the District Court is vested with wide discretion in the performance of its duty to achieve an equitable distribution of property in dissolution proceedings. In valuing property, the court is not bound by the opinion of a particular party or expert; rather, the court remains free, in its discretion, to adopt any reasonable valuation of property that is supported by the record. In re Marriage of Luisi, 232 M 243, 756 P2d 456, 45 St. Rep. 1023 (1988), followed in In re Marriage of Johns, 238 M 256, 776 P2d 839, 46 St. Rep. 1249 (1989), In re Marriage of Becker, 244 M 469, 798 P2d 124, 47 St. Rep. 1729 (1990), In re Marriage of Scott, 246 M 10, 803 P2d 620, 47 St. Rep. 2237 (1990), and In re Marriage of Harper, 1999 MT 321, 297 M 290, 994 P2d 1, 56 St. Rep. 1280 (1999). Participation in Marital Debts — No Dissipation of Estate: During the last 2 years of marriage, husband borrowed $32,823 in small increments to pay household bills and meet costs of running his office. Although wife asserted she knew nothing about the loans, she freely accepted the benefits of the loans while the parties were together. She later claimed husband dissipated the marital estate. The District Court specifically looked at the nature of the loans, found no dissipation, and properly ordered wife to participate in the marital debts. In re Marriage of Stewart, 232 M 40, 757 P2d 765, 45 St. Rep. 850 (1988).

Property Transferred After Dissolution Filed — Proper as Part of Estate: It was not improper to include in the marital estate property the husband transferred to another party after the petition for dissolution was filed. In re Marriage of Sessions, 231 M 437, 753 P2d 1306, 45 St. Rep. 744 (1988).

Differing Valuations on Separation and Dissolution — No Abuse of Discretion: Although as a general rule the net worth of parties is to be determined at the time of dissolution, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in determining the value of husband's farming operation at the time of separation since wife did not participate in farming after separation. The court valued the land, farming equipment, and the remainder of the personal property at the time of dissolution. In re Marriage of Halverson, 230 M 226, 749 P2d 518, 45 St. Rep. 162 (1988).

Standard of Review of Distribution and Valuation of Marital Property: The standard for reviewing a District Court's division of marital property, articulated in In re Marriage of Hall, 228 M 36, 740 P2d 684, 44 St. Rep. 1321 (1987), is that the Supreme Court will reverse a District Court only upon a showing that the District Court has acted arbitrarily or has committed a clear abuse of discretion, resulting in either instance in substantial injustice. The same standard was applied to review of a District Court's valuation of marital property. In re Marriage of Anderson, 230 M 89, 748 P2d 469, 45 St. Rep. 40 (1988).

FELA Benefits Deposited in Joint Account as Part of Marital Estate: Husband injured in an industrial accident received monthly temporary total disability benefits through the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA). The benefits were deposited in the couple's joint checking and savings accounts. Once the benefits were commingled with other funds in the joint account, they became part of the marital estate, giving the wife an equal interest in and right to the FELA funds. In re Marriage of Jones, 229 M 128, 745 P2d 350, 44 St. Rep. 1834 (1987), followed in In re Marriage of Bos, 238 M 267, 776 P2d 841, 46 St. Rep. 1258 (1989).

No Interest of Nonacquiring Spouse in Property — No Property Value as Product of Marital Contribution: Nearly all the assets included in this marital estate originated from stock brought to the marriage by the wife. The assets lost value as a result of business ventures of both parties. The Supreme Court cited In re Marriage of Herron, 186 M 396, 608 P2d 97 (1980), in holding that the District Court can justifiably find that the nonacquiring spouse has no interest in the property when none of the value of the property is a product of contribution from the marital effort. In re Marriage of Fitzmorris, 229 M 96, 745 P2d 353, 44 St. Rep. 1809 (1987).

Division of Remaining Proceeds of First Dissolution Upon Second: Wife was awarded funds at the time of the first dissolution of marriage, which she deposited in an account. The parties remarried, and upon a second dissolution, the trial judge properly included the wife's proceeds remaining from the first dissolution in equally dividing the marital estate. In re Marriage of Reid, 226 M 116, 733 P2d 1302, 44 St. Rep. 500 (1987).

Value of Property Determined as of Dissolution Date Rather Than Separation Date: The District Court did not err in adopting values of marital property at the date of dissolution rather than as of the date of separation 3 years earlier. The Supreme Court found no evidence to conflict with the later values and adhered to the policy of using the dissolution date for valuation as it most clearly reflects the status of the property at the time of trial. In re Marriage of Hammill, 225 M 263, 732 P2d 403, 44 St. Rep. 220 (1987).

Failure to Make Finding on Basis of Valuation — Harmless Error: When faced with widely conflicting valuations, the District Court is required to give reasons for selecting one value over others. However, it was harmless error for the District Court to employ the basis for valuation proposed by the wife since it was more sound than the method suggested by the husband. In re Marriage of Hurley, 222 M 287, 721 P2d 1279, 43 St. Rep. 1271 (1986).

Goodwill of Professional Practice: It is not an abuse of the trial court's discretion to consider the goodwill associated with a spouse's medical practice in the valuation of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Swanson, 220 M 490, 716 P2d 219, 43 St. Rep. 551 (1986).

Exclusion of Wife's Interest in Ranch Gifted by Mother Not Abuse of Discretion: Husband contended that ranch property being gifted to wife by her mother for inheritance purposes should have been included in the marital estate. The District Court directly addressed the issue in its findings of fact and conclusions of law and excluded wife's one-half interest in the $360,000 parcel gifted under an annuity plan. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's exclusion from the marital estate, noting that the gift was made for estate planning purposes and that husband did not contribute significantly to the property. In re Marriage of Wessel, 220 M 326, 715 P2d 45, 43 St. Rep. 405 (1986).

Apartments Purchased by Husband and His Parents — No Gift to Husband by Parents: Husband contended that his interest in property was a gift. However, the District Court found that apartment property was not a gift and was properly included in the marital estate even though the husband testified that he and his parents bought the property together, his parents paid the total downpayment, and he later paid them back one-half of the downpayment out of the property's profits. In re Marriage of Williams, 220 M 232, 714 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 319 (1986).

Court Use of Most Comprehensive Appraisal of Apartments — No Error: Lower court did not err in accepting apartment property appraisal offered by wife's expert, rather than appraisal of husband's expert. Appraisal of wife's expert was more comprehensive and reflected three different approaches to valuation. In re Marriage of Williams, 220 M 232, 714 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 319 (1986), followed in Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

Furnishings Counted Twice — No Error: It appeared that some household furnishings may have been counted twice in dividing the marital estate, but the Supreme Court will not attempt to review every element of a complex property distribution in the manner that an auditing accountant might. The court examines whether there is substantial evidence to support the property distribution. The overall apportionment and the complexities involved here led the court to affirm. In re Marriage of Williams, 220 M 232, 714 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 319 (1986).

Goodwill of Professional Anesthesiology Practice as Marital Asset: The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's determination that goodwill of husband's sole professional anesthesiology practice is a marital asset subject to property division in a dissolution of marriage. The Supreme Court adopted the analysis of the Washington Court in Matter of Marriage of Fleege, 588 P2d 1136 (1979), which indicated that while the goodwill of a professional practice may not be readily marketable and the determination of its exact value may be difficult, that element may nevertheless be found to exist in a given professional practice. The lower court did not err in assigning a value of $103,410 for going concern or goodwill value based on testimony of a CPA. In re Marriage of Hull, 219 M 480, 712 P2d 1317, 43 St. Rep. 107 (1986), cited in In re Marriage of McLean/Fleury, 257 M 55, 849 P2d 1012, 50 St. Rep. 35 (1993), and followed in In re Marriage of Stufft, 286 M 239, 950 P2d 1373, 54 St. Rep. 1391 (1997).

Mobile Home Affixed to Land of Husband's Father — Part of Marital Estate: The husband and wife purchased a mobile home and affixed it to lots in North Dakota owned by husband's father. The lots were ultimately transferred to the couple's minor children. Husband contended that, once affixed, the mobile home became the property of the father since he owned the lots. The court rejected the contention and held that it was correct for the District Court to include the mobile home as a part of the marital estate after deducting the value of the lots now owned by the minor children. In re Marriage of Wengeler, 219 M 452, 712 P2d 1336, 43 St. Rep. 86 (1986).

Appraisal of Timberland — Highest Use: The District Court adopted the appraisal submitted by the husband's appraiser, which established that the highest and best use of the timberland was as a part of a ranching operation and that the limited grazing available on the timberland justified a valuation from one-third to one-fourth that of open grazing land—a value of $80 an acre. The wife's appraisal showed a value of $183 an acre. The Supreme Court concluded that there was substantial evidence to support the husband's appraisal, affirming the District Court's valuation of the land. In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2065 (1985).

No Award of Share of Appreciation or Equity Buildup: The District Court, in distributing the property of a marital estate, failed to award the wife any share in the appreciation or equity buildup of the ranch. The husband had a net worth of $110,000 at the time of marriage. At the time of dissolution, his ranch-related assets and gold and silver, less liabilities, totaled approximately $265,000, the increase being essentially the result of inflation and appreciation in land values. The wife pointed out that the District Court found she had made an equal contribution to the marriage yet failed to award her any percentage of the increased value of the ranch. Under 40-4-202, in dividing property acquired prior to marriage and the increased value of the property, the District Court must consider nonmonetary contributions of homemakers and the extent to which such contributions facilitated maintenance of the property; however, the right to share in particular property must be considered along with all of the other applicable factors enumerated in 40-4-202. The Supreme Court found that the District Court carefully considered all these factors in fashioning an equitable distribution. The wife failed to demonstrate that the District Court abused its discretion, and the apportionment of the ranch property to the husband was affirmed. In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2065 (1985).

Valuation of Real Property and Retirement Benefits — Inconsistent Discount Rates: An economics expert used a 5.4% discount rate with regard to the present value of the wife's pension right based on a 30-year earnings average. He testified that at the time of the entry into the consideration of comparable sales in the area of the ranch, the sellers could have invested money safely at 12%, and that he considered that factor in adjusting the comparable sales. His testimony was not contradicted and was accepted by the District Court. On appeal, the wife contended that the court erred in adopting inconsistent discount rates for the ranch real property and her teacher's retirement pension. The Supreme Court held that the wife failed to present any evidence that the use of two different rates was in fact contradictory. There was no evidence to support a conclusion that a 12% rate could properly have been factored in the pension computation, nor was there any evidence that a 5.4% rate would have been appropriate so far as the land was concerned. The Supreme Court concluded that there was no demonstrable reason for the District Court to require any identity of the discount rates; therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the use of different discount rates. In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2065 (1985).

No New Trial Merely Because Value Increases: Marital assets will appreciate and depreciate with the passage of time, and a new trial cannot be granted each time the value of an asset changes. In re Marriage of Staudt, 216 M 196, 700 P2d 175, 42 St. Rep. 740 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Reich, 222 M 192, 720 P2d 286, 43 St. Rep. 1167 (1986).

Preservation of Family Ranch — Not Proper Consideration Upon Division: Montana's policy in favor of keeping a family farm or ranch intact upon dissolution is not a proper consideration when dividing marital property under this statute. The policy is only to be considered upon distribution of the marital property after it has been allocated. In re Marriage of Glass, 215 M 248, 697 P2d 96, 42 St. Rep. 328 (1985). See also In re Marriage of Staudt, 216 M 196, 700 P2d 175, 42 St. Rep. 740 (1985).

All Assets Considered in Making Equitable Distribution: On appeal, the husband contended that the trial court erred in not establishing a value of the entire marital assets as required by this section. He argued that the court's failure led to an inequitable distribution of assets. However, the Supreme Court held that it was not error for the trial court to distribute the marital assets in accordance with what the court believed to be an equitable distribution, rather than attempting to find the value of the assets. There was abundant evidence to establish that the court considered all of the marital assets with values in making its distribution. In re Marriage of Yadon, 216 M 59, 699 P2d 75, 42 St. Rep. 638 (1985).

Valuation at Time of Property Disposition Hearing Fifteen Months After Dissolution: In this unique and rare circumstance where, inter alia, there were no marital assets that fluctuated in value during the 15 months from dissolution to disposition of marital property, the Supreme Court held that the trial court's failure to value the marital estate at the time of dissolution, at most, constitutes harmless error. In re Marriage of Loegering, 212 M 499, 689 P2d 260, 41 St. Rep. 1892 (1984).

Granting Party Credits Against Equity of Parties in Real Property: The Supreme Court remanded to have the District Court calculate the husband's credit for payments made on real property obligation, giving consideration to fact that he was making those payments in return for being allowed to maintain his residence there. The wife was entitled to some credit for loss of reasonable rental value. Other credits made without substantiating findings were also remanded. Gies v. Gies, 210 M 234, 681 P2d 1092, 41 St. Rep. 1028 (1984).

No Error in Dividing Remaining Real Property Without Determining Value of Total Marital Estate: Although it is well settled that the District Court must determine and consider the net value of marital assets before dividing the estate, it was not error in this case to divide the marital real property without valuing the total marital estate. The remainder of the marital estate had already been divided by a prior dissolution decree and adopted settlement agreement. The parties had intended a separate real property disposition agreement, but they ultimately failed to agree. Gies v. Gies, 210 M 234, 681 P2d 1092, 41 St. Rep. 1028 (1984).

Workers' Compensation Benefits as Marital Assets — Error to Preclude as Matter of Law: The District Court found as a matter of law that workers' compensation benefits of the husband were not marital assets. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment, ordering an evidentiary hearing because it was unable to make an informed opinion from the record. At the hearing, findings should address the terms and purpose of the workers' compensation award. Blankenship v. Blankenship, 210 M 31, 682 P2d 1354, 41 St. Rep. 901 (1984).

Abuse of Discretion in Choice of Date of Valuation: This section does not mandate a specific time period within which marital assets should be accounted. Generally speaking, the logical time period is the duration of the marriage. This case is exceptional because between the date of the parties' separation in December 1980 and the October 1982 date used for valuation, the wife increased her net worth substantially and the husband decreased his net worth a great deal. Therefore, the Supreme Court ruled that the date of valuation of assets should have been the date of the parties' separation and that the District Court had abused its discretion by selecting a valuation date of October 1982. The Supreme Court reasoned that due to the unusual circumstances of this case, the District Court, through its choice of valuation date, had essentially rewarded the husband for encumbering the family ranch and penalized the wife for her ambitious efforts after the breakup of the marriage. Wagner v. Wagner, 208 M 369, 679 P2d 753, 41 St. Rep. 409 (1984), distinguished, where evidence preponderated against a finding that the marriage was irretrievably broken on the earlier date, in In re Marriage of Dalley, 232 M 235, 756 P2d 1131, 45

St. Rep 1017 (1988). See also In re Marriage of Swanson, 220 M 490, 716 P2d 219, 43 St. Rep. 551 (1986).

Spouse's Life Insurance Proceeds — Not Part of Marital Estate: Proceeds from life insurance policy on husband were not a cash asset of marital estate and would not properly be included in the property distribution upon a divorce. In re Marriage of Beck, 203 M 455, 661 P2d 1282, 40 St. Rep. 565 (1983).

Money Withdrawn From Joint Savings Account After Spouse Filed for Divorce: Money husband withdrew from savings account was properly found to be part of the marital property, as the account was owned jointly with his wife and the money was withdrawn immediately after his wife petitioned for divorce. In re Marriage of Goodmundson, 201 M 535, 655 P2d 509, 39 St. Rep. 2295 (1982).

Wife's Inheritance Spent for Family Purposes: Court distributing property pursuant to divorce properly failed to consider wife's inheritance when she had spent the whole of it on autos for herself and her daughter, carpet for the home, and a fence. In re Marriage of Goodmundson, 201 M 535, 655 P2d 509, 39 St. Rep. 2295 (1982).

Foregone Earnings as Monetary Contribution: In a dissolution proceeding the wife contended that the District Court had erred in considering the nonmonetary contributions of the husband. During the marriage, the husband was given the opportunity to take a decrease in earnings in return for the opportunity to participate in working oil and gas interests. The foregone earnings of the husband coupled with cash contributions of the wife resulted in the acquisition of oil and gas interests. The Supreme Court stated that while nonmonetary contributions are normally difficult to quantify, foregone earnings are easily and accurately measurable in dollars and cents, and it is difficult to conceive of them as anything but monetary. The District Court did not err in considering the foregone earnings as monetary contributions toward the purchase of the oil and gas interests. In re Marriage of Krause, 200 M 368, 654 P2d 963, 39 St. Rep. 1809 (1982).

Conveyance of Individual Property Before Petition Filed: In the fall of 1977, after suffering a stroke, the husband initiated real property conveyances to his children to insure their future security in the event of his death. On June 2, 1978, the wife left the family home, the husband being unaware of her intention to divorce him. On June 5, 1978, the conveyances were completed. On June 16, 1978, the wife filed a petition for dissolution. Because 40-2-202 allows a married person to transfer his property to another without consent of his spouse and because there was substantial evidence that the conveyances were not fraudulent, the property was not part of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Crabtree, 200 M 178, 651 P2d 29, 39 St. Rep. 1668 (1982).

Family Ranch Operation — Son's Interest Not Affected: A father and son operated various parcels of ranch property as one economic unit. The mother provided nonmonetary homemaker services. Title to the Davis parcel was in the father's and son's names. In a property settlement proceeding, the trial court included half the value of the Davis parcel in the marital estate. It did so properly, recognizing the nonmonetary contributions of both the son and mother in maintaining the family ranch and the statutory limitations of its power to affect property rights of only the mother and father. In re Marriage of Larson, 200 M 134, 649 P2d 1351, 39 St. Rep. 1628 (1982).

Current Property Value Determinative:

In a division of marital property, the trial court failed to value a residence and parcel of real property and used the value of the remaining assets as of the beginning of the marriage. By failing to value all the assets and to use the current value of the assets, the trial court acted arbitrarily. In re Marriage of Evert, 198 M 191, 645 P2d 417, 39 St. Rep. 860 (1982).

A court distributing property in accordance with this section should consider the current property value of all property acquired during the course of the marriage. Kruse v. Kruse, 179 M 79, 586 P2d 294 (1978).

Property Disposed of Between Petition and Trial: Under In re Marriage of Lippert, 192 M 222, 627 P2d 1206 (1981), (1) the worth of the marital estate must be determined at or near the time of dissolution; (2) the District Court may never award more than 100% of the marital estate; and (3) the power of a spouse to freely contract with others regarding marital property endures until lawfully moderated or terminated. In the present case, the District Court did not err in including within the marital estate $51,000, which was expended by the husband between the date of petition for dissolution and the date of trial, because the District Court, on the day the petition was filed, moderated the above-mentioned spousal power by enjoining the husband from disposing of property except for necessities or in the usual course of business. Hunter v. Hunter, 196 M 235, 639 P2d 489, 39 St. Rep. 59 (1982).

Spouse's Lost Investments Not in Marital Estate — Right to Contract With Others: A dissolution award that includes in the marital estate assets which the appellant invested and lost 1 year before the dissolution ignores fundamental legal principles of marital status and thus constitutes an abuse of discretion. Spouses possess mutual powers, obligations, and interests which endure until lawfully modified or terminated, and although appellant may have used poor judgment in his business transactions regarding the family assets, he possessed the power to freely contract with others regarding marital property. Lippert v. Lippert, 192 M 222, 627 P2d 1206, 38 St. Rep. 625 (1981).

Inclusion of Assets in Marital Estate Held Proper: The District Court's inclusion or exclusion of certain assets in the marital estate such as: (1) assets withdrawn by respondent husband 2 months before the dissolution was filed; (2) bonds held in the name of parents and children; (3) a retirement fund about which no evidence was adduced at trial; (4) residential property; and (5) personal property and a personal debt was supported by the facts and thus will not be disturbed on appeal. Karr v. Karr, 192 M 388, 628 P2d 267, 38 St. Rep. 506 (1981), followed with respect to the failure to include in the marital estate retirement benefits on which no evidence was adduced at trial in Holston v. Holston, 205 M 470, 668 P2d 1048, 40 St. Rep. 1435 (1983).

Abuse of Discretion in Valuing the Marital Estate — Lack of Testimony: In a marriage dissolution, the factors listed in 40-4-202 must be considered and referred to in the court's findings and conclusions and there must be competent evidence presented on the values of the property. Thus where the District Court's valuation of many of the marital assets amounts to "guesswork" primarily due to the attorney's failure to provide ample testimony for the District Court regarding values, the cause must be remanded to obtain competent evidence on the value of disputed items of marital property. Collett v. Collett, 190 M 500, 621 P2d 1093, 38 St. Rep. 36 (1981), distinguished in In re Marriage of Stoneman, 2000 MT 274, 302 M 107, 14 P3d 12, 57 St. Rep. 1145 (2000), in which the District Court properly exercised its discretion in dividing personal property based on the husband's written value estimates absent any estimate or offer of valuation by the wife.

Farm Operating Loan — Excludable in Determining Marital Estate: The trial court did not deduct the value of a farm operating loan from the value of the marital estate for the purpose of arriving at a property distribution. To deduct the loan would have required a decision as to whether or not to include any, a part, or all of the unquantified balance of the loan, and an estimation of the future proceeds of the farm. Depending on the accounting method used, the amount to be deducted could range from $13,500 to nothing. Excluding the value of the farm operating loan was reasonable under these circumstances. In re Marriage of Krum, 188 M 498, 614 P2d 525 (1980), followed in In re Marriage of Neal, 267 M 455, 884 P2d 789, 51 St. Rep. 1109 (1994).

Marital Assets Concealed — No Abuse of Discretion: Where appellant sued respondent for divorce and pending the divorce the respondent husband claimed to have sold an asset of the parties, consisting of a 1966 Chevrolet race car, but subsequent to the divorce decree the appellant discovered that the car had not been sold as the respondent claimed, it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to omit the value of the race car in determining the value of the marital estate. Fredericksen v. Fredericksen, 185 M 548, 605 P2d 1135 (1980).

Complete Disclosure Required for an Equitable Division of Marital Property: Testimony of wife which was vague, confusing, and conflicting regarding family money and business accounts was not sufficient basis for court's unequal division of property in her favor as there must be a complete disclosure by both parties of total value of their assets and resources in order for court to make an equitable division of property. Fautsch v. Fautsch, 166 M 98, 530 P2d 1172 (1975). See also Karr v. Karr, 192 M 388, 628 P2d 267, 38 St. Rep. 506 (1981).

Sufficiency of Evidence, Findings

Debt Owed to Trusts Chargeable Against Marital Estate: Of the total amount of debt attributable to the marital estate, the District Court attributed $631,000 borrowed from and repayable to two trusts of which husband was sole beneficiary. Wife contended that this was error because in repaying the trust, husband was essentially repaying himself, while husband presented evidence through his trust officer that his repayment obligations were genuine. Distinguishing In re Marriage of Schmitz, 255 M 159, 841 P2d 496 (1992), the Supreme Court held that competent evidence, not documentary evidence, of a loan agreement is required. Evidence by the trust officer that husband took out two promissory notes secured by mortgages on the homes purchased with the loan proceeds was sufficient to support the decision to include the $631,000 in loans as debt chargeable to the marital estate. In re Marriage of Pfeifer, 282 M 461, 938 P2d 684, 54 St. Rep. 432 (1997).

Failure to Identify Assets or Assign Values — Abuse of Discretion: It was an abuse of discretion in the evaluation of the marital estate for the District Court to fail to: (1) identify or describe the assets acquired during the marriage; (2) assign values to them; and (3) consider the contingent liabilities associated with those assets. In re Marriage of Smith, 264 M 306, 871 P2d 884, 51 St. Rep. 277 (1994).

Appreciation Calculated on Basis of Erroneous and Speculative Figures: Calculation of the appreciation of a piece of real estate was clearly erroneous and was vacated because the court based the starting value on the average of figures that were based on total speculation. In re Marriage of Maedje, 263 M 262, 868 P2d 580, 51 St. Rep. 47 (1994).

Fair Market Value of Real Estate Contract to Be Based Upon Evidence: The husband argued that the lower court erred in not discounting the value of a contract for deed in determining its present fair market value. The Supreme Court held that although the rule usually applied by the courts is that the present-day fair market value of a contract for deed rarely equals the principal balance, in this case the husband had presented no evidence on how much the devaluation should be. Therefore, it was not error to use the principal balance due on the contract. In re Marriage of Porter, 247 M 395, 807 P2d 192, 48 St. Rep. 247 (1991).

Husband's Attitude During Proceeding Taints Credibility: The husband argued that the lower court erred in finding that he had the ability to earn $20 an hour as an electrical draftsman. The Supreme Court held that the lower court was justified in discounting any testimony of the husband because his attitude during the trial tainted his credibility. In re Marriage of Porter, 247 M 395, 807 P2d 192, 48 St. Rep. 247 (1991).

Valuation of Home Based on Wife's Corroborated Testimony Rather Than Husband's Uncorroborated Testimony: The District Court based its valuation of a lot with the family home on it on wife's testimony, which the court found was generally more credible than husband's. Her testimony was supported by the County Treasurer. Husband offered no concrete evidence in support of his valuation. There was evidence of extensive improvements. The court's valuation was not arbitrary or an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Hockaday, 237 M 413, 773 P2d 1217, 46 St. Rep. 910 (1989). This standard of review was applied in In re Marriage of Ruff, 247 M 486, 807 P2d 1345, 48 St. Rep. 271 (1991).

Valuation of Estate Reversed — Lack of Supporting Evidence: The trial court's valuation of the marital estate was reversed for lack of supporting evidence. There was wide disparity between the parties' valuations and an apparent mathematical error by the trial court. The issue was remanded for findings that would reflect the basis of the net worth. In re Marriage of Anderson, 220 M 477, 717 P2d 11, 43 St. Rep. 541 (1986).

Abuse of Discretion — Four Substantial Injustices: The property settlement was set aside by the Supreme Court because the District Court abused its discretion in four major areas. First, the husband's values for property, while not adopted absolutely verbatim, were almost always accepted without explanation even though the record indicates some of his values were questionable. Second, as her share of the marital estate the wife received household goods with inflated values while the husband received income-producing property such as stocks and an annuity. Third, nonincome-producing property brought into the marriage 15 years ago was deducted from the division of property, resulting in an inequitable and unworkable property division. Fourth, various "credits"—payments on real property, withdrawals from checking accounts, and child support—appeared as distributions of property, but it was unclear what constituted a credit in this context. In re Marriage of Rolfe, 216 M 39, 699 P2d 79, 42 St. Rep. 623 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Ryan, 222 M 188, 720 P2d 691, 43 St. Rep. 1163 (1986).

Found Value Higher Than Agreed Value — No Findings — Order to Change Value to That Agreed Upon: Trial court valued accounts and notes payable at $47,616, though the parties agreed they were worth $33,668. The court gave no explanation for its figure, and the Supreme Court ordered it to change the amount to that agreed to by the parties. In re Marriage of Beck, 203 M 455, 661 P2d 1282, 40 St. Rep. 565 (1983).

Projected Value of Current Growing Crop: The projected value that court distributing marital property upon divorce placed on 1981 growing crop was based on sufficient evidence. The evidence included the farm's tax returns for the past 4 years and the estimated expenses, acreage planted, and value of the crops. In re Marriage of Goodmundson, 201 M 535, 655 P2d 509, 39 St. Rep. 2295 (1982).

Improper to Include in Marital Estate Cattle Whose Brand Not Registered to Either Husband or Wife: In determining the size of the marital estate for the purpose of a division of property in a dissolution of marriage proceeding, the District Court included within the estate cattle whose brand was registered to the parties' adult children. The Supreme Court reversed because no evidence had been produced at trial to rebut the presumption that the person whose brand appeared on cattle was the owner of those cattle. Therefore, the court held that the cattle should not have been included in the marital estate since they were not owned by the husband or wife. In re Marriage of Schultz, 199 M 332, 649 P2d 1268, 39 St. Rep. 1435 (1982).

Indefinite Valuation Based on Parties' Opinion — Upheld: Evidence of the value of the major portion of marital estate, consisting of the family home and the family jewels, was indefinite, as appraisal figures were based mainly on the personal opinions of the parties, formed through informal inquiries and reliance on amounts of insurance coverage. Upon husband's claim on appeal that the District Court did not have sufficient competent evidence to properly evaluate the marital estate, the Supreme Court held that the trial court was not given the best evidence on which to base its valuations, but they would stand because there was nothing in the record to show they were clearly erroneous. Laster v. Laster, 197 M 470, 643 P2d 597, 39 St. Rep. 737 (1982).

Divided Purpose Land — Valuation of Each Plot Used for Each Purpose Required: District Court making property disposition upon dissolution of marriage found the fair market values of 1,200-acre and 2,956-acre tracts of farm-ranch land. The valuations were not supported by the evidence where the court did not break down the tracts between cropland, hay land, and grazing land and determine the number of acres and total value of each type of land. Hill v. Hill, 197 M 451, 643 P2d 582, 39 St. Rep. 723 (1982).

Dispute Over Particular Valuation

Value of Life Raft Within Range of Values Presented — No Error: The husband objected to the District Court's valuation of a life raft at $100, which was the value assigned to the raft by the wife, while the husband gave the raft no value. A District Court is free to assign any value to an item of property that is within the range of values offered into evidence, and because $100 was clearly within the range of values presented, the court did not abuse its discretion in valuing the raft at $100. In re Marriage of Hochhalter, 2001 MT 268, 307 M 261, __P3d__ (2001). See also In re Marriage of Lopez, 255 M 238, 841 P2d 1122 (1992).

Remand for Property Appraisal and Equitable Distribution of Marital Estate: In attempting to resolve the parties' disparate estimates of the valuation of the marital estate, the District Court made several findings regarding the wife's medical bills, equitable distribution of the couple's ranch operation, the value of the husband's home in town, a payment that the husband made to the wife for her interest in ranch property, and the value of the wife's retirement account and her home in town. The court noted that the parties had provided insufficient information to arrive at a value of the marital estate and suggested that the parties have the property appraised and divide the resulting value equally, noting that if the parties could not agree, the court would order the appraisal, charging each party with appraisal costs, and then divide the value of the estate equally. Rather than follow the court's advice, the husband instead appealed the court's findings. The Supreme Court found no error in the District Court findings. The parties chose to appeal without pursuing the trial court's suggestions, so the Supreme Court remanded so that the District Court could do what the parties were apparently incapable of doing themselves. In re Marriage of Gochanour, 2000 MT 156, 300 M 155, 4 P3d 643, 57 St. Rep. 619 (2000).

Qualifications of Real Estate Experts — Differing Valuation: At a hearing concerning the valuation and division of property in the dissolution of Maureen and Joseph's marriage, an agricultural real estate broker testified for Maureen that the parties' ranch was worth $398,000 to $400,000, while a certified and licensed property appraiser testified for Joseph that the ranch was worth $182,500. Joseph contended that the District Court erred in accepting the value of the ranch as testified to by the real estate broker because the broker had no experience as a real property appraiser. Citing Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248 (1994), the Supreme Court held that whether an adequate foundation has been established for the admission of expert testimony is an issue largely within the discretion of the District Court and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it relied upon the testimony of the real estate broker. The Supreme Court therefore affirmed the part of the District Court's order that valued the parties' ranch at $400,000. In re Marriage of Ortiz, 282 M 500, 938 P2d 1308, 54 St. Rep. 446 (1997).

Error in Attributing Higher Possessory Interest in Property Without Substantial Evidence: The parties stipulated that the value of wife's possessory interest in a house and acreage was $480,000, but the District Court valued wife's 11-year possessory interest at $552,000, resulting in a credit to her of a greater portion of the marital estate than if the property was awarded to her free of encumbrances. While a court's assignment of a different valuation is not in itself erroneous, it was reversible error in this case because the court reached the determination without a substantial evidentiary basis. In re Marriage of Pfeifer, 282 M 461 938 P2d 684, 54 St. Rep. 432 (1997). On remand, the District Court did not ignore the law of the case or exceed its jurisdiction when it revalued the wife's possessory interest in the home and land, adjusted the total value of the marital estate accordingly, and redistributed the estate to maintain the approximately equal distribution of property to each party that it originally had determined to be equitable. In re Marriage of Pfeifer, 1998 MT 228, 291 M 23, 965 P2d 895, 55 St. Rep. 953 (1998), distinguishing In re Marriage of Becker, 255 M 357, 842 P2d 332 (1992).

Presumption That Value of Stock in Shareholder's Agreement Is Real Value: A shareholder's agreement that predated the dissolution proceedings restricted husband from transferring stock for more than the price set forth in the agreement. If shareholders have employed an acceptable method of valuation and there is no evidence that the valuation was undertaken in bad faith or for the purpose of avoiding marital or debtor-creditor responsibilities, a presumption exists that the valuation of stock set forth in a shareholder's agreement is the real value of a shareholder's interest in a closely held corporation. In this case, it was reversible error for the trial court to adopt wife's valuation that did not consider the shareholder's agreement. In re Marriage of DeCosse, 282 M 212, 936 P2d 821, 54 St. Rep. 318 (1997), following Amodio v. Amodio, 509 NE 2d 936 (N.Y. 1987).

Valuation of Contract for Deed Not Supported by Record — Remand to District Court: Before Thomas and Debra were married, Thomas sold property in several states and used the proceeds to purchase a saloon in Missoula County. The saloon was sold on a contract for deed twice. After the first sale, the buyers defaulted. Thomas resold the saloon, and the buyers were still making payments at the time that Thomas and Debra divorced. The District Court awarded Debra a 40% interest in the remaining proceeds of the second sale of the saloon. The District Court awarded Thomas the $100,000 received in the first sale of the saloon, the $37,500 downpayment in the second sale, all payments on the second sale through May of 1995, and 60% of the remaining payments on the second sale. The District Court calculated the balance due on the second contract at $257,738.62 and the value of the remainder due on the second contract at $538,620. The value was determined multiplying the number of payments yet to be made times the amount of each payment. Thomas argued that the calculation was incorrect because it included a $25 a month escrow charge and also because the valuation included the total amount of interest to be paid under the contract and did not reflect present value. The Supreme Court found that the valuation of the balance due under the contract was not supported by the record and that double inclusion of other assets, as argued by Thomas, was unsupported by the record. The Supreme Court noted that correction of those errors would result in an adjustment to the values of the parts of the marital estate awarded to each party. The Supreme Court therefore remanded the case to the District Court for revaluation of the balance due under the contract. In re Marriage of O'Neil, 277 M 13, 917 P2d 916, 53 St. Rep. 522 (1996).

Valuation of Law Firm and Ranch Stock Not Supported by Evidence — Assignment of Debt Not Erroneous but Remanded: Upon the dissolution of the marriage of David and Mayla, the District Court apportioned the parties' property by valuing David's law practice at $75,000. David claimed that his law practice was worth $6,500, the value of the equipment. Mayla contended that the practice was worth more because of its average annual income and because of goodwill. The Supreme Court noted that the value placed on the business by Mayla was the amount borrowed by David and a former partner to purchase the interest of another former partner in the law firm and that these circumstances may not accurately represent the value of the law firm. The Supreme Court also noted that there was no evidence to support the figure of $75,000 assigned as the value of the law firm by the District Court and remanded for specific findings on that issue. The Supreme Court also noted that Mayla conceded that there was a problem with the valuation of David's ranch stock and remanded for a valuation of the stock. The Supreme Court also reviewed the District Court's assignment of the debts of the parties and found that no error was committed but, because the case was being remanded on other issues, directed the District Court to review its assignment of the parties' debts. In re Marriage of Stufft, 276 M 454, 916 P2d 767, 53 St. Rep. 467 (1996).

Valuation of Farm Property and Rebuttal of Expert Testimony — Refusal by District Court to Leave Record Open for Rebuttal Testimony Upheld: In a proceeding for the dissolution of their marriage, both Linda and Alan introduced expert testimony as to the value of Alan's farm. Claiming that she was surprised by the testimony of Alan's expert witness that the value of Alan's farm and a neighbor's farm were not comparable, Linda moved the District Court to leave the record open so that she could obtain the testimony of a neighbor on the value of his farm, which Linda alleged to be comparable to Alan's. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion. The Supreme Court noted that the District Court found that the neighbor could have been subpoenaed and that even if Linda was surprised by the testimony of Alan's expert, the testimony of the neighbor as to his willingness to pay a high price for his own farm absent certain improvements could not have proved that Alan's expert was incorrect in his testimony that the farms were not comparable for the purposes of valuation. The Supreme Court held that the testimony of an expert, whose opinion is based on fact, could not be adequately rebutted by the testimony of a layperson based upon a hypothetical that did not exist. In re Marriage of Meeks, 276 M 237, 915 P2d 831, 53 St. Rep. 365 (1996).

Discounting of Ranch Corporate Stock Held Reversible Error: Margaret and Mark were divorced after approximately 20 years of marriage. During their marriage, Mark was the general manager of two family ranches, organized as closely held corporations, in which he was a minority shareholder. All of Mark's shares were acquired by family gift or inheritance. Upon the divorce of the parties, the District Court discounted the value of Mark's stock in the two ranch corporations by 50%. Distinguishing In re Marriage of Jorgensen, 180 M 294, 590 P2d 606 (1979), the Supreme Court held that given the value of Mark's interest and position in the two ranching operations, there was no reason to discount his minority shares in either and that discounting was reversible error. In re Marriage of Davies, 266 M 466, 880 P2d 1368, 51 St. Rep. 929 (1994), distinguished in In re Marriage of Harper, 1999 MT 321, 297 M 290, 994 P2d 1, 56 St. Rep. 1280 (1999).

Value of Baseball Card Collection Affirmed: Both parties submitted widely varied estimates of the value of a baseball card collection, none of which were supported by independent evidence. The District Court's assignment of a value of $8,000 for the collection, absent clear error, was affirmed. In re Marriage of Newton, 255 M 463, 844 P2d 47, 49 St. Rep. 1068 (1992).

Disputed Valuation of Insurance Business Interest — Value of Goodwill: Wife's accountant capitalized the income generated by husband's insurance business over and above what would have been earned if husband were a salaried employee without the business. These excess earnings or discretionary cash, when capitalized using appropriate formulas, resulted in a valuation of goodwill in the business at $102,240. Husband's accountant used the same formula but estimated husband's salary without the business at a higher amount, resulting in a goodwill valuation of $37,039.60. The District Court held the value of goodwill to be $100,240, which was within the range of figures presented and therefore not clearly erroneous. In re Marriage of Lopez, 255 M 238, 841 P2d 1122, 49 St. Rep. 890 (1992).

Husband's Assumed Debt Not a Plus on Wife's Balance Sheet: The husband appealed the lower court's valuation of each party's share of the marital assets. The husband had been ordered to pay a home improvement loan on the house awarded to the wife, and he argued that the loan he was paying benefited the wife in the same amount and should have been reflected in her share of the marital assets. The Supreme Court ruled that even if the amount of the assumed loan had been added to the wife's assets, the distribution was still in favor of the husband and so the failure to include that amount on the wife's side of the ledger did not constitute error. In re Marriage of Cooper, 243 M 175, 793 P2d 810, 47 St. Rep. 1112 (1990).

Value of Irrigation Pipe — Inclusion as Marital Asset: It was not error for the District Court to independently value irrigation pipe and include it as personal property in the gross marital estate. In re Marriage of Popp & Martin, 235 M 372, 767 P2d 871, 46 St. Rep. 64 (1989).

Discount for Minority Stock Interest Proper: The District Court discounted the value of stock by 25% to take into account a couple's status as minority stockholders. Whether a discount is proper depends on the facts of the case, not on the method used to ascertain the value of the stock. A discount for a minority interest is appropriate when the minority shareholder has no ability to control salaries, dividends, profit distributions, and day-to-day corporate operations. In re Marriage of Milesnick, 235 M 88, 765 P2d 751, 45 St. Rep. 2182 (1988), followed in McCann Ranch, Inc. v. Quigley-McCann, 276 M 205, 915 P2d 239, 53 St. Rep. 349 (1996).

Value of Business Partnership — Retention of Income-Producing Potential: Husband testified that the value of a trucking partnership was $2,000—the value of a P.S.C. permit—because the only other business asset, a livestock truck, had been destroyed. However, the District Court did not err in assessing the value of the partnership at $10,000 after examining the partnership tax returns and potential leasing value of the permit. Because the partnership retained income-producing potential, it was reasonable for the court to assume a higher value than that attributed to it by the husband. In re Marriage of Milesnick, 235 M 88, 765 P2d 751, 45 St. Rep. 2182 (1988).

Error in Accepting Outdated Property Appraisal: In establishing the value of motel property for purposes of marital distribution, the District Court relied on a 1982 tax appraisal, rather than current appraisal testimony and market conditions, resulting in a difference of nearly $89,000. It was an abuse of discretion warranting remand for the court to accept an outdated appraisal. In re Marriage of Butler, 232 M 419, 756 P2d 1159, 45 St. Rep. 1160 (1988).

Valuation of Beef Reversed: Husband was required to deliver one free beef a year to wife as part of a property settlement. Upon failing to do so, the District Court found him indebted in an amount representing the reasonable value, plus interest, of one cut, wrapped, frozen, and delivered beef each year for 5 years. The court then used figures that purported to represent the cost of beef on the hoof to husband, not the value of butchered meat to the wife. Because the valuation appeared to charge wife for cutting and wrapping, the case was remanded for recalculation. In re Marriage of Kramer, 229 M 476, 747 P2d 865, 44 St. Rep. 2148 (1987).

Evidence of Partnership Value Not Clearly Erroneous: Husband's valuation of his business partnership was not credible and wife did not offer a specific valuation for it. The court heard and considered extensive evidence on this issue and accepted wife's valuation. Although the court did not have the best possible evidence to value the partnership, its determination will stand as it is not clearly erroneous. In re Marriage of Roullier, 229 M 348, 746 P2d 1081, 44 St. Rep. 2035 (1987).

Dispute Over Value of Home — Sale Warranted: Where the parties presented differing appraisal values for the family home and were not able to agree on a value, it was not error to order the home sold and proceeds divided as wife was entitled to an equitable share of this marital asset. In re Marriage of Rogers, 226 M 163, 734 P2d 677, 44 St. Rep. 556 (1987), followed in In re Marriage of McLean/Fleury, 257 M 371, 849 P2d 194, 50 St. Rep. 35 (1993).

No Abuse of Discretion in Using Separate Dates of Valuation: The District Court valued husband's estate as of date of separation and wife's estate as of date of dissolution. The Supreme Court rejected husband's allegation of error, noting that, pursuant to 40-4-202, the District Court relied on husband's dissipation of funds in reaching its conclusion that separate valuation dates were necessary to equitably apportion the parties' marital estate. In re Marriage of Hurley, 222 M 287, 721 P2d 1279, 43 St. Rep. 1271 (1986).

Conflicting Valuation Evidence — Court Must Indicate Basis for Choice: The wife presented testimony from a real estate broker about the value of rental property. The husband offered only his opinion of the value. The court accepted the husband's value without offering an explanation. When conflicting valuation evidence is presented the court must indicate the basis for its determination. In this case, the court abused its discretion by its failure to offer an explanation of why it chose the husband's valuation. In re Marriage of Rolfe, 216 M 39, 699 P2d 79, 42 St. Rep. 623 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Bell, 220 M 123, 713 P2d 552, 43 St. Rep. 226 (1986).

Husband's Minority Corporation Stock — Not Discounted: This case is not like the federal cases cited by husband that have discounted minority stock values for estate tax purposes nor this court's approval of discounting minority stock in In re Marriage of Jorgensen, 180 M 294, 590 P2d 606 (1979). This is not a situation where minority stock should be discounted to determine its value. Discounting usually will apply when the market value of the stock is being estimated and there really is no market on which to rely. In this case, the value of the corporation was arrived at by the market value of the underlying assets. It would be inconsistent to discount the minority share of the value of the corporate assets in this case. In re Marriage of Buxbaum, 214 M 1, 692 P2d 411, 41 St. Rep. 2243 (1984), followed in In re Marriage of Taylor, 257 M 122, 848 P2d 478, 50 St. Rep. 186 (1993). However, see In re Marriage of Hanni, 2000 MT 59, 299 M 20, 997 P2d 760, 57 St. Rep. 279 (2000), in which the wife claimed that the District Court imposed an improper de facto stock discount on the shares of the husband's corporation and the Supreme Court affirmed, citing In re Marriage of Taylor, and held that because the District Court assigned a stock value within the range presented into evidence at trial, the valuation would not be disturbed.

Life Estate Valuation Substantially Different From Expert's — No Reasons Given: It was error for the District Court to fail to give reasons why it assigned a specific value to a life estate when that value was substantially greater than an expert witness had set. In re Marriage of Summerfelt, 212 M 332, 688 P2d 8, 41 St. Rep. 1775 (1984).

Value of Contract for Deed — Present Value Used, Not Unpaid Principal: A major asset of the marriage was a contract for deed for a ranch sold to children of the wife. The contract had an unpaid principal in the amount of $100,000, with interest payable annually and principal to be retired as the buyers were able to do so. The present-day value of a contract for deed rarely if ever equals the amount of the unpaid balance due on it; thus, in apportioning marital assets, the District Court abused its discretion when it accepted the principal amount due on the contract as a marital asset rather than its present-day value. In re Marriage of Summerfelt, 212 M 332, 688 P2d 8, 41 St. Rep. 1775 (1984), distinguished in In re Marriage of Scott, 246 M 10, 803 P2d 620, 47 St. Rep. 2237 (1990).

Duty of Court to Resolve Conflicts in Valuation of Personal Property — Method of Valuation: Where the appellant, husband in a divorce proceeding, argued on appeal that the District Court overvalued certain assets awarded to him, relying on an unsupported and allegedly biased estimation of values submitted by the respondent, the Supreme Court found that the record did not show a clear preponderance of evidence against those valuations. The record showed that the respondent relied upon valuations provided by other persons she showed the property to or discussed it with, and upon such testimony the District Court properly resolved the conflicting valuations of the property. Parenteau v. Parenteau, 204 M 239, 664 P2d 900, 40 St. Rep. 815 (1983). See also In re Marriage of Glass, 215 M 248, 697 P2d 96, 42 St. Rep. 328 (1985), cited in In re Marriage of Taylor, 257 M 122, 848 P2d 478, 50 St. Rep. 186 (1993).

Spouse's Mineral Interest — Value Dispute — Necessity of Findings: Since the value of mineral interests and whether they should have been valued were disputed by the parties, the trial court should have valued the interests as of the date of the dissolution of the marriage and was ordered to do so and to include the value in the parties' net worth. In re Marriage of Beck, 203 M 455, 661 P2d 1282, 40 St. Rep. 565 (1983).

Stock of Closely Held Corporation — Computation of Value: On second appeal from property disposition, wife claimed that during pendency of first appeal from the disposition husband sold his interest in closely held corporation for less than the fair market value. He sold it for $7,000. Wife claimed that less than 1 year later the corporation sold most of its property for an amount that would have brought husband $23,000 for his share in the corporation had he not sold his stock. The postdissolution sale was not relevant to the inquiry; the court was concerned only with the stock's value as of the date of dissolution of the marriage. Furthermore, although the value of the assets owned by a closely held corporation may be a factor in determining the stock's value, there are other factors. However, it was error for the lower court to omit any reference to the stock in the second property distribution, and court was ordered to make a finding as to the stock's value. In re Marriage of Beck, 203 M 455, 661 P2d 1282, 40 St. Rep. 565 (1983), followed in In re Marriage of Westland, 257 M 169, 848 P2d 492, 50 St. Rep. 216 (1993). Westland was distinguished in In re Marriage of Martin, 265 M 95, 874 P2d 1219, 51 St. Rep. 443 (1994).

Valuation of Tillable Land: Finding of court distributing property pursuant to a divorce that tillable land was worth $650 an acre was supported by record which showed that two local landowners testified to recent sales of similar land for more than $700 an acre, the wife testified she believed the land to be worth $700 an acre, and two appraisers valued the land at $600 and $625 an acre, with one of them stating that the range was from $621 to $743 an acre. In re Marriage of Goodmundson, 201 M 535, 655 P2d 509, 39 St. Rep. 2295 (1982).

Valuation of Closely Held Stock: The court established a value for stock in a closely held corporation by dividing the value of total assets less liabilities by the number of issued shares and arrived at a value of $1,009.72 per share. The court considered the book value of $158.37 per share as unrealistically low. The court also considered husband's estimate of $500 per share. The Supreme Court upheld the decision of the trial court, stating that the trial court did not act arbitrarily and that the method employed did not exceed the bounds of reason. In re Marriage of Burleigh, 200 M 1, 650 P2d 753, 39 St. Rep. 1538 (1982).

Hearsay Testimony as to Value of Animals: In a hearing to apportion marital assets, the wife testified as to the value of purebred dogs based on her experience as a kennel operator and on a letter from a person knowledgeable about such matters. The wife also testified as to the value of house plans, based on conversations with individuals in the construction business. It was not error to admit this testimony because: (1) pricing information received in part from others is not objectionable; (2) owners may testify as to the value of their animals; and (3) the testimony did not substantially affect the husband's rights. In re Marriage of Converse, 198 M 227, 645 P2d 413, 39 St. Rep. 887 (1982).

Property Disposition — Expert Testimony on Valuation: The District Court in a dissolution of marriage proceeding made a substantially equitable property disposition. The husband contended that the trial court erred in determining the per-acre value of the couple's ranch. Conflicting testimony was presented. The husband's expert presented a much higher figure based upon the possibility of subdividing the land. The District Court, as the trier of fact in the trial without a jury, accepted the valuation of the wife's expert. This is not reversible error. The trier of fact has the discretion to give whatever weight he sees fit to the testimony of an expert. Dickerson v. Dickerson, 188 M 492, 614 P2d 521 (1980), followed in In re Marriage of McCormack, 223 M 410, 726 P2d 319, 43 St. Rep. 1833 (1986).

Valuation of Stock: The trial court did not err in valuating certain stock held by the husband when it considered restrictive agreement between stockholders and discounted the value because of a minority interest. In re Marriage of Jorgensen, 180 M 294, 590 P2d 606 (1979), followed in In re Marriage of Davies, 266 M 466, 880 P2d 1368, 51 St. Rep. 929 (1994).

Conflicting Testimony: Where there was conflicting testimony as to valuation of household goods and unimproved lots, divorce court acted properly in resolving such conflicts by giving household goods to wife and lots to husband. Eschenburg v. Eschenburg, 171 M 247, 557 P2d 1014 (1976).

Future Acquisitions

Value of Expected Inheritance Not to Be Included in Marital Estate: A will is a revocable instrument that does not take effect until the death of its maker, so the potential recipient of an estate cannot know the extent of an interest in an estate prior to that time. Thus, the value of an expected inheritance is contingent, unascertainable, and may not be included in a marital estate. In re Marriage of Beadle, 1998 MT 225, 291 M 1, 968 P2d 698, 55 St. Rep. 943 (1998), overruling In re Marriage of Goodmundson, 201 M 535, 655 P2d 509 (1982).

Contingent Remainder in Trust Property — Intent of Testator Controlling: Alan's father died leaving a will establishing a trust for Alan's mother and leaving the corpus of the trust to Alan, his brother, and his sister. A clause in the will provided that no title in the trust would vest in any beneficiary until actual distribution of the trust property. When Alan's marriage was dissolved, his wife claimed that the District Court erred in excluding the trust from the marital estate. The Supreme Court held that Alan's interest could be classified as a vested remainder subject to divestment, but that the intent of the testator was controlling. The Supreme Court held that because Alan's father had included the spendthrift provision preventing vesting until distribution, the District Court was correct in excluding Alan's interest in the trust from the marital estate. In re Marriage of Meeks, 276 M 237, 915 P2d 831, 53 St. Rep. 365 (1996), followed in In re Marriage of Foreman, 1999 MT 89, 294 M 181, 979 P2d 193, 56 St. Rep. 373 (1999). See also In re Marriage of Beadle, 1998 MT 225, 291 M 1, 968 P2d 698, 55 St. Rep. 943 (1998).

No Vested Interest in Future Inheritance: Husband was the contingent remainderman in the inheritance of premarital property. Wife contended that it was error for the District Court to exclude the future inheritance as a marital asset when dividing the marital estate. Although a court must generally consider future acquisition of assets, in this case, husband did not have a vested interest in the inheritance and would not have an interest unless he survived his mother. Therefore, exclusion of the future inheritance as a marital asset was not error. In re Marriage of Weed, 254 M 162, 836 P2d 591, 49 St. Rep. 681 (1992).

Inclusion in Marital Estate of Husband's Remainder Interest in Father's Testamentary Trust — Value: The husband's remainder interest in his father's testamentary trust estate was properly included in the marital estate even though as a vested future interest it is subject to defeasance. The trial court did not err in assigning a current value to the remainder interest despite husband's contention that a more accurate value would be the discounted present value. The current value of the remainder interest is being used as collateral by the husband in arranging for corporate loans. The court realistically looked at the circumstances and used a proper value based on the underlying assets of the trust. In re Marriage of Buxbaum, 214 M 1, 692 P2d 411, 41 St. Rep. 2243 (1984).

Possible Future Mineral Royalties Increase — Not in Marital Estate: To the extent that an increase in mineral royalties due a party to a divorce is a mere possibility following dissolution of the marriage, they should not be valued and made part of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Beck, 203 M 455, 661 P2d 1282, 40 St. Rep. 565 (1983).

Expectation of Inheritance Properly Considered: Since a court distributing marital property upon a divorce must consider future acquisition of assets, husband's expectation of a sizeable inheritance is a valid consideration in the distribution. In re Marriage of Goodmundson, 201 M 535, 655 P2d 509, 39 St. Rep. 2295 (1982), followed in In re Marriage of Alt, 218 M 327, 708 P2d 258, 42 St. Rep. 1621 (1985), and overruled, to the extent that the value of an expected inheritance may be included in the marital estate, in In re Marriage of Beadle, 1998 MT 225, 291 M 1, 968 P2d 698, 55 St. Rep. 943 (1998).

Inherited Vested Future Remainder Interest — Included in Marital Estate: Husband in divorce proceeding had a vested remainder interest, received from his deceased father, in one-fourth of half of his parents' ranch, subject to a life estate granted his mother. Since husband's vested interest could be sold or otherwise alienated, transferred, or mortgaged by him, it had a present value and should be included in the marital estate for property distribution purposes. It was error for the District Court to fail to include it. Hill v. Hill, 197 M 451, 643 P2d 582, 39 St. Rep. 723 (1982), followed in In re Marriage of Foreman, 1999 MT 89, 294 M 181, 979 P2d 193, 56 St. Rep. 373 (1999).

Gifts

Gift to Minor Child Properly Placed in Joint Trust Account: Husband's mother gifted the parties' child with $20,000 in the form of a check, naming father as custodian of the account. The District Court did not err in directing that the account be established with both father and mother as custodian, given the fact that there was joint custody of the child. In re Marriage of Smith, 264 M 306, 871 P2d 884, 51 St. Rep. 277 (1994).

Equity in Family Home Based on Gift: The District Court properly set aside equity in the family home in an amount of $60,000 to the husband upon a showing that the home was purchased with funds borrowed from the husband's parents and that each year for 3 years the parents gave the husband $20,000 in gift money accompanied by a letter noting that $20,000 of his debt had been relieved. In re Marriage of Eklund, 236 M 77, 768 P2d 340, 46 St. Rep. 194 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Stufft, 286 M 239, 950 P2d 1373, 54 St. Rep. 1391 (1997).

Ranch Stock Gifted to Spouse From Parent — Not in Estate: The trial court properly exercised its discretion in not including in the marital estate to be divided upon divorce gifts of ranch stock to husband from his parents. Snell v. Snell, 205 M 359, 668 P2d 238, 40 St. Rep. 1359 (1983).

Premarriage Property and Gifts — Includable — Test: Property acquired before marriage and property acquired by gift may be considered as part of the marital assets when making an apportionment of property upon a divorce, but only after the court considers the contributions of the spouse who did not acquire such property. If those contributions, including the contributions of a homemaker, have facilitated maintenance of the property, the court in its discretion may include the property in the marital estate and divide it. In re Marriage of Lewis, 198 M 51, 643 P2d 604, 39 St. Rep. 759 (1982).

Property Obtained Before Marriage or After Separation

Failure to Deduct Mortgage Debt in Granting Wife Premarital Value of Home She Owned on Marriage Date: The lower court wrongly determined that the value of a home that the wife owned on the marriage date was $15,000 and that upon divorce, the wife should be given the first $15,000 of value in the home after payment of the debt on it because on the date of marriage, there was a $10,000 mortgage on the home. The proper equity to give the wife was $5,000. In re Marriage of Hogstad, 275 M 489, 914 P2d 584, 53 St. Rep. 257 (1996).

Parties' Permanent Separation Prior to Vesting of Inheritance — Improper Inclusion in Marital Estate: When parties had permanently separated prior to vesting of husband's inheritance, it was improper for the District Court to include the inheritance in the marital estate and award wife $500,000 in cash from the inheritance. The fact that an acquiring spouse may receive an inheritance after separation but prior to dissolution does not, of itself, justify inclusion of the inheritance in the marital estate. What is key is that the District Court apply the factors in this section before including inheritance property in the marital estate. A court cannot distribute to the nonacquiring spouse property acquired prior to the marriage or by gift, bequest, devise, or descent when there is no evidence that the spouse made any contribution to those assets in any form. In re Marriage of Smith, 264 M 306, 871 P2d 884, 51 St. Rep. 277 (1994), overruling a contrary holding in In re Marriage of Isaak, 257 M 176, 848 P2d 1014 (1993).

Inclusion of Commingled Premarital Property in Marital Estate: The District Court included the value of certain premarital property in the marital estate when there had been no attempt during the marriage to segregate either the property or the funds from the sale of the property. The property was commingled with and became part of the marital estate and was properly included as such at trial. In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 833 P2d 215, 49 St. Rep. 597 (1992).

Baseball Card Split Gums Up Dissolution — Inclusion of Baseball Card Collection as Part of Marital Estate — Credit for Value of Cards Brought Into Marriage: It was proper to include a baseball card collection in the marital estate because both parties contributed to the growth and maintenance of the collection, but it was erroneous to fail to credit husband with the undisputed value of the cards that he brought into the marriage. In re Marriage of Keedy, 249 M 47, 813 P2d 442, 48 St. Rep. 572 (1991).

One Party Not Responsible for Investment Decisions of Other Party After Separation: After the parties had separated but before the divorce, the husband disposed of some assets and encumbered others. The assets had been given to him in a partial property division agreement. He argued that the encumbrances on the assets should be considered by the court in valuing and dividing the parties' marital estate. The Supreme Court ruled that a party should not be held responsible for the investment decisions of the other once they were separated and that therefore the subsequent encumbrance of the husband's assets should not have been considered. In re Marriage of Gebhardt, 240 M 165, 783 P2d 400, 46 St. Rep. 2026 (1989).

Party Claiming Separate Property From Prior to Marriage Must Present Evidence of Value and Traceability: The trial court set aside a large portion of a married couple's property as the husband's separate property on the basis that it had been owned by the husband prior to the marriage and it could be traced to present property owned by the couple. The Supreme Court reversed the decision, ruling that the judge had abused his discretion because no evidence had been presented on the value of the property owned by the husband prior to marriage and no evidence respecting the property's traceability had been introduced. In re Marriage of Miller, 238 M 197, 777 P2d 319, 46 St. Rep. 1199 (1989). See also In re Marriage of Binsfield, 269 M 336, 888 P2d 889, 52 St. Rep. 16 (1995).

Marriage Not Irretrievably Broken — No Valuation at Time of Separation: Wife contended that under In re Marriage of Wagner, 208 M 369, 679 P2d 753, 41 St. Rep. 409 (1984), the District Court should have valued the marital property as of the time of separation. The Supreme Court distinguished Wagner after finding that the parties lived together and shared expenses until the wife filed a petition for dissolution. Because the evidence preponderated against a finding that the marriage was irretrievably broken at the time of separation, the Wagner rule did not apply. In re Marriage of Dalley, 232 M 235, 756 P2d 1131, 45 St. Rep. 1017 (1988).

Growth on Premarital Portion of Stocks and Appreciation on Premarital Portion of Real Estate: Appellant husband contended that the court erred in not figuring growth on premarital portion of stocks and appreciation on premarital portion of real estate as accruing to him since wife did not contribute to this growth. Appellant contended that the court erred in the property distribution in finding that wife's nonmonetary contribution offset any growth not due to her efforts, particularly where the court made no finding on alimony. The Supreme Court found no abuse of discretion. An equitable distribution does not mean an "equal" distribution of the marital estate. The court exercised conscientious reasonable judgment, given the individual circumstances, in dividing the marital estate. In re Marriage of Shelton, 219 M 456, 712 P2d 782, 43 St. Rep. 89 (1986).

Inclusion in Marital Estate of Husband's Earnings After Separation — Not Abuse of Discretion: The court distinguished Wagner v. Wagner, 208 M 369, 679 P2d 753 (1984), from the present case and held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion by including husband's earnings after separation since, unlike the facts in Wagner, the Loegerings did not embark upon totally divergent financial courses at the time of separation. Additionally, the parties in this case did not negotiate any settlement agreement at separation as in Tureman v. Tureman, 190 M 267, 620 P2d 1200 (1980). Any determination of the marital assets at the time of separation would clearly have been inequitable. In re Marriage of Loegering, 212 M 499, 689 P2d 260, 41 St. Rep. 1892 (1984).

Financial Condition of Parties at Time of Marriage — Major Factor in Property Division: When the record indicated that the wife brought $425,618 into the marriage at its outset and the husband brought in $12,355, the award by the District Court was inadequate and an abuse of discretion. The Supreme Court held that the source of marital property is a major factor to be considered in dividing the property. In re Marriage of Summerfelt, 212 M 332, 688 P2d 8, 41 St. Rep. 1775 (1984).

Land Bought Before Marriage — Deed Recorded After Marriage: Husband in divorce proceeding claimed all of the purchase price of a parcel of land should have been declared premarital property, stating that he thought his father had purchased the land prior to the marriage. The deed was not recorded until after the marriage. The court thus reasonably concluded that only the downpayment on the land was premarital property. In re Marriage of Goodmundson, 201 M 535, 655 P2d 509, 39 St. Rep. 2295 (1982).

Contribution of Wife as Homemaker — Effect on Husband's Prior Acquired Property: Ten percent of the purchase price of property owned by the husband remained to be paid when the parties were married. The balance was paid off during the marriage with jointly acquired funds, the property later being sold. In a property settlement proceeding, the trial court included in the marital estate only 10% of the balance owing on the property sale. Because the nonmonetary contributions of the wife as a homemaker facilitated the maintenance of the husband's prior acquired property, the trial court erred in its valuation of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Larson, 200 M 134, 649 P2d 1351, 39 St. Rep. 1628 (1982), distinguished in In re Marriage of Harper, 1999 MT 321, 297 M 290, 994 P2d 1, 56 St. Rep. 1280 (1999), also distinguishing In re Marriage of Taylor, 257 M 122, 848 P2d 478, 50 St. Rep. 186 (1993), and following In re Marriage of Engen, 1998 MT 153, 289 M 299, 961 P2d 738, 55 St. Rep. 595 (1998).

Premarriage Property and Gifts — Includable — Test: Property acquired before marriage and property acquired by gift may be considered as part of the marital assets when making an apportionment of property upon a divorce, but only after the court considers the contributions of the spouse who did not acquire such property. If those contributions, including the contributions of a homemaker, have facilitated maintenance of the property, the court in its discretion may include the property in the marital estate and divide it. In re Marriage of Lewis, 198 M 51, 643 P2d 604, 39 St. Rep. 759 (1982).

Inheritance

Inheritance Advance Properly Excluded in Equity From Marital Estate: As an estate planning device, a couple was able to purchase a home from the husband's mother valued at $131,000 for $50,000, representing an advance on the husband's inheritance of $81,000. In distributing the marital estate, the District Court subtracted the husband's inheritance advance, as well as the remaining debts on the residence, from the appraised value of the home and then divided the equity in the home and the marital debt equally, except for a credit to the husband for one-half the debts that he paid after separation. The wife claimed error in excluding the $81,000, arguing that the property was comingled with the marital property, that her contributions to the property were significant, and that the gift was to the two of them as a couple, not to the husband alone. Affirming, the Supreme Court found that the division of marital equity in the home was logical and that the husband was entitled to an exclusion from the marital estate in the amount that represented an advance on his inheritance, which was the $81,000 difference between the amount that the couple purchased the home for and the value of the home at the time of purchase. Because of the wife's significant contributions to the value of the home, she was entitled to one-half of any equity in the house that represented the amount paid for the house during the marriage, in addition to the appreciation that occurred during the marriage, but she was not entitled to the equity in the house that represented a gift from the husband's mother. Siefke v. Siefke, 2000 MT 281, 302 M 157, 13 P3d 937, 57 St. Rep. 1175 (2000).

Value of Expected Inheritance Not to Be Included in Marital Estate: A will is a revocable instrument that does not take effect until the death of its maker, so the potential recipient of an estate cannot know the extent of an interest in an estate prior to that time. Thus, the value of an expected inheritance is contingent, unascertainable, and may not be included in a marital estate. In re Marriage of Beadle, 1998 MT 225, 291 M 1, 968 P2d 698, 55 St. Rep. 943 (1998), overruling In re Marriage of Goodmundson, 201 M 535, 655 P2d 509 (1982).

Inability to Verify Claims as to Disposition of Inheritance Income: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to include wife's inherited funds in the marital estate given the fact that no proof was given to document wife's representations and that the court was unable to verify her claims as to the disposition of her inheritance. In re Marriage of Lee, 282 M 410, 938 P2d 650, 54 St. Rep. 409 (1997).

Commingling — Equal Division of Inherited Stocks: Clarence and Marcia were divorced a second time after having been remarried. Clarence allegedly received a substantial inheritance of stocks during the period of time in which he and Marcia were first divorced. Money from the sale of the stocks was commingled with other funds belonging to Clarence. Upon their second divorce, Clarence argued that Marcia should not receive any of the funds from the stocks. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion, in as much as the District Court found it was impossible to trace any of the funds to an inheritance because Clarence had so extensively commingled his assets. In re Marriage of Kimm, 260 M 479, 861 P2d 165, 50 St. Rep. 1146 (1993).

Transfer of Property Without Written Document Constituting Inheritance — Included in Marital Estate: Husband appealed from a District Court decision that distributed as part of the marital estate to the wife a home built for the couple by the husband's father, who had died without executing a written document transferring the property to the couple. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's decision, holding that without a writing signed by the father to effect the inter vivos transfer to the couple, the home was inherited by the husband through the father's will. The inherited property was properly included as part of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Isaak, 257 M 176, 848 P2d 1014, 50 St. Rep. 219 (1993), overruled, with regard to a District Court's ability to distribute inheritance property without strict application of the factors in this section, in In re Marriage of Smith, 264 M 306, 871 P2d 884, 51 St. Rep. 277 (1994).

Valuation of Equity in Home Partially Purchased With Husband's Inheritance: In valuing the parties' home, the court should have taken into account the extent to which the equity in the home was attributable to an inheritance of the husband. However, the court is only required to consider that. No definite rule can be established as to the result of the consideration, and each case must be decided on its own facts. In re Marriage of Dirnberger, 237 M 398, 773 P2d 330, 46 St. Rep. 898 (1989).

Husband's Inheritance Subject to Division by Court: In a dissolution proceeding, the husband argued that certain real property and securities he had inherited prior to the divorce were his separate property and were not subject to division because his wife had not participated in the enhancement of the securities and had not contributed to the maintenance of the real property. The Supreme Court upheld the lower court's division of the property, holding that the statute allowed a court to consider the nonmonetary contributions of the noninheriting spouse when dividing inherited property. In re Marriage of Stephenson, 237 M 157, 772 P2d 846, 46 St. Rep. 700 (1989).

No Division of Noncommingled Inheritance When Sole Control Maintained: Wife received a $110,000 inheritance on the eve of dissolution but did not disclose the amount to husband. She invested the inheritance separately and maintained sole control over the funds. The court assessed the inheritance within the context of assets acquired during the marriage and properly distributed the inheritance to the wife. In re Marriage of Stewart, 232 M 40, 757 P2d 765, 45 St. Rep. 850 (1988).

Expectation of Inheritance Properly Considered: Since a court distributing marital property upon a divorce must consider future acquisition of assets, husband's expectation of a sizeable inheritance is a valid consideration in the distribution. In re Marriage of Goodmundson, 201 M 535, 655 P2d 509, 39 St. Rep. 2295 (1982), followed in In re Marriage of Alt, 218 M 327, 708 P2d 258, 42 St. Rep. 1621 (1985), and overruled, to the extent that the value of an expected inheritance may be included in the marital estate, in In re Marriage of Beadle, 1998 MT 225, 291 M 1, 968 P2d 698, 55 St. Rep. 943 (1998).

Wife's Inheritance Spent for Family Purposes: Court distributing property pursuant to divorce properly failed to consider wife's inheritance when she had spent the whole of it on autos for herself and her daughter, carpet for the home, and a fence. In re Marriage of Goodmundson, 201 M 535, 655 P2d 509, 39 St. Rep. 2295 (1982).

Inherited Vested Future Remainder Interest — Included in Marital Estate: Husband in divorce proceeding had a vested remainder interest, received from his deceased father, in one-fourth of half of his parents' ranch, subject to a life estate granted his mother. Since husband's vested interest could be sold or otherwise alienated, transferred, or mortgaged by him, it had a present value and should be included in the marital estate for property distribution purposes. It was error for the District Court to fail to include it. Hill v. Hill, 197 M 451, 643 P2d 582, 39 St. Rep. 723 (1982).

Wife's Inheritance to Be Considered: The District Court complied with this section by considering the inheritance of the wife in making the property division. Kaasa v. Kaasa, 181 M 18, 591 P2d 1110 (1979).

Retirement Benefits

Veteran Disability Benefits Federally Protected From Inclusion in Marital Estate — Disability Benefits Considered in Award of Spousal or Child Support as Party's Ability to Earn Income: The District Court included a portion of the husband's Veterans Benefits Association (VA) disability benefits as part of the division of marital property. The Supreme Court held that under the antiattachment clause of 38 U.S.C. 5301, VA disability benefits are federally protected from inclusion in the marital estate. In enacting that section and the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act, 10 U.S.C. 1408, Congress preempted state courts from including VA disability benefits in the marital estate because VA disability benefits are not considered "disposable retired pay" to be treated as marital property. An award of VA disability benefits upon dissolution amounts to a seizure of those benefits in violation of 38 U.S.C. 5301. To avoid damaging federal objectives, the property division dictates of this section must yield to the federal law. Consistent with both federal and state law, a District Court may consider VA disability benefits in the same way that it considers each party's ability to earn income after dissolution as an important factor in achieving an equitable property division, including consideration of the military disability retirement pay as a source of income in the award of spousal maintenance or child support, or generally as an economic circumstance of the parties justifying a disproportionate award of marital property to the nonretiree spouse. Thus, disability payments should not, either in form or substance, be treated as marital property subject to division upon dissolution. However, under Rose v. Rose, 481 US 619 (1987), a state court is free to consider postdissolution disability income and to order a disabled veteran to pay spousal support even when disability benefits would be used to make support payments. In re Marriage of Strong, 2000 MT 178, 300 M 331, 8 P3d 763, 57 St. Rep. 709 (2000), following Mansell v. Mansell, 490 US 581 (1989), and In re Marriage of Murphy, 261 M 363, 862 P2d 1143 (1993). See also McCarty v. McCarty, 453 US 210 (1981).

Provision for Equal Distribution of Retirement Benefits Not Ambiguous — Payable on Value of Benefits at Retirement, Not at Time of Property Settlement: A provision in the parties' settlement agreement granted the wife 50% of the husband's retirement benefits when he retired. The husband claimed that the provision was ambiguous because it was not clear whether the benefits should be valued as of the time he retired or when the agreement was settled. The Supreme Court found no ambiguity. The proceeds of the retirement benefits were to be split when the husband retired, including any accumulated value to the retirement fund, which was viewed as the husband's continuing contributions to the marital estate correlative to the wife's continuing contributions through her payment of the mortgage on the family home until it was sold at a future date and the proceeds also split equally. In re Marriage of Pfennigs, 1999 MT 250, 296 M 242, 989 P2d 327, 56 St. Rep. 981 (1999).

No Abuse of Discretion Found in Refusal to Amend Award of Personal Property — Findings and Conclusions, Decree, and Minute Order Held Consistent — Award Based Upon Stipulation of Current Cash Value of IRA Accounts Upheld: Soon after a decree was issued dissolving her marriage, Janet moved, pursuant to Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to amend the judgment because it concerned the distribution of the parties' personal property. Janet claimed that the District Court should have awarded her the personal property listed on Exhibit "A" to her proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law. The District Court denied her motion. Janet argued before the Supreme Court that the decree of dissolution did not conform to the District Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law in that the District Court intended to award her the property listed on Exhibit "A" to her proposed findings and conclusions but that the property awarded was taken from a different exhibit and paragraph of her amended proposed findings and conclusions. The Supreme Court held that the District Court's distribution of the parties' property was clear and definite. The Supreme Court noted that the District Court had made a minute entry 10 days before Janet filed her motion to amend and that the minute order stated that certain items from Janet's Exhibit "A" were to be returned to her. The Supreme Court concluded that by using this language in the minute order, the District Court intended that certain items of Janet's property listed in her exhibit were to be returned to her and that the remainder was to remain with her ex-husband. In all material respects, the Supreme Court said, the findings and conclusions, decree, and minute order all conform with one another, and therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to amend. The Supreme Court also upheld the District Court's division of the parties' two IRA accounts, noting that the parties arrived at the value by adding the two together for a total of $64,445 and then subtracting 30% for taxes and a 10% penalty, leaving a net redemption value of $38,666, and then dividing that remainder in half. The District Court gave Janet's ex-husband the option of transferring ownership of one-half of the IRAs to Janet or paying Janet $19,333, one-half the net value of those accounts. The Supreme Court held that because Janet had stipulated to the present cash value of the IRAs, if her ex-husband chose to pay her one-half the current cash value of the accounts, she is receiving an equitable distribution. In re Marriage of Dorsey, 284 M 392, 945 P2d 430, 54 St. Rep. 934 (1997).

Accrued Vacation and Sick Leave Included in Valuation of Pension — Adjustment of "Rolfe" Formula: In 22 years at his job, Alan accrued over 1,900 hours of sick leave and vacation, which would extend his years of service upon his retirement. When Alan's marriage was dissolved, the District Court refused to include the value of those hours in the marital estate. Relying upon In re Marriage of Rolfe, 234 M 294, 766 P2d 223 (1988), the Supreme Court held that Alan's pension would be divided according to the "time rule formula" and that the accrued hours of sick leave and vacation would be added to the value of the pension and would not be valued separately. The Supreme Court also noted that the accrued hours should be added to both parts of the fraction used in the time rule formula, otherwise the fraction of the pension to be received by Alan's wife would be reduced. In re Marriage of Meeks, 276 M 237, 915 P2d 831, 53 St. Rep. 365 (1996).

Veteran's Disability Benefits Not to Be Included in Total of Marital Estate: The Supreme Court held that the District Court, relying on the U.S. Supreme Court's interpretation of the federal Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act in Mansell v. Mansell, 490 US 581 (1989), had properly excluded the husband's veteran's disability pay in calculating the total of the marital estate. In holding that Montana state courts may not include in a marital estate military retirement pay that has been waived in order to receive veteran's disability benefits, the state Supreme Court stated that it was partially overruling In re Marriage of Cooper, 243 M 175, 793 P2d 810 (1990). The state Supreme Court also indicated that the disability benefits could be considered when the lower courts were considering the potential future earning power of the parties in a dissolution action. In re Marriage of Murphy, 261 M 363, 862 P2d 1143, 50 St. Rep. 1360 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Strong, 2000 MT 178, 300 M 331, 8 P3d 763, 57 St. Rep. 709 (2000). However, see In re Marriage of Blair, 271 M 196, 894 P2d 958, 52 St. Rep. 401 (1995)(special separation payments received by military member are subject to division as marital property).

Failure to Consider Future Risks Relative to Retirement Benefits — Abuse of Discretion: The test for determining the value of a retirement pension is present value; however, when there are substantial future risks involved in the calculation of the value, both parties should share in those risks. By requiring immediate payment of wife's total one-half interest based on the present-value methodology, wife did not share in the risk that the present-value amount might never be realized. As alternatives, the Supreme Court offered the following methods of distribution of retirement fund assets: (1) if wife desires a present lump-sum distribution, it should be based on the accrued contributions, with interest allowed by law as of the date the dissolution action was brought before the trial court; or (2) if wife wishes to share in the risk of future contingencies, she is entitled to her proportionate share of the future benefits at the time husband actually receives the benefits. In re Marriage of Keedy, 249 M 47, 813 P2d 442, 48 St. Rep. 572 (1991).

Arbitrary Valuation of Pension Plan — Abuse of Discretion: Husband did not contest wife's expert's methodology in valuing his pension plan, but merely expressed his opinion that the mortality table used by the expert did not apply because the hazardous nature of his work and the fact that he was a smoker meant he would not live as long as the expert calculated. The District Court abused its discretion in arbitrarily adopting husband's estimate of his pension plan value absent the use of any calculation whatsoever. In re Marriage of Rudio & Harlan, 238 M 485, 778 P2d 410, 46 St. Rep. 1437 (1989).

Valuation of Retirement Benefits:

Retirement benefits, which are a part of the marital estate, contain numerous contingencies. Usually, categorical formulas for determining benefits cannot be used. Generally, benefits are determined at their present value. In this case, it was proper for the court to divide the husband's years of service during the marriage by years of total service and multiply the resulting figure by one-half the monthly benefit after taxes. The court properly rejected the husband's contention that the pension should be valued as of the date of dissolution of the marriage and the payment suspended until his retirement. In re Marriage of Rolfe, 234 M 294, 766 P2d 223, 45 St. Rep. 1919 (1988), followed in In re Marriage of Truax, 271 M 122, 894 P2d 936, 52 St. Rep. 347 (1995), wherein the time rule in Rolfe, based on contingencies that affected the value of a party's pension after the marriage, was held equally applicable when the trial court had no reliable evidence with which to evaluate the pension at the beginning of the parties' marriage. Rolfe was also followed in In re Marriage of Meeks, 276 M 237, 915 P2d 831, 53 St. Rep. 365 (1996).

In a dispute concerning valuation of retirement benefits as part of the marital estate, the wife argued that the only amount which should be included was the dollar amount in the pension fund at the time of the divorce. The Supreme Court, in Kis v. Kis, 196 M 296, 639 P2d 1151 (1982), held that the present value of the retirement benefits is the proper test. In this case, the testimony of an economics expert contained substantial evidence as to the present value of the pension interest and supported the District Court's valuation of the wife's pension. In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2065 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Pryor, 224 M 488, 731 P2d 895, 43 St. Rep. 2358 (1986).

Lower court's valuation of retirement benefits based on present value of equivalent annuity was proper, and fact that value used was contingent upon appellant reaching 55 years of age and serving 25 years did not render valuation void since appellant failed to offer evidence of the diminished present value of annuity because of such contingencies. Kis v. Kis, 196 M 296, 639 P2d 1151, 39 St. Rep. 119 (1982), distinguished in In re Marriage of Scott, 246 M 10, 803 P2d 620, 47 St. Rep. 2237 (1990).

Discrepancy in Pension Valuations — Affirmed Absent Injury: Despite a discrepancy between husband's schedule of pension values and values stated in his proposed findings, the court's valuation of the pensions was affirmed absent evidence of injury to the husband. In re Marriage of Sullivan, 229 M 23, 744 P2d 1240, 44 St. Rep. 1748 (1987).

Method of Payment of Retirement Benefits — Payment Plan Versus Lump Sum: The trial court ordered husband to pay wife $11,205 within 60 days as her share of husband's retirement account. Husband contended wife should receive her share only when he becomes eligible to receive his. The Supreme Court, noting that the uncontested asset list of the husband indicated no liquid assets that would enable him to make the lump-sum payment within 60 days, remanded with instructions to further examine husband's ability to pay the lump sum and to consider structuring a payment plan for the wife's interest in the retirement account. In re Marriage of Rogers, 226 M 163, 734 P2d 677, 44 St. Rep. 556 (1987).

Equal Marital Contribution but Unequal Pension Distribution: As part of the marital estate to which both parties have contributed equally, a retirement pension does not have to be distributed equally. The District Court has broad discretion to equitably apportion individual assets as long as the court considers the requirements of this section. In re Marriage of Bowman, 226 M 99, 734 P2d 197, 44 St. Rep. 488 (1987).

Retirement Funds — Tax Obligation: In placing a value on husband's retirement funds, the trial court did not err in refusing to consider husband's tax obligations on the funds as there was no evidence husband planned to liquidate those funds to pay his marital obligation. In re Marriage of Swanson, 220 M 490, 716 P2d 219, 43 St. Rep. 551 (1986).

Inclusion of Retirement Benefits in Marital Estate:

In distribution of marital property, it is well established in Montana that retirement benefits are classed as a part of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Rolfe, 216 M 39, 699 P2d 79, 42 St. Rep. 623 (1985). In the present case, the portion of the wife's teacher's retirement pension included by the District Court as a marital asset was the present value of the pension rights earned during the marriage. That value was established by the testimony of an economist. The wife failed to meet her burden of showing that such finding was clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly included the wife's retirement pension in the marital estate. In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2065 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Pryor, 224 M 488, 731 P2d 895, 43 St. Rep. 2358 (1986), and in In re Marriage of Butler, 243 M 521, 795 P2d 467, 47 St. Rep. 1376 (1990).

Where appellant contended Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks retirement benefits are not a marital asset based on statutory exemption in 19-8-805, court held that exemption did not extend to determinations of marital assets in dissolution proceedings and that such retirement benefits were a marital asset requiring apportionment. Kis v. Kis, 196 M 296, 639 P2d 1151, 39 St. Rep. 119 (1982), followed in In re Marriage of Bowman, 226 M 99, 734 P2d 197, 44 St. Rep. 488 (1987).

Valuation of Real Property and Retirement Benefits — Inconsistent Discount Rates: An economics expert used a 5.4% discount rate with regard to the present value of the wife's pension right based on a 30-year earnings average. He testified that at the time of the entry into the consideration of comparable sales in the area of the ranch, the sellers could have invested money safely at 12%, and that he considered that factor in adjusting the comparable sales. His testimony was not contradicted and was accepted by the District Court. On appeal, the wife contended that the court erred in adopting inconsistent discount rates for the ranch real property and her teacher's retirement pension. The Supreme Court held that the wife failed to present any evidence that the use of two different rates was in fact contradictory. There was no evidence to support a conclusion that a 12% rate could properly have been factored in the pension computation, nor was there any evidence that a 5.4% rate would have been appropriate so far as the land was concerned. The Supreme Court concluded that there was no demonstrable reason for the District Court to require any identity of the discount rates; therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the use of different discount rates. In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2065 (1985).

Valuation of Retirement Pension — Expert Testimony: The wife argued that the District Court improperly valued her retirement pension in determining the value of marital assets. The valuation was based on extensive testimony and evidence submitted by an economics professor, who testified as an expert for the husband. Unrebutted testimony indicated that the expert followed a standard procedure used in his profession for worklife and life expectancy estimates. The Supreme Court concluded that there was substantial evidence to support the expert's valuation, which was accepted by the District Court. In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2056 (1985).

Military Retirement Benefits: The Supreme Court held that military retirement benefit pay is analogous to any pension fund and constitutes a marital asset. Pursuant to 40-2-202, which requires apportionment of all property and assets of parties to a dissolution, military retirement pay must be included for purposes of establishing the marital estate. Although the marriage spanned only three-fourths of husband's military service, an equal division of the retirement benefits evidenced no abuse of discretion by the trial judge. Kecskes v. Kecskes, 210 M 479, 683 P2d 478, 41 St. Rep. 1170 (1984).

Profit-Sharing Retirement Plan to Be Included in Marital Estate: Where the evidence introduced during a dissolution proceeding showed that a profit-sharing retirement plan offered by a bank employing the wife was offered as an incentive for the wife to remain in the employ of the bank, the District Court erred in holding that the vested portion of the plan money was only incidental to the wife's employment and therefore not to be included in the marital estate. The evidence showed that the plan is in the form of deferred compensation and should be treated in the same manner as retirement benefits. The Supreme Court quoted with approval the guidelines set forth in Rogers v. Rogers, 45 Or. App. 885, 609 P2d 877 (1980), for determining whether retirement benefits should be included as part of the marital estate and found that in the present case, the husband was entitled to one-half of the vested portion (60%) of the profit-sharing plan funds. Glasser v. Glasser, 206 M 77, 669 P2d 685, 40 St. Rep. 1518 (1983), followed in In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2065 (1985), in the respect that the present value is the proper test for determination of a marital interest.

Retirement Benefits — Generally Includable Exclusions: Retirement benefits are generally part of the marital estate because the court, in apportioning the marital assets, must consider the opportunity of each party to acquire capital assets and income. Recent U.S. Supreme Court cases holding that pensions received from the armed forces or under the federal Railroad Retirement Act may not be included in the marital estate for property division purposes did not set up a classification discriminating against all other pensions in violation of the United States Constitution. Those cases merely construed federal statutes and discerned the intent of Congress in enacting those specific retirement plans. Laster v. Laster, 197 M 470, 643 P2d 597, 39 St. Rep. 737 (1982).

Valuation of Retirement Plan: The parties were married in 1953 and granted a dissolution in 1979. The major asset of the marital estate was the husband's retirement plan, which consisted of Conoco stock. The court used the market value of the retirement funds to arrive at the marital estate and awarded half to the wife. The husband contended that the trial court should have used the actual current value and considered the tax consequences of a liquidation in determining the marital estate. The Supreme Court found that the property distribution ordered included no presently taxable events and triggered no tax liability. The District Court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to consider the theoretical income tax consequences of a present liquidation of the stock, which was neither necessary nor probable, but merely conjectural. Gilbert v. Gilbert, 192 M 444, 628 P2d 1088, 38 St. Rep. 743 (1981).

Railroad Retirement Benefits Not Part of Marital Estate: Retirement benefits receivable under the federal Railroad Retirement Act, 45 U.S.C.A. §231, are not part of the marital estate and may not be considered, either directly or indirectly, in a divorce decree which distributes the assets of the marriage. Knudson v. Knudson, 186 M 8, 606 P2d 130 (1980). (Decree upon remand not relitigation of matters previously settled, 191 M 204, 622 P2d 1025, 38 St. Rep. 154 (1981).)

Net Worth of Parties

Failure to Discount Value of Corporation Not Abuse of Discretion: Husband and wife had equal interest in a family farming and ranching corporation. The District Court determined a net value for the corporation and then decided that husband would keep the property and pay wife one-half of the net value. Upon payment of the final installment, wife was to turn over her shares to husband. The court's refusal to discount the net value was proper in light of husband's intention to continue full control over the corporate affairs without selling or otherwise disposing of the corporation. This division of the estate was not an abuse of discretion because it allowed husband to keep intact the property and continue the ranching business while assuring that wife received her share of the monetary value of the asset. In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 833 P2d 215, 49 St. Rep. 597 (1992).

Obligations Acquired From Former Marriage — Property Rights Not Implicated: Wife contended that the District Court erred in failing to deduct from husband's net worth at the time of their marriage his support, maintenance, and education obligations to his wife and children of a former marriage. If his obligations had been deducted, his net worth would have been in the negative and the increase in the parties' net worth during the marriage would have been substantially greater than the increase found by the court. However, because the husband's obligations did not implicate property rights, refusal to deduct the obligations from the husband's statement of net worth was not an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Gallagher, 248 M 100, 809 P2d 579, 48 St. Rep. 346 (1991).

Sufficient Foundation for Determination of Net Worth: Husband complained that of the trial court's 60-plus findings and conclusions, only 5 dealt with the parties' liability and that these few findings were inadequate to determine net worth and to equitably divide the marital estate. While not making an exhaustive list, the court did set forth the essential and determining facts from which it drew its conclusions, and the findings provided a sound foundation for the judgment. As noted in Stratford v. Stratford, 193 M 195, 631 P2d 296, 38 St. Rep. 1093 (1981), this foundation need not consist of a multitude of evidentiary facts as long as the findings of fact set forth a recordation of the essential and determining facts upon which the court rested its conclusions and without which the judgment would lack support. In re Marriage of Skinner, 240 M 299, 783 P2d 1350, 46 St. Rep. 2141 (1989).

Net Worth of Parties — Determination From Findings as a Whole:

Although determination of the net worth of the marital estate is a necessary prerequisite to an equitable apportionment of the estate, the court need not do so in one finding. It is sufficient if the findings as a whole allow for the determination of the parties' net worth. In re Marriage of Hockaday, 237 M 413, 773 P2d 1217, 46 St. Rep. 910 (1989).

A court's failure to precisely set forth net worth of the parties does not constitute abuse of discretion so long as the findings as a whole are sufficient to determine net worth. In re Marriage of LeProwse, 198 M 357, 646 P2d 526, 39 St. Rep. 1053 (1982).

Valuation of All Assets — Net Worth Finding: Apportionment of the marital estate must be predicated on a finding of net worth of the estate. An apportionment cannot be equitable without such a finding. The District Court must make complete findings of fact, including assets and liabilities, from which the estate's net worth can be established. If this is not done, the Supreme Court cannot on appeal determine if the estate was equitably divided. In this case, the court failed to make a specific finding as to liabilities, thus precluding a determination of net worth. This was an abuse of discretion. The court also failed to find the value of the personal property. The property division was vacated for these reasons, and the case was remanded. In re Marriage of Dirnberger, 237 M 398, 773 P2d 330, 46 St. Rep. 898 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Scott, 246 M 10, 803 P2d 620, 47 St. Rep. 2237 (1990).

Admissibility of Options Trading Account Financial Data Form in Determining Net Worth: In attempting to determine worth of the parties, the lower court noted a lack of verifiable information on the husband's financial situation, characterized by incomplete and incorrect answers about his financial affairs. Therefore, it was proper for the court to admit a copy of an options trading account financial data form, submitted by the wife, as an indication of husband's net worth. In re Marriage of Purdy, 234 M 502, 764 P2d 857, 45 St. Rep. 2084 (1988).

Valuation of All Assets — Net Worth Finding: In a dissolution proceeding, the District Court must place a value upon all of the assets within a marital estate and determine the net worth of the parties before distributing property within that estate, regardless of whether the parties entered into any stipulation concerning their marital property. Cook v. Cook, 188 M 472, 614 P2d 511 (1980).

Net Worth Determination Existing Through Cumulation of Other Findings: Although the District Court did not make a specific finding of fact as to the net worth of the marital property, there were findings as to the value of assets which had been divided prior to trial, the value of assets divided by the court following the trial, and the joint liabilities of the marriage. The cumulative effect of these findings is equivalent to a finding of the net worth of the parties at the time of the divorce. In re Marriage of Bosacker, 187 M 141, 609 P2d 253 (1980), followed by Hunter v. Hunter, 196 M 235, 639 P2d 489, 39 St. Rep. 59 (1982). See also Norine v. Norine, 210 M 477, 681 P2d 1096, 41 St. Rep. 1094 (1984); Nunnally v. Determination of Net Worth Required — Maintenance: In the distribution of marital property upon dissolution, the District Court must make a determination of the true net worth of assets before an equitable division can be made. The District Court cannot properly determine that the parties lack sufficient property to provide for their needs and are unable to support themselves through appropriate employment (the basis for awarding maintenance) until the marital assets have been valued and equitably apportioned. The District Court must also determine if the property to be awarded is income-producing or income-consuming property. Herron v. Herron, 186 M 396, 608 P2d 97 (1980), proper findings and conclusions made and judgment affirmed in In re Marriage of Herron, 226 M 485, 736 P2d 487, 44 St. Rep. 823 (1987).

Determination of Net Worth — Abuse of Discretion: As part of a divorce decree the court made no finding concerning the net worth of the home of the parties but awarded it to the plaintiff until the children are emancipated or reach majority. The court is vested with wide discretion and where, as here, there is no evidence of abuse, its decision will not be reversed. Nor is it reversible error that no finding was made of the net worth of the home, as its value was not at issue. Reese v. Reese, 185 M 52, 604 P2d 326 (1979); In re the Marriage of Schwartz, 184 M 178, 602 P2d 175 (1979).

Determination of Net Worth — Consideration of Inheritance: To have a proper distribution of the marital property, the trial court must first determine the net worth of the parties at the time of their divorce. An inheritance received during the marriage is a marital asset. How the trial court should consider this asset must be decided in each case on its own facts. In this case, the court first determined that the inheritance was used to increase the value of the home and then deducted the amount of the inheritance from the value of the home before dividing the assets. This manner of considering the inheritance was in error. Reese v. Reese, 185 M 52, 604 P2d 326 (1979); Vivian v. Vivian, 178 M 341, 583 P2d 1072 (1978), followed in In re Marriage of Scott, 246 M 10, 803 P2d 620, 47 St. Rep. 2237 (1990).

Determination of Net Worth and Contribution: Before there may be a proper distribution of marital property in a divorce decree, the District Court must first determine the net worth of the parties at the time of their divorce and must permit full inquiry regarding financial contribution by the parties to the marriage. Herring v. Herring, 184 M 353, 602 P2d 1006 (1979).

Net Worth Determination — Unsecured Debts — Inheritance — Discretion: For a proper distribution of marital assets, the trial court must first determine the net worth of the parties at the time of their divorce, considering both the assets and liabilities of each of the parties. Broad discretion lies in the court, its judgment to be overturned only if a clear abuse of discretion is shown. Failure to consider $12,000 of unsecured debts and the liability therefor is such an abuse. The inheritance of a party during the marriage must be taken into consideration, but how it is to be considered is unclear and no specific finding on this item is required. Metcalf v. Metcalf, 183 M 266, 598 P2d 1140 (1979). See also In re Marriage of Stewart, 232 M 40, 757 P2d 765, 45 St. Rep. 850 (1988).

EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF MARITAL PROPERTY

General

Veteran Disability Benefits Federally Protected From Inclusion in Marital Estate — Disability Benefits Considered in Award of Spousal or Child Support as Party's Ability to Earn Income: The District Court included a portion of the husband's Veterans Benefits Association (VA) disability benefits as part of the division of marital property. The Supreme Court held that under the antiattachment clause of 38 U.S.C. 5301, VA disability benefits are federally protected from inclusion in the marital estate. In enacting that section and the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act, 10 U.S.C. 1408, Congress preempted state courts from including VA disability benefits in the marital estate because VA disability benefits are not considered "disposable retired pay" to be treated as marital property. An award of VA disability benefits upon dissolution amounts to a seizure of those benefits in violation of 38 U.S.C. 5301. To avoid damaging federal objectives, the property division dictates of this section must yield to the federal law. Consistent with both federal and state law, a District Court may consider VA disability benefits in the same way that it considers each party's ability to earn income after dissolution as an important factor in achieving an equitable property division, including consideration of the military disability retirement pay as a source of income in the award of spousal maintenance or child support, or generally as an economic circumstance of the parties justifying a disproportionate award of marital property to the nonretiree spouse. Thus, disability payments should not, either in form or substance, be treated as marital property subject to division upon dissolution. However, under Rose v. Rose, 481 US 619 (1987), a state court is free to consider postdissolution disability income and to order a disabled veteran to pay spousal support even when disability benefits would be used to make support payments. Dissolution Decree Granting Ranch to Husband — Wife Not Entitled to Appreciation or Subject to Liability Accruing on Property — Judgment Interest Owing on Money Judgment: A dissolution decree entered in 1996 granted ranch property to the husband and a liquidated money judgment of $305,855 to the wife. When the remainder of the issues concerning the marital estate was finally addressed in 1999, the wife contended that the subsequent appreciation of the ranch marital assets must be accounted for in determining the final disposition of the 1996 decree. The Supreme Court held that the wife was not entitled either to appreciation or, conversely, to any liability that may have accrued on the property because the ranch was exclusively awarded to the husband. However, the wife was entitled to judgment interest on the money as a statutory right pursuant to 25-9-205. On remand, the Supreme Court applied the statutory 10% interest rate to the balance of the wife's money judgment that remained unpaid following entry of the decree, not including interest accruing during the pendancy of the appeal. The Supreme Court refigured the dollar amount due the wife after adjusting the figure, which had been incorrectly offset by the District Court because of the wife's alleged receipt of livestock and sales and an interest debt allegedly due to the husband's mother under a "conspiratorial sham" designed to deprive the wife of her interest in the farm property and to directly benefit the husband. In re Marriage of Pospisil, 2000 MT 132, 299 M 527, 1 P3d 364, 57 St. Rep. 547 (2000).

No Showing of Prejudice in Scheduling Hearing on Marital Property Disposition on Fourteen Days' Notice Three Years After Decree of Dissolution: The parties' dissolution decree was entered in 1996, but by 1999, the parties' property still had not been distributed because of ongoing disputes over the marital assets. The 1996 decree was not in dispute, so the District Court set a hearing on 14 days' notice, identifying the issues that remained in contention. The wife objected to the hearing date, alleging that 14 days were insufficient to conduct the discovery necessary to fully prepare for the issues. The wife failed to brief the issues, but the husband timely filed a brief in response to the requests. The hearing took place as scheduled, and the next day the District Court issued an order implementing property division. The wife appealed, arguing that the short and insufficient time abridged her constitutional due process rights. Citing In re Marriage of Nordberg, 271 M 328, 896 P2d 447 (1995), the Supreme Court noted that if the wife could show that she was not afforded the opportunity to adequately present evidence, a new hearing would be a necessary remedy. However, the scheduling order did nothing more than restate the contents of an earlier order, and the only new legal issue of import required research but no further discovery. At the hearing, each party was allowed to offer documentary evidence, and to call expert witnesses, and to cross-examine witnesses. The wife could not show sufficient causally related prejudice as a result of the notice, and the Supreme Court found no due process violation in this case. In re Marriage of Pospisil, 2000 MT 132, 299 M 527, 1 P3d 364, 57 St. Rep. 547 (2000).

Condemnation Proceeds as Business Property: Husband's business was paid $7,500 by the state for the condemnation of 0.14 acres of the business's land to widen a highway, partly to compensate for the taking and partly allocated for site improvements. Rather than deposit the condemnation proceeds to the credit of the business, husband gave them to his father in partial payment for a motor home. Wife subsequently purchased the business as part of a dissolution proceeding and successfully argued that the condemnation proceeds should be returned to the business. In re Marriage of Griffin, 275 M 37, 909 P2d 707, 53 St. Rep. 28 (1996).

Order Allowing Husband to Delay Payment to Wife Not Error: The lower court awarded Ray the family home on the condition that he purchase his wife's one-half interest in the property. The order allowed Ray to delay payment to his wife for 2 years until he received funds from a balloon payment due him on property that he owned in California. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had arrived at an equitable division of the property and had not abused its discretion in allowing the husband to delay paying his wife so long as she earned interest on the amount owed her until time of payment. In re Marriage of Chew, 269 M 331, 888 P2d 428, 52 St. Rep. 13 (1995).

Open Court Stipulation to Cash Award in Addition to Property Settlement: Both parties agreed by stipulation in open court that, in compensation for giving up her right to contest how much of a loan was for ranch expenses and how much was for husband's personal expenses, wife would receive $6,000 in addition to any property. Husband contested the award on appeal. The Supreme Court found the stipulation terms to be clear and found no abuse of discretion in the award of the cash settlement according to the stipulation. In re Marriage of Jakkola, 267 M 450, 884 P2d 783, 51 St. Rep. 1117 (1994), distinguishing In re Marriage of Rogers, 226 M 163, 734 P2d 677 (1987). See also In re Marriage of Simms, 264 M 317, 871 P2d 899 (1994).

Living Expenses Pending Dissolution as Marital Liability: A temporary order declared that $500 a month that wife needed to borrow from her parents to cover monthly living expenses was considered a marital debt to be divided between the parties upon final division of the marital estate. When the final order was entered, the trial court held that the borrowed money was not expected to be repaid and that the debt was thus not included in the calculation of the value of the marital estate. However, absent evidence in the record that the money was intended as a gift, the monthly payment should have been considered a marital debt and the Supreme Court ordered entry of the original temporary order and inclusion of the debt in the calculation of the value of the estate. In re Marriage of Neal, 267 M 455, 884 P2d 789, 51 St. Rep. 1109 (1994).

Marital Misconduct Not to Be Considered in Apportionment of Marital Estate: Husband contended that the trial court abused its discretion when it did not credit his property settlement obligation with the amounts of money wife took from his share of the marital assets. The court denied husband's motion to reduce his obligation, commenting that he knew or should have known that wife had the company checkbook and a propensity to use the checkbook for matters unrelated to the business, which in essence implied that husband was at fault and that his actions condoned any alleged wrongdoing on the wife's part. Citing In re Marriage of Collett, 190 M 500, 621 P2d 1093 (1981), the Supreme Court held that this section makes it clear that a court is not to consider any marital misconduct in its disposition of marital assets and that apportionment of a marital estate is based on equitable principles. Whether parties are at fault should not affect the division of assets. The case was remanded to determine, without considering fault by either party, whether wife's appropriation of funds resulted in a disparity in the court's division of the estate and, if so, to make adjustments accordingly. In re Marriage of Griffin, 260 M 124, 860 P2d 78, 50 St. Rep. 945 (1993).

Question of Whether Wife's Purchase Offers for Marital Property Met Decree Provisions — Remand: An original dissolution decree allowed wife to exercise an option to purchase the family business, which she tried to do on three occasions by offering varying terms, all of which were denied by the trial court for general reasons. After examining the offers and the reasons for denial, the Supreme Court concluded that a question of fact remained as to whether the offers substantially varied the terms of the original decree. The case was remanded for resolution of the question, with directions that if the proposals complied with the terms of the option, it would be an abuse of discretion to deny wife's motions to exercise her option. In re Marriage of Griffin, 260 M 124, 860 P2d 78, 50 St. Rep. 945 (1993).

On remand, the District Court calculated the option purchase price for the parties' business. Wife exercised the option and purchased the business but, on appeal, alleged mathematical and accounting errors in the court's calculations. In voluntarily complying with the District Court's order and exercising her option to purchase the business, wife waived any objection to the purchase price and was precluded from raising the issue on appeal. She was not eligible for indemnification from husband regarding two claims asserted against the business, having purchased the business liabilities as well as its assets. Further, husband's acceptance of the money and his subsequent transfer of his company stock to wife precluded him from raising the issue on cross-appeal of whether the District Court erred in granting wife a new purchase option. In re Marriage of Griffin, 275 M 37, 909 P2d 707, 53 St. Rep. 28 (1996).

No Error in Failing to Order Provision of Health Insurance: Wife contended that because of her age and gallbladder problems, the District Court should have ordered husband to provide her with health insurance through his place of employment. However, wife's receipt of $62,653 from sale of real property and $22,640 in personal property constituted a sufficient provision of assets to allow her to provide for her own health care. In re Marriage of Peetz, 252 M 448, 830 P2d 543, 49 St. Rep. 362 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Westland, 257 M 169, 848 P2d 492, 50 St. Rep. 216 (1993).

Error in Prohibition of Discharge of Marital Indebtedness in Bankruptcy: Wife was charged with paying husband $22,500 as his share of a business. The decree further stated that this amount was a personal obligation of wife and was not dischargeable in bankruptcy. However, because the award was not for alimony, maintenance, or support, the only discharges expressly prohibited under 11 U.S.C. 523(a)(5) of the federal Bankruptcy Code, it was an infringement of wife's rights under federal law and an error for the District Court to prohibit discharge of the indebtedness in bankruptcy. The final decree was reversed and modified by striking the provision that the award was not dischargeable in bankruptcy. In re Marriage of Driscoll, 250 M 28, 817 P2d 702, 48 St. Rep. 884 (1991).

Theory of Resulting Trust Applied to Marital Property: At trial, husband presented testimony and title certificates indicating that a mobile home, automobile, and flatbed trailer belonged to his father and should not be included as marital property. The wife indicated that she and her husband treated the property as their own, made direct lease payments on the items, paid for licenses, taxes, and insurance on the items, and took income tax deductions on the property. Applying the theory of resulting trust, as set out in Eckart v. Hubbard, 184 M 320, 602 P2d 988 (1979), the Supreme Court held that the actions of the husband's father and of the husband and wife indicated that the father was holding the property in trust. The property was therefore properly considered part of the marital estate, and debts associated with the assets were properly included as marital debts. In re Marriage of Ruff, 247 M 486, 807 P2d 1345, 48 St. Rep. 271 (1991).

Absence of Support for Claims of Marital Debt — Findings Not Required: Husband claimed error in court failure to determine and assign marital debts. However, neither party submitted any proposed findings or conclusions on the debts. Absent support in the record for the claims, the court was not required to make findings or conclusions on them. In re Marriage of Purdy, 234 M 502, 764 P2d 857, 45 St. Rep. 2084 (1988).

Legal Description Necessary to Ensure Equitable Distribution: The District Court granted husband property described merely as "House in Chester". This constituted an inadequate description because legal descriptions of real property are necessary to ensure proper disbursement of property in dispute. In re Marriage of Butler, 232 M 419, 756 P2d 1159, 45 St. Rep. 1160 (1988).

Effect of Dissolution Proceedings on Spousal Authority to Conduct Independent Financial Transactions: The statutory authority of spouses to conduct independent financial transactions is not controlling on the distribution of marital property in dissolution proceedings. In re Marriage of Dalley, 232 M 235, 756 P2d 1131, 45 St. Rep. 1017 (1988).

Setting Over of Promissory Note as Equitable Distribution: Wife loaned husband $32,000 to pay federal taxes on $83,000 he withdrew from his retirement plan to pay living and business expenses. She insisted he sign a promissory note for the amount. The District Court properly held that enforceability of the $32,000 contract was subject to equitable distribution of the marital estate, noting that the wife received benefits from the $83,000 and that the loan helped relieve her joint tax liability. The court duly considered the note and correctly awarded the note to the husband. In re Marriage of Stewart, 232 M 40, 757 P2d 765, 45 St. Rep. 850 (1988).

Property Distribution or Maintenance Provision? — "Where's the Beef?": A decree of dissolution provided that husband deliver free of charge one beef a year to wife. He later discontinued delivery of beef, maintaining that the provision was in the nature of maintenance and terminated upon wife's remarriage. The District Court properly found that the beef was a division of property required to equalize a disproportionate division of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Kramer, 229 M 476, 747 P2d 865, 44 St. Rep. 2148 (1987).

Equity, Not Equality, as Guide in Division of Marital Estate: The husband contended that a property division was inequitable on its face because Montana law favors equal division of assets. This was a misstatement of the law. Equity, not equality, should guide the District Court's discretion in dividing the marital estate. In re Marriage of Fitzmorris, 229 M 96, 745 P2d 353, 44 St. Rep. 1809 (1987), followed in In re Marriage of Nordberg, 265 M 352, 877 P2d 987, 51 St. Rep. 531 (1994), and In re Marriage of Corey, 266 M 304, 880 P2d 824, 51 St. Rep. 859 (1994). Title Not Controlling in Distribution of Assets — Joint Tenants: Title does not control the distribution of marital assets. Therefore, the lower court properly refused to base its decision on the fact that the parties held the property as joint tenants. In re Marriage of Fitzmorris, 229 M 96, 745 P2d 353, 44 St. Rep. 1809 (1987).

Parties Taking Turns Choosing Personal Property — No Abuse of Discretion: The trial court did not abuse its discretion in instructing the parties to take turns choosing personal property as an alternate method to the distribution already agreed to between the parties. If carried out, such method can result in an equitable division that is not unreasonable or arbitrary. In re Marriage of Bowman, 226 M 99, 734 P2d 197, 44 St. Rep. 488 (1987).

Restoration to Premarital Status Not Required: Although the husband brought more assets into the marriage, the District Court did not err when it required that the marital property be equitably apportioned between the parties. The court is not bound to restore the parties to their premarital status. In re Marriage of Shirilla, 225 M 106, 732 P2d 397, 44 St. Rep. 75 (1987). See also In re Marriage of Powell, 231 M 72, 750 P2d 1099, 45 St. Rep. 441 (1988).

Apportionment — Factors Considered: In apportioning marital property, 40-4-202 requires consideration of the "contributions of the other spouse to the marriage". In the present case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in considering the value of property the husband brought to the marriage and an inheritance he received. The court also properly considered the wife's contributions to the success of the husband's cleaning business. In re Marriage of Martin, 218 M 36, 705 P2d 1114, 42 St. Rep. 1376 (1985).

Land Bought With Wife's Premarital Money and Husband's Marital Income — Even Distribution of Proceeds of Sale: The lower court was within its discretion in equally dividing the proceeds of the sale of a piece of property, despite wife's claim that she used $5,000 from her premarital savings for its downpayment, because husband's income was used for the rest of the payments. In re Marriage of Perry, 217 M 162, 704 P2d 41, 42 St. Rep. 1101 (1985).

Adoption of Husband's Proposed Disposition: A marital property disposition would not be set aside even though: (1) it was the one proposed by the husband; (2) an exact mathematical division was not made; or (3) both parties sought certain of the same items. Also, it was not error that one party received more property than the other. In re Marriage of Osteen, 215 M 436, 697 P2d 1358, 42 St. Rep. 522 (1985).

Preservation of Family Ranch — Not Proper Consideration Upon Division: Montana's policy in favor of keeping a family farm or ranch intact upon dissolution is not a proper consideration when dividing marital property under this statute. The policy is only to be considered upon distribution of the marital property after it has been allocated. In re Marriage of Glass, 215 M 248, 697 P2d 96, 42 St. Rep. 328 (1985). See also In re Marriage of Binsfield, 269 M 336, 888 P2d 889, 52 St. Rep. 16 (1995), and In re Marriage of Ortiz, 282 M 500, 938 P2d 1308, 54 St. Rep. 446 (1997).

Marriage of Short Duration — Return to Status Quo Not Required: The parties were married in August 1980, and a dissolution was entered in April 1984. Both parties brought property into the marriage and worked during the marriage. The husband contended that the property division was inequitable and that in a marriage of short duration, the parties should be placed in the position they would have been in if no marriage had occurred. On appeal, the Supreme Court pointed out that while it has recognized that a lower court must consider the origin of property acquired by one party prior to marriage, 40-4-204 clearly provides that such property is still a marital asset subject to division. There is no definite rule as to how the trial court is to consider the asset. Each case is decided on its own facts. As long as the trial court properly considers the statutory factors and divides the property equitably, its judgment will not be overturned unless the trial court's fact determinations are clearly erroneous. Division of Equity in Family Home — Credit for Mortgage Payments — Deduction of Projected Sales Costs: When husband made payments of $300 a month to former wife from time of separation to court-ordered division of property 5 years later, with no agreement between the parties as to the purpose of the payments, wife was not entitled to use a portion of amount she had paid as mortgage payments as offset against husband's one-half interest in property. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court decision on the grounds that the wife failed to show abuse of discretion by District Court, and distinguished the case of Lawrence v. Harvey, 186 M 314, 607 P2d 551 (1980), on fact that in Lawrence, the court-ordered payments were for child support. Supreme Court also affirmed District Court judgment that husband's interest in the home equals the amount it would bring on the open market, which includes consideration of projected sales costs. In re Marriage of Blades, 212 M 379, 692 P2d 1215, 41 St. Rep. 1806 (1984).

Agreement Unconscionable When Instigated to Get Wife's Property as Condition of Continuing Marriage: Petitioner appealed a judgment awarding approximately one-sixth of the marital property to him and the balance to the respondent wife. Petitioner contended that the trial court abused its discretion when it refused to divide the marital property 50-50 under an agreement executed between the parties. The Supreme Court held that the trial court properly refused to divide the property according to the agreement, stating that the result would be the same whether the agreement was a separation agreement or, as the husband contended, a postnuptial agreement. The evidence showed that in instigating the agreement the husband took advantage of his wife regarding her property as a condition to continuing the marriage, contrary to what is required of one in a confidential relationship. The agreement was unconscionable as a matter of law even though the trial court did not specifically find unconscionability. Myers v. Myers, 210 M 173, 682 P2d 718, 41 St. Rep. 990 (1984).

Award of Maintenance After Equitable Division of Property: Sections 40-4-202 and 40-4-203 are to be read together. Thus, if the District Court has made an equitable distribution of property but then determines that the property was insufficient to provide for the spouse's financial needs, it may award maintenance. Such a determination must be made individually in each case, requiring the District Court to balance the considerations of both sections, supported by substantial evidence with appropriate findings to form an adequate basis for review. Hilt v. Hilt, 209 M 140, 679 P2d 783, 41 St. Rep. 604 (1984), followed in In re Marriage of Wash, 239 M 204, 779 P2d 526, 46 St. Rep. 1622 (1989).

Apportionment of Debts of Parties Previously Divorced From Each Other — Reimbursement for Loan Payments Properly Denied: Where the appellant and respondent were previously married and divorced from each other and the respondent wife brought to the parties' second marriage the family home, having purchased the appellant's equity in that home with a loan from the appellant under the terms of the first divorce decree, the District Court decreeing the second divorce did not abuse its discretion in denying the appellant's request for reimbursement of his prior loan payments. What the appellant requests is, in effect, recognition of his equity in the family home brought to the second marriage, but because the respondent contributed a significantly greater share of the property to the second marriage, the District Court was justified in denying that equity and awarding full equity in the home to the wife. Parenteau v. Parenteau, 204 M 239, 664 P2d 900, 40 St. Rep. 815 (1983).

Income Earned on Mineral Interest During Pendency of Action: Part of the marital estate in a dissolution of marriage proceeding consisted of minerals underlying a ranch. The District Court divided the mineral interests equally between husband and wife but did not make any provision for the profits earned on the lease of the mineral interests during the pendency of the action. The Supreme Court held that wife was entitled to an accounting for such profits. In re Marriage of Garst, 199 M 393, 649 P2d 450, 39 St. Rep. 1477 (1982).

Unrequested Unequal Distribution — Restricted Earning Capacity: Where wife was awarded 60% of the marital estate upon dissolution of marriage, husband appealed on grounds that both parties contributed equally to the estate and wife asked for no more than equal apportionment. Supreme Court affirmed, finding restricted earning capacity of wife justified the greater award. Lupo v. Lupo, 197 M 290, 642 P2d 1056, 39 St. Rep. 565 (1982). See also In re Marriage of Cranmore, 199 M 283, 649 P2d 1361, 39 St. Rep. 1361 (1982).

Unconscionability of Property Settlement: The court will look to all the facts surrounding the property settlement to determine if its provisions are unconscionable and not just the disparity in dollar value of property received. Here the disparity reflected the value of corporate shares, which the husband retained but which exposed him to risk of bankruptcy when corporation was ready to fail, and the court refused to find unconscionability. Lawrence v. Lawrence, 197 M 262, 642 P2d 1043, 39 St. Rep. 548 (1982).

Failure to Provide Coherent Distribution: The trial court failed to determine the net worth of the parties or to value the personal property of the parties distributed by the court. The Supreme Court on review was unable to determine any coherent plan for an equitable distribution of the parties' property. The wife also asserted that she was entitled to maintenance, contending that the trial court had made an erroneous finding as to her earning capacity. This, however, could not be determined until there had been an equitable distribution of property. Because of the failure to value the property or provide for an overall plan for distribution, the Supreme Court could not adequately review the findings and remanded the case for further proceedings. In re Marriage of McGill, 187 M 187, 609 P2d 278 (1980).

Contribution of Wife as Homemaker and Mother Valid Basis for Equal Division of Marital Property: The District Court, after reciting the substantial contributions of the husband in working the ranch and the wife as homemaker and mother, did not abuse its discretion by awarding each party one-half of the marital estate. The court followed the statutory mandate of 40-4-202 to consider the contribution of a spouse as homemaker and mother. Jacobson v. Jacobson, 183 M 517, 600 P2d 1183 (1979). See also In re Marriage of Glass, 215 M 248, 697 P2d 96, 42 St. Rep. 328 (1985).

Consideration of Support of Stepchildren in Divorce Proceeding: A stepparent who receives stepchildren into his family and supports them is presumed to do so as a parent. A parent is not bound to compensate the other parent for the voluntary support of his child without an agreement for compensation. Since no agreement was made, the husband's support of his stepchildren during the marriage could not properly be considered in the disposition of the marital estate. Schultz v. Schultz, 183 M 20, 597 P2d 1174 (1979).

Family Corporation: For a proper distribution of marital property the trial court in this case must consider at least these two factors: (1) the net worth of the parties at the time of divorce; and (2) the effect on control of a family corporation upon transfer of any shares of corporation stock during a property distribution. Grenfell v. Grenfell, 182 M 229, 596 P2d 205 (1979).

Use of Enumerated Factors: In a divorce proceeding the trial court must weigh the factors enumerated in 40-4-202 in assessing the value of the marital estate and must equitably apportion the assets. Downs v. Downs, 181 M 163, 592 P2d 938 (1979), followed in In re Marriage of Foreman, 1999 MT 89, 294 M 181, 979 P2d 193, 56 St. Rep. 373 (1999).

Orders as to Property: The court held that the wife, by virtue of her 14 years as mother, housewife, and part-time ranch hand, acquired a vested interest in the major marital asset, which was ranch property, regardless of its source and title. Brown v. Brown, 179 M 417, 587 P2d 361 (1978), distinguished in In re Marriage of Fitzmorris, 229 M 96, 745 P2d 353, 44 St. Rep. 1809 (1987), and in In re Marriage of Nordberg, 265 M 352, 877 P2d 987, 51 St. Rep. 531 (1994).

Property Disposition Required Before Maintenance Allowed: Since the property division statute and maintenance statute have a dual purpose, an award of maintenance is allowed only when a spouse has insufficient assets to cover living expenses and cannot have appropriate employment for reasons stated in the maintenance statute. Thus, maintenance needs can only be determined after there is an equitable division of the marital estate. Johnsrud v. Johnsrud, 181 M 544, 572 P2d 902 (1977), explained in Hilt v. Hilt, 209 M 140, 679 P2d 783, 41 St. Rep. 604 (1984) and followed in In re Marriage of Scott, 246 M 10, 803 P2d 620, 47 St. Rep. 2237 (1990).

Sufficiency of Evidence, Findings

Reversal of Award of Prior-Acquired Vehicle to Wife Who Did Not Contribute to Maintenance of Vehicle: The District Court abused its discretion when it awarded to the wife, upon dissolution of a 14-month marriage, a Ford Bronco that the husband bought before the marriage without a finding that the vehicle had appreciated in value during the marriage and that her contributions facilitated the maintenance of the vehicle or that the award served as an alternative to maintenance arrangements. In re Marriage of Rolf, 2000 MT 361, 303 M 349, 16 P3d 345, 57 St. Rep. 1536 (2000).

Reversal of $2,000 Award to Wife for Necklace She Said Husband Stole — Insufficient Evidence: The award of $2,000 to the wife for a missing necklace was reversed because the only evidence on the matter was the wife's testimony that "And I don't want to forget about the necklace that he stole from me. I want it back" and her statement that it was worth about $2,000. In re Marriage of Rolf, 2000 MT 361, 303 M 349, 16 P3d 345, 57 St. Rep. 1536 (2000).

Trial Court Discretion in Discounting Stock and Considering Profit-Sharing Plan — No Fault Ascribed to Findings and Assignment of Debt: The wife claimed error in division of marital property because the trial court imposed a de facto stock discount on shares of the husband's corporation, failed to include the interest in the husband's profit-sharing plan, and interjected fault into a no-fault dissolution through consideration of the fact that the wife's management of the family casino had resulted in large debts to the marital estate. The Supreme Court affirmed on each issue. The trial court was within its discretion in setting the stock value within the range of evidence presented at trial, and in light of the considerable amount of debt ascribed to the husband, it was reasonable for the court to grant the husband his profit-sharing plan proceeds. As to the claim of fault, the financial findings that the wife took issue with were proper and aided the court in considering the equitable distribution of the property, so no fault was interjected through the court's consideration of the business debts. In re Marriage of Hanni, 2000 MT 59, 299 M 20, 997 P2d 760, 57 St. Rep. 279 (2000). See also In re Marriage of Maedje, 263 M 262, 868 P2d 580, 51 St. Rep. 47 (1994).

Failure to Prove Value of Property Transfer — Court Discretion to Equitably Apportion Property: The husband transferred a portion of a Nebraska farm to his mother. When the property was valued for purposes of dissolution, the husband maintained that the District Court erred in failing to reduce the estate by the value of the transferred property. However, the husband offered no evidence other than his personal testimony to substantiate the value of the transfer. Parties to a dissolution have a duty to assist the trial court in acquiring information needed to determine an appropriate distribution of the marital estate. If a party fails to introduce credible evidence of the value of a piece of marital property, the court is free to use credible evidence of value submitted by the other party. Speculation, conjecture, inference, and guess do not constitute credible evidence, and a trial judge is not required to become an appraiser, accountant, computer, or all-around genius to appropriately decide the facts as established by the documentation at trial. Given the husband's failure of proof regarding the actual value of the alleged transfer, the trial court did not err in adopting the wife's expert's appraisal of the present value of the husband's remainder interest in granting the wife an equitable portion of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Foreman, 1999 MT 89, 294 M 181, 979 P2d 193, 56 St. Rep. 373 (1999). See also Downs v. Downs, 181 M 163, 592 P2d 938 (1979), In re Marriage of Powell, 231 M 72, 750 P2d 1099 (1988), and In re Marriage of Maedje, 263 M 262, 868 P2d 580, 51 St. Rep. 47 (1994).

Valuation of Business Based on Insufficient Evidence: The lower court relied solely on the husband's expert in valuing a family monogramming business. The Supreme Court remanded the case on the basis that no evidence of net profits had been introduced and that the lower court had ignored the wife's request that the business be sold rather than awarded to her. In re Marriage of Miller, 239 M 12, 778 P2d 888, 46 St. Rep. 1471 (1989).

Corporation Valued at Worth of Marketable Products: A corporation formed to sell art prints was capitalized at $3,000, and enough prints had been sold at the time of trial to roughly recover that amount. The potential income from sales of the remaining prints was $40,240. Husband testified that the prints would not sell without a great expenditure of time and money but did not provide evidence of how much. The court did not abuse its discretion when it valued the parties' 50% share of the corporation at $20,000. In re Marriage of Hockaday, 237 M 413, 773 P2d 1217, 46 St. Rep. 910 (1989).

Conflicting Valuation Evidence — Court Must Indicate Basis for Choice: The wife presented testimony from a real estate broker about the value of rental property. The husband offered only his opinion of the value. The court accepted the husband's value without offering an explanation. When conflicting valuation evidence is presented the court must indicate the basis for its determination. In this case, the court abused its discretion by its failure to offer an explanation of why it chose the husband's valuation. In re Marriage of Rolfe, 216 M 39, 699 P2d 79, 42 St. Rep. 623 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Bell, 220 M 123, 713 P2d 552, 43 St. Rep. 226 (1986).

Basis of Division of Property: When the defendant was evasive as to the nature and extent of assets, the record was unreliable as to the true net worth of the defendant at the time of the marriage and at the time of the divorce, and the court had insufficient basis to make an equitable division of property. Downs v. Downs, 170 M 150, 551 P2d 1025 (1976).

Discretion of Trial Court

Equitable Allocation of Debts and Personal Property Within Discretion of Trial Court: The wife took issue with the trial court's valuation and distribution of the marital estate, arguing that the court committed reversible error in the manner in which it allocated debts and personal property. She believed that she was entitled to a credit for equity from a home that she acquired prior to the marriage; however, the home was sold shortly after the marriage, and the proceeds were not kept separate, but rather used to pay various household expenses. She also disagreed with the court's determination that timber on the property should not have been valued separately from the property itself and with the court's allocation of debt. The Supreme Court noted that ultimately it is up to the trial court to make determinations regarding valuation and allocation of the various marital assets and debts and that the trial court has discretion to adopt any reasonable valuation that is supported by the record. Although the wife was not happy with the court's determinations, that did not make them reversible error. The valuation and distribution were supported in the record, and the Supreme Court declined to find that the trial court abused its discretion in its allocation of the parties' assets and debts. Siefke v. Siefke, 2000 MT 281, 302 M 167, 13 P3d 937, 57 St. Rep. 1175 (2000).

Requirement for Removal of Personal Property From Parties' Residence Not Abuse of Discretion: A District Court has broad discretion in devising methods to accomplish an equitable distribution of marital property. Given the history of the issuance of several temporary restraining orders against husband during the course of dissolution proceedings and his refusal to comply with several pretrial and posttrial orders that necessitated the issuance of enforcement orders, the District Court was justified in ordering husband to retrieve his personal property from the parties' residence within 30 days of entry of the decree, in order to facilitate a quick, supervised exchange of property. In re Marriage of Zander, 262 M 215, 864 P2d 1225, 50 St. Rep. 1522 (1993).

Court Discretion in Determining Whether Equal Division of Bank Account Occurred: The trial court included in the net marital estate $2,577.13 that husband had in a checking account. Husband testified that following separation, the parties equally divided certain assets and that the account funds represented his half, contending that either the amount should be deducted from the net assets or wife should be charged with an equal amount. Wife testified that the money was earned during the marriage and that she did not receive an equal amount. Although the evidence was conflicting on whether an equal division occurred, it was within the trial court's discretion, given the court's opportunity to observe and judge the credibility of the witnesses, to include the amount in the net marital estate. In re Marriage of Lopez, 255 M 238, 841 P2d 1122, 49 St. Rep. 890 (1992).

Proper Consideration of Statutory Factors and Evidence — Restoration of Net Worth Brought Into Marriage Not Abuse of Discretion: The District Court made extensive findings of fact after considering all relevant factors for the division of property as required by this section. It listed the relevant property owned by each party at the time of marriage, including values; listed the marital property as it existed at the time of separation, including values; and concluded that the most equitable way to divide the property was to restore to each party the net worth brought into the marriage, less the decrease in net worth since the marriage, which was divided equally between the parties. This method constituted an equitable division, and its use was not an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Vakoff, 252 M 56, 826 P2d 552, 49 St. Rep. 144 (1992).

Discretion of Court — Valuation of Insurance Business: The District Court is vested with broad discretion in distributing property in dissolution proceedings. When a certified public accountant's testimony as to the value of goodwill of husband's insurance business was proper and uncontradicted, the District Court properly exercised its discretion to achieve an equitable distribution of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Arrotta, 244 M 508, 797 P2d 940, 47 St. Rep. 1775 (1990).

Allowance of Interest Within Court Discretion: The allowance of interest on property settlement payments owing from the distribution of a marital estate is within the discretion of the District Court. In re Marriage of Garner, 239 M 485, 781 P2d 1125, 46 St. Rep. 1852 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Lee, 249 M 516, 816 P2d 816, 48 St. Rep. 816 (1991).

Equal Division of Stock Inheritance — Court Consideration of Each Party's Contribution: Wife argued that stock gifted to her by her family during the marriage should not have been equally divided because the husband did not add to its value during the marriage. Facts revealed that marital assets were commingled and held jointly and that all property, including the stock, was acquired during the 38-year marriage. Consideration of each party's contribution to the marital estate was a correct exercise of the court's discretion in dividing the property. In re Marriage of Bultman, 228 M 136, 740 P2d 1145, 44 St. Rep. 1402 (1987).

Parties' Potential Future Incomes Properly Considered: Under this section, the court properly considered the parties' potential future incomes, as well as insurance and IRA contributions, in making an equitable distribution of property. In re Marriage of Jones, 225 M 69, 731 P2d 903, 44 St. Rep. 49 (1987).

In-Kind Distribution of Corporate Shares Not Required if Inequitable: Simply because the option of making a distribution of stock in-kind is open to the trial court, such option is not mandatory. An in-kind distribution of closely held corporate shares is not required when it would not produce an equitable settlement between the parties, and a court may correctly present other methods of distribution of the estate. In re Marriage of Johnston, 223 M 383, 726 P2d 322, 43 St. Rep. 1808 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Taylor, 257 M 122, 848 P2d 478, 50 St. Rep. 186 (1993).

Gifts Received During Marriage — Equity of Distribution Supported by Facts: During the marriage, the wife received a $1 million devise from her father's estate. In divorce proceedings, the District Court awarded the wife a much greater proportion of the marital estate than the husband received. The Supreme Court affirmed the award on the basis that the award was supported by the facts. There was credible evidence in the record that the wife's devise should be considered a gift to her and the property purchased with the devise should remain in her hands. There was evidence that the wife paid all the family's expenses after the devise and contributed to the purchase of a computer for her husband's law office. The equity of the distribution is supported by the facts. In re Marriage of Cruikshank, 222 M 152, 720 P2d 1191, 43 St. Rep. 1132 (1986).

Question of Title Not Controlling — No Abuse of Discretion: Wife appealed the property distribution, claiming that the District Court erred by failing to include as part of the marital estate a promissory note valued at $78,121, on which she was named as a tenant in common, and by awarding her less than a one-half interest in the family home, which was held by the parties as joint tenants. The Supreme Court affirmed the distribution and held that there was no clear abuse of discretion when: the parties had been married only a short time; the husband brought substantially all the assets to the marriage; and the wife had not contributed to maintenance of the family farm, the interest in which was represented by the promissory note. Montana's statutory scheme for disposition of marital property does not give controlling importance to the way in which title to the property is held. In re Marriage of Snyder, 220 M 262, 714 P2d 556, 43 St. Rep. 346 (1986).

Distribution of Tax Benefits and Liabilities: The distribution of tax deductions and liabilities is one factor among many that a court must consider upon dissolution of a marriage. When the court fairly balanced all the factors in distributing the property and awarding maintenance and child support, it was not an abuse of discretion to provide that for tax purposes the maintenance payments were income to the wife and deductible by the husband and that the husband could take the deductions for the minor children, who were put in the wife's custody for 7 months a year and in the husband's for the other 5. In re Marriage of Williams, 220 M 232, 714 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 319 (1986).

Equal Contributions to Marriage — Equitable Distribution of Property — No Abuse of Discretion: The District Court concluded that in spite of equal contributions to the marriage, it was equitable to award the wife less than 20% of the net marital estate. She argued that the findings of fact did not support the conclusion as to an equitable distribution. The Supreme Court found that the District Court adequately examined the statutory considerations outlined in 40-4-202(1), and in the absence of a showing of clear abuse of discretion, the District Court's division of the marital estate was affirmed. In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2065 (1985).

No Award of Share of Appreciation or Equity Buildup: The District Court, in distributing the property of a marital estate, failed to award the wife any share in the appreciation or equity buildup of the ranch. The husband had a net worth of $110,000 at the time of marriage. At the time of dissolution, his ranch-related assets and gold and silver, less liabilities, totaled approximately $265,000, the increase being essentially the result of inflation and appreciation in land values. The wife pointed out that the District Court found she had made an equal contribution to the marriage yet failed to award her any percentage of the increased value of the ranch. Under 40-4-202, in dividing property acquired prior to marriage and the increased value of the property, the District Court must consider nonmonetary contributions of homemakers and the extent to which such contributions facilitated maintenance of the property; however, the right to share in particular property must be considered along with all of the other applicable factors enumerated in 40-4-202.

The Supreme Court found that the District Court carefully considered all these factors in fashioning an equitable distribution. The wife failed to demonstrate that the District Court abused its discretion, and the apportionment of the ranch property to the husband was affirmed. In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2065 (1985).

Sale of Ranch Not Required: In a dissolution proceeding, the wife argued that the District Court should have been required to order the sale of the ranch and division of the sale proceeds. She contended that the ranch was not an economic unit and that all of the factors which traditionally mitigate in favor of keeping the ranch intact had been eliminated. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court did in fact consider these factors, as well as the other factors enumerated in 40-4-202, including the husband's desire to stay on the ranch and the fact that he had been a farmer and rancher all of his life. The Supreme Court ruled that although the District Court had the power to require sale of the ranch, had it chosen in its discretion to do so, it was not required to do so. The apportionment of the marital property was affirmed. In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2065 (1985).

No Abuse of Discretion in Excluding Car Wash From Marital Estate: A District Court order divided the marital estate, disregarding a car wash, equally between the parties. The District Court concluded that husband's interest in car wash would be maintained by him in order to provide an opportunity for future income because his physical disability affected his ability to earn a living. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court decision and held that trial judge properly considered the positions of the parties at the outset of the marriage, the contributions of each party to the marriage, each party's age, health, and occupation, as well as each party's future prospects. In re Marriage of Childers, 216 M 125, 700 P2d 594, 42 St. Rep. 692 (1985).

Abuse of Discretion — Four Substantial Injustices: The property settlement was set aside by the Supreme Court because the District Court abused its discretion in four major areas. First, the husband's values for property, while not adopted absolutely verbatim, were almost always accepted without explanation even though the record indicates some of his values were questionable. Second, as her share of the marital estate the wife received household goods with inflated values while the husband received income-producing property such as stocks and an annuity. Third, nonincome-producing property brought into the marriage 15 years ago was deducted from the division of property, resulting in an inequitable and unworkable property division. Fourth, various "credits"—payments on real property, withdrawals from checking accounts, and child support—appeared as distributions of property, but it was unclear what constituted a credit in this context. In re Marriage of Rolfe, 216 M 39, 699 P2d 79, 42 St. Rep. 623 (1985).

Discretion of Court to Divide Assets Unequally:

The District Court did not err in its determination that husband, a "parasitic freeloader" who had victimized wife for 10 years, was not entitled to an interest in the marital residence. The trial court found that wife had owned the property prior to the marriage and that husband had made no contribution to the value of the property. Turner v. Turner, 206 M 292, 670 P2d 568, 40 St. Rep. 1666 (1983).

The District Court awarded wife more than half of the marital estate as well as temporary maintenance for the purpose of returning to school and reinstating her teaching certificate. Husband appealed on the division of property issue, and the Supreme Court found that the District Court had not abused its discretion. The Supreme Court ruled that this section does not require that the trial court distribute assets equally between the parties but rather that the court consider the criteria set forth and make an equitable distribution. In re Marriage of Hecht, 199 M 363, 649 P2d 1257, 39 St. Rep. 1455 (1982).

The court's duty under this section is to consider the section's factors for apportionment of the marital estate and then equitably divide it. Though the court may make an equal division, such a division is not mandated. This section is flexible and vests a good deal of discretion in the court, and each case must be looked at individually and with an eye to its unique circumstances. In this case, wife was awarded 78% of the marital property (exclusive of husband's retirement benefits) and husband 22%. Wife was awarded one-third and husband two-thirds of husband's future retirement benefits in two vested and unmatured plans and one unvested plan. The court made extensive findings in support of that division, including that: (1) wife had for the past 3 years paid the mortgage on the family home; (2) marriage was lengthy (29 years); (3) wife had been devoted to the care of their disabled and now deceased child, quitting her job to give such care; and (4) she had a much smaller earning capacity than husband. The court used very conscientious judgment and did not abuse its discretion, and the division would not be overturned on appeal. Laster v. Laster, 197 M 470, 643 P2d 597, 39 St. Rep. 737 (1982). See also Wallace v. Wallace, 203 M 255, 661 P2d 455, 40 St. Rep. 430 (1983).

Where the wife made the house payments for 5 months prior to the dissolution proceedings and desired and had the ability to continue doing so, while the husband did not wish to work and did not desire the house, the court did not abuse its discretion in dividing the equity in the house two-thirds to the wife and one-third to the husband. Martens v. Martens, 196 M 71, 637 P2d 523, 38 St. Rep. 2135 (1981).

Although an equal division of property is desirable, a division that favors one party over another is acceptable if there is a reason. The emphasis placed on the parties' needs and relative financial situations indicates a careful exercise of the trial court's discretion in awarding the respondent approximately two-thirds of the marital estate, and the trial court's property division will not be disturbed absent a showing that it has abused its discretion. Bailey v. Bailey, 184 M 418, 603 P2d 259 (1979). See also Creon v. Creon, 195 M 254, 635 P2d 1308, 38 St. Rep. 1828 (1981), followed in In re Marriage of Kowis, 202 M 371, 658 P2d 1084, 40 St. Rep. 149 (1983).

Personal and Real Property Equally Apportioned — No Abuse of Discretion Shown: Where the parties to a divorce proceeding owned a residence, personal property, and other real property used as rental units by the parties, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in apportioning the marital property when it awarded the residence and a portion of the personal property, valued at $46,403, to the wife and the rental units and personal property, valued at $43,008, to the husband, and the wife was ordered to pay the husband $587.23. From these facts it appeared that the District Court had ordered a substantially equal division. Holston v. Holston, 205 M 470, 668 P2d 1048, 40 St. Rep. 1435 (1983).

Other Relevant Factors: The husband contended the District Court erred in distributing property, including property acquired prior to marriage. The Supreme Court held that marriage is not a business relationship. Equitable distribution of marital assets depends upon more than just each party's initial financial contribution to the relationship. Many other relevant factors are found in 40-4-202(1). The court gave consideration to the parties' occupations, amounts and sources of income, vocational skills, employability, estates, needs, and opportunities for future acquisition of capital assets and income. There was no abuse of discretion in distributing the marital estate. Vance v. Vance, 204 M 267, 664 P2d 907, 40 St. Rep. 836 (1983), as related to denial of mistrial based on failure to consider allegations of marital misconduct, followed in In re Marriage of Fitzmorris, 229 M 96, 745 P2d 353, 44 St. Rep. 1809 (1987). Proper for Ill Husband to Receive Greater Portion of Marital Estate: A 41-year-old wife was in good health, regularly employed, and had excellent future employment opportunities. The 45-year-old husband was in poor health due to a stroke, was unemployed, and had a limited chance of future employment. It was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to award the husband a greater portion of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Crabtree, 200 M 178, 651 P2d 29, 39 St. Rep. 1668 (1982).

Contributions of Spouse

Consideration of Contribution of Nonacquiring Spouse Required — Gifted Property Included at Court's Discretion — Absence of Significant Spousal Contribution: In evaluating whether preacquired or gifted property should be included in the marital estate, a District Court is required to consider the contributions of the nonacquiring spouse, including the nonmonetary contributions of a homemaker. When the nonmonetary contributions of a homemaker are found to have facilitated the maintenance of preacquired or gifted property, the court may include that property in the marital estate. However, in the absence of a significant contribution on the part of the nonacquiring spouse, the court is free to exclude gifted assets or property from the marital estate. In the present case, the court did not clearly err in finding an absence of a significant contribution by the wife to the increase of value of stock, as supported by substantial credible evidence, and the court properly applied this section in concluding that the value of the husband's gifted stock shares should not be included in the marital estate. Inclusion of Entire Appraised Value of Residence in Marital Estate Rather Than Appreciation in Value Accrued During Marriage Not Error — Significant Contributions of Spouse: The District Court included the entire appraised value of the family residence in the marital estate, rather than the appreciation in value accrued during the marriage. The husband contended that the spouses should not share equally in the total value of the home because it came from his mother. The court found that the wife's contributions to the marriage were significant and did not err in concluding that her contributions facilitated the maintenance and preservation of the family residence, entitling her to an equitable share of the preserved value. Findings Regarding Wife's Minor Contributions to Marital Estate as Homemaker Affirmed: In considering wife Sue's marital contributions, the District Court relied on substantial evidence in finding that Sue made only minor contributions to the parties' ranching operation; was not employed outside the home; and employed housekeepers, nannies, and ranch hands to assist with household and ranch duties; and that most of Sue's contribution to the maintenance of the marital estate consisted of spending her husband's money. In re Marriage of Pfeifer, 282 M 461, 938 P2d 684, 54 St. Rep. 432 (1997).

Distribution of Gift, Inheritance, and Premarital Property — Contributions of Nonacquiring Spouse to Be Considered — No Gender Bias: In distributing premarital property or its increased value or property acquired by gift or inheritance, the court must consider the contributions of the nonacquiring spouse. In this case, wife was the beneficiary of two trusts acquired prior to marriage. She was sole trustor and beneficiary of the trusts. Notwithstanding husband's contention that he was entitled to some benefit from the trusts as a result of his nonmonetary contributions of emotional support, child care, and homemaking skills, the District Court properly held that husband was not entitled to any of the trust assets because he failed to demonstrate that his actions in any way maintained or increased the value of the corpus of the trusts. None of husband's support efforts substantially aided in the accumulation or maintenance of the trust assets acquired prior to marriage. Further, husband's contention that he was treated differently by the court by virtue of his gender because he was a male engaged in the nontraditional role of homemaker and caretaker was unfounded. Had gender been reversed, given husband's lack of enhancement or maintenance of the premarital assets, the results would have been the same. Five-Month Marriage — Wife's Right to Share in House for Which Husband Paid: The lower court's grant of a $6,000 equity share in a house valued at $64,000 was reversed because husband made the downpayment and the mortgage, tax, and insurance payments, wife did not substantially contribute to the value of the house monetarily or as a homemaker, and the parties separated 5 months after the wedding. General Contributions as Basis for Award of Half of Appreciation of Property Husband Brought to Marriage: Wife who, among other things, remodeled and painted buildings on the parties' various properties, performed daily housekeeping, and kept the marital financial records and who contributed in some fashion, though not significantly, to the maintenance and appreciation of two properties husband brought to the marriage was properly awarded one-half the value of the appreciation of the two properties. Temporary Maintenance in Lieu of Larger Portion of Marital Estate: The Supreme Court upheld the lower court's award of temporary maintenance in lieu of a larger portion of the marital estate in light of the wife's contributions as mother and homemaker and in consideration of each party's future earning capacity. In re Marriage of Tahija, 253 M 505, 833 P2d 1095, 49 St. Rep. 571 (1992).

Abuse of Discretion in Not Awarding Wife Greater Equity in Farm Business: Shortly after separation, the husband set up a solely owned corporation to manage his interest in his family's newly reorganized farm business. The Supreme Court held that the lower court abused its discretion in awarding the wife only $2,500 of the $31,600 in equity in her husband's corporation in light of her contributions during the marriage. In re Marriage of McFarland, 240 M 209, 783 P2d 409, 46 St. Rep. 2060 (1989).

Unconscionability Standard — Applies Only to Separation Agreements: In a divorce proceeding, the trial court stated that the wife's contribution in raising three children and running the family home was negligible and that therefore it was not unconscionable to give the husband 75% of the marital property. The Supreme Court reversed the decision, ruling that the standard of conscionability only applies to separation agreements and in divorce proceedings the property must be divided on an equitable basis. The court also ruled that the lower court had abused its discretion in finding that the wife's contribution was negligible. In re Marriage of Miller, 238 M 197, 777 P2d 319, 46 St. Rep. 1199 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Davies, 266 M 466, 880 P2d 1368, 51 St. Rep. 929 (1994).

Equal Division of Military Pension — Wife's Contribution as Homemaker: The District Court did not err in equally dividing the present value of husband's military pension after finding wife had foregone employment and the attendant retirement benefits in order to raise the children and maintain the family home. Additionally, her contribution as homemaker helped husband acquire two college degrees and a significantly higher earning capacity than her own. In re Marriage of Luisi, 232 M 243, 756 P2d 456, 45 St. Rep. 1023 (1988).

Contribution of Wife as Homemaker and Mother Valid Basis for Equal Division of Marital Property: The District Court, after reciting the substantial contributions of the husband in working the ranch and the wife as homemaker and mother, did not abuse its discretion by awarding each party one-half of the marital estate. The court followed the statutory mandate of 40-4-202 to consider the contribution of a spouse as homemaker and mother. Jacobson v. Jacobson, 183 M 517, 600 P2d 1183 (1979), followed in In re Marriage of Davies, 266 M 466, 880 P2d 1368, 51 St. Rep. 929 (1994). Orders as to Property: The court held that the wife, by virtue of her 14 years as mother, housewife, and part-time ranch hand, acquired a vested interest in the major marital asset, which was ranch property, regardless of its source and title. Equal Division

Difference of One-Third of One Percent in Total Value of Marital Estate Considered Equitable: A husband and wife agreed in their settlement to an equal distribution of the marital estate. The total value of the estate was $407,465.34, and the final distribution favored the wife by $1,223.67, so the husband appealed because the distribution was not equal. The unequal distribution amounted to about 1/3 of 1% of the total value, a shortfall to the husband of 1/6 of 1% of the total value. The Supreme Court considered the distribution to be sufficiently equal to meet the terms of the parties' agreement, and the distribution was affirmed. In re Marriage of Hochhalter, 2001 MT 268, 307 M 261, __P3d__ (2001).

Trial Court Discretion in Discounting Stock and Considering Profit-Sharing Plan — No Fault Ascribed to Findings and Assignment of Debt: The wife claimed error in division of marital property because the trial court imposed a de facto stock discount on shares of the husband's corporation, failed to include the interest in the husband's profit-sharing plan, and interjected fault into a no-fault dissolution through consideration of the fact that the wife's management of the family casino had resulted in large debts to the marital estate. The Supreme Court affirmed on each issue. The trial court was within its discretion in setting the stock value within the range of evidence presented at trial, and in light of the considerable amount of debt ascribed to the husband, it was reasonable for the court to grant the husband his profit-sharing plan proceeds. As to the claim of fault, the financial findings that the wife took issue with were proper and aided the court in considering the equitable distribution of the property, so no fault was interjected through the court's consideration of the business debts. Error in Failure of District Court to Impose Constructive Trust When Unjust Enrichment Would Result: Steve's parents advanced his wife Julie and him money to purchase marital property, and even though the advance was repaid, the parents retained title to the property and paid taxes and insurance on it. When the question arose as to division of the marital estate, the District Court concluded that a constructive trust should not be imposed because there was no evidence of fraud or other wrongful acts to support such a remedy. Although a constructive trust may be imposed because the titleholder obtained title by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, violation of a trust, or other wrongful act, these factors are not necessarily a prerequisite to imposing a constructive trust pursuant to 72-33-219. A constructive trust may also be imposed in cases when a titleholder innocently obtained title to property but would be unjustly enriched if allowed to retain title. In light of the fact that the initial purchase price was repaid, that Steve paid for improvements on the property, and that the parties acted as though Steve and Julie owned the property, the parents would have been unjustly enriched if they retained title. The District Court erred in not imposing a constructive trust in favor of Steve and Julie. The District Court was instructed to impose an equitable duty on Steve's parents to convey the property to Steve and Julie and to fully apportion the full value of the property when distributing the marital estate. In re Marriage of Moss, 1999 MT 62, 293 M 500, 977 P2d 322, 56 St. Rep. 257 (1999).

Error in Finding Husband Had Only One-Half Interest in Property Purchased With Advance From Parents: Steve's parents advanced his wife Julie and him money to purchase marital property, and even though the advance was repaid, the parents retained title to the property and paid taxes and insurance on it. Testimony was conflicting as to who had interest in the property and in what amount. When the question arose as to division of the marital estate, the District Court concluded that Steve's parents had advanced the money for the purchase of an interest in the property and that because Steve had repaid his parents in cash, he had a one-half interest as well. Thus, the court included only one-half the value of the property in the value of the marital estate. However, testimony from Julie and her parents indicated that once the property was paid for, Steve and Julie intended to put the property in their names and build a home there. Reversing, the Supreme Court decided that there was insufficient evidence for the conclusion that Steve had only a one-half interest and that the District Court erred in not imposing a constructive trust on the property so that Steve's parents would not be unjustly enriched. The District Court was instructed to impose an equitable duty on Steve's parents to convey the property to Steve and Julie and to fully apportion the full value of the property when distributing the marital estate. In re Marriage of Moss, 1999 MT 62, 293 M 500, 977 P2d 322, 56 St. Rep. 257 (1999).

Income Disparity Balanced by Property Division: Wife contended that because of the disparity between incomes, she should have been awarded additional income-producing property in order to ensure that she could continue to enjoy the standard of living that she had while married. Noting that she had been awarded $335,465 in property, $400,000 in cash, $6,977 a month in child support, and a temporary possessory interest in a 160-acre ranch worth at least $480,000, the Supreme Court held that this award would enable her to maintain her standard of living and provide her with the opportunity to acquire income or assets in the future, meeting her needs when perhaps her own earning power would not. The property division brought the income disparity reasonably into balance and did not constitute error. In re Marriage of Pfeifer, 282 M 461, 938 P2d 684, 54 St. Rep. 432 (1997), distinguishing In re Marriage of Smith, 191 M 200, 622 P2d 1022 (1981).

Unequal Property Division Offset by Increased Maintenance Award: Wife contended that the division of property in an amount equaling 78% to the husband and 22% to the wife was in error under the rationale of In re Marriage of Berthiaume, 173 M 421, 567 P2d 1388 (1977), which held that it is a clear abuse of discretion for a trial court to find that marital property should be divided as equally as possible and then to grant one party the majority of the property without making any offset provision for the other party. Distinguishing In re Marriage of Berthiaume, the Supreme Court cited In re Marriage of Fitzmorris, 229 M 96, 745 P2d 353 (1987), for the proposition that an equitable division need not be an equal division and noted that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in this case because the difference in the values of the properties was made up by increasing the amount of maintenance awarded to wife. In re Marriage of Corey, 266 M 304, 880 P2d 824, 51 St. Rep. 859 (1994).

Eighty-Four Percent/Sixteen Percent Division Upheld as Equitable: Joseph Barker appealed the District Court's division of the marital estate that gave Kristeen Barker the family home and 45% of his future military pension, resulting in an 84% to 16% split of the net assets. The Supreme Court reviewed the findings of the lower court with respect to income potential, present expenses, and contributions to preserving the family home and determined that the District Court had not abused its discretion but had arrived at an equitable rather than equal division of the property. In re Marriage of Barker, 264 M 110, 870 P2d 86, 51 St. Rep. 176 (1994).

No Modification Because of Unexpected Drop in Cattle Price: Despite a court order to equally divide marital property, husband entered into an agreement to pay $4,600 for ex-wife's interest in cattle. When the actual sales price of the cattle resulted in husband receiving less than 50% of the proceeds, the husband, citing the original court order for equal division, requested the court to modify the allocation of proceeds. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's denial of modification, holding that the husband's agreement to buy the wife's interest satisfied the parties' obligation to equally divide the proceeds. The fact that the wife received more than 50% of the cattle's actual value was a result of the agreement and not the court's decree. In re Marriage of Scoffield, 258 M 337, 852 P2d 664, 50 St. Rep. 560 (1993).

Error to Award Husband One-Half of Proceeds of Sale of Home: When wife had $23,000 in equity in the home and had purchased her former husband's one-half interest in the home for $23,000, it was error for the court to award her second husband one-half interest in the proceeds of the sale of the home. The second husband may be entitled to a portion of the appreciation in value of the home if his contributions during the marriage contributed to the appreciation in the value of the home. In re Marriage of Rock, 257 M 476, 850 P2d 296, 50 St. Rep. 369 (1993).

Expected Inheritance: Basing a wife's future acquisition on an inheritance to be received upon the death of her father is highly speculative and inappropriate. The District Court did not err in failing to take into consideration the possible inheritance. Marriage of Johnston, 249 M 298, 815 P2d 1145, 48 St. Rep. 677 (1991).

Gifts From Wife's Father Property of Wife: During the course of the marriage, wife's father gave the couple numerous gifts, the value of which exceeded the net worth of the couple. The most significant gift was Bismarck Bottling stock. Upon dissolution, the District Court awarded wife the stock and half the appreciation in the investment account. The District Court awarded husband half of the appreciation in the investment account plus an additional amount in consideration of his contributions to that appreciation. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in allocating the proceeds of the stock. Marriage of Johnston, 249 M 298, 815 P2d 1145, 48 St. Rep. 677 (1991).

Equal Division of Value of Home Proper: Husband contended that an equal division of the value of the family home, which required he pay wife $44,892, was inequitable because the marriage was of short duration, producing no children, and that wife did not contribute to the marital assets. There was no abuse of discretion by the court because evidence showed: (1) wife had receipts totaling nearly $7,000 and testified she contributed $10,000 toward the value of the home; (2) wife assisted in painting the interior of the home, selected draperies and carpeting, and did cooking, cleaning, housework, and laundry during the marriage; and (3) husband had the financial means to pay $44,892. In re Marriage of Mahaffey, 245 M 424, 801 P2d 1335, 47 St. Rep. 1172 (1990).

Desire to Keep Farm Intact Justifying Cash Award: The husband appealed the large cash award made to the wife as part of the property settlement. The Supreme Court affirmed the award on the basis that the parties wanted to keep the family farm intact and therefore it was awarded to the husband. Since the wife was receiving no income-producing property, the large cash award was necessary to achieve an equitable settlement. In re Marriage of Ernst, 243 M 114, 793 P2d 777, 47 St. Rep. 1034 (1990).

Equity, Not Equality, as Guide in Division of Marital Estate: The husband contended that a property division was inequitable on its face because Montana law favors equal division of assets. This was a misstatement of the law. Equity, not equality, should guide the District Court's discretion in dividing the marital estate. In re Marriage of Fitzmorris, 229 M 96, 745 P2d 353, 44 St. Rep. 1809 (1987), followed in In re Marriage of Scott, 254 M 81, 835 P2d 710, 49 St. Rep. 634 (1992), In re Marriage of Zander, 262 M 215, 864 P2d 1225, 50 St. Rep. 1522 (1993), and In re Marriage of Corey, 266 M 304, 880 P2d 824, 51 St. Rep. 859 (1994). Factors Considered in Equal Division: The District Court did not err in dividing marital property on a 50-50 basis when the division was based on the nature of the assets, contributions of the parties, education and employment backgrounds and prospects of the parties, the health of the parties, and the needs of both parties as parents. In re Marriage of Hammill, 225 M 263, 732 P2d 403, 44 St. Rep. 220 (1987).

Equal Division of Assets Not Required: Although the District Court may equally divide the marital assets, such a distribution is not required by 40-4-202. Jacobson v. Jacobson, 183 M 517, 600 P2d 1183 (1979); Aanenson v. Aanenson, 183 M 229, 598 P2d 1120 (1979); In re Marriage of Eklund, 236 M 77, 768 P2d 340, 46 St. Rep. 194 (1989). Equal Contributions:

District Court, which concluded that parties made approximately equal contributions to accumulation of property, including family home, did not abuse its discretion in rendering judgment which effected equal property division based on equal contributions by each party. Zell v. Zell, 174 M 216, 570 P2d 33 (1977).

Divorce court did not abuse its discretion in effecting equal property division based upon equal contributions by each party. Eschenburg v. Eschenburg, 171 M 247, 557 P2d 1014 (1976).

Court's Power to Equally Divide Marital Property: Equal division of property accumulated during marriage was not unreasonable and was within court's power even though husband had made greater contributions during marriage and most of the property was held in his name. Cook v. Cook, 159 M 98, 495 P2d 591 (1972).

Prior-Acquired, Gifted, or Inherited Property

Failure to Contribute to Home That Did Not Appreciate in Value During Marriage: Although the wife contributed for 14 months as a homemaker to a home that the husband acquired shortly before the marriage, the evidence was that the house was worth less upon dissolution of the marriage than what the husband paid for it. In addition, it appeared that the total marital estate did not increase in value during the marriage. The District Court erred when it included the home in the marital estate and awarded a portion of the value of it to the wife without finding that it had appreciated in value during the marriage and that her contributions facilitated the maintenance of the home or served as an alternative to maintenance arrangements. In re Marriage of Rolf, 2000 MT 361, 303 M 349, 16 P3d 345, 57 St. Rep. 1536 (2000).

Inheritance Advance Properly Excluded in Equity From Marital Estate: As an estate planning device, a couple was able to purchase a home from the husband's mother valued at $131,000 for $50,000, representing an advance on the husband's inheritance of $81,000. In distributing the marital estate, the District Court subtracted the husband's inheritance advance, as well as the remaining debts on the residence, from the appraised value of the home and then divided the equity in the home and the marital debt equally, except for a credit to the husband for one-half the debts that he paid after separation. The wife claimed error in excluding the $81,000, arguing that the property was comingled with the marital property, that her contributions to the property were significant, and that the gift was to the two of them as a couple, not to the husband alone. Affirming, the Supreme Court found that the division of marital equity in the home was logical and that the husband was entitled to an exclusion from the marital estate in the amount that represented an advance on his inheritance, which was the $81,000 difference between the amount that the couple purchased the home for and the value of the home at the time of purchase. Because of the wife's significant contributions to the value of the home, she was entitled to one-half of any equity in the house that represented the amount paid for the house during the marriage, in addition to the appreciation that occurred during the marriage, but she was not entitled to the equity in the house that represented a gift from the husband's mother. Siefke v. Siefke, 2000 MT 281, 302 M 157, 13 P3d 937, 57 St. Rep. 1175 (2000).

No Contribution by Wife to Husband's Inherited Property — Proper Designation as Nonmarital Property: The husband inherited farm property in Illinois, in which the wife claimed an interest upon dissolution of the marriage. The District Court held that the property was not part of the marital estate, and the Supreme Court agreed. A nonacquiring spouse is entitled to an equitable share of only the appreciated or preserved value of the inherited property that is attributable to that spouse's contributions. Here, neither spouse contributed to the appreciation or preservation of the property, worked on the farm, or made any sort of sacrifice that would increase or preserve the value of the property, which remained separate throughout the marriage. The wife was not entitled to the property simply by virtue of being the family homemaker without proof that she had somehow contributed to an appreciation in the value of the property during the marriage. The Illinois farm and the proceeds from its partial sale were traceable to the original inheritance and were properly treated as nonmarital property. In re Marriage of Stoneman, 2000 MT 274, 302 M 107, 14 P3d 12, 57 St. Rep. 1145 (2000). See also In re Marriage of Smith, 264 M 306, 871 P2d 884 (1994).

Consideration of Contribution of Nonacquiring Spouse Required — Gifted Property Included at Court's Discretion — Absence of Significant Spousal Contribution: In evaluating whether preacquired or gifted property should be included in the marital estate, a District Court is required to consider the contributions of the nonacquiring spouse, including the nonmonetary contributions of a homemaker. When the nonmonetary contributions of a homemaker are found to have facilitated the maintenance of preacquired or gifted property, the court may include that property in the marital estate. However, in the absence of a significant contribution on the part of the nonacquiring spouse, the court is free to exclude gifted assets or property from the marital estate. In the present case, the court did not clearly err in finding an absence of a significant contribution by the wife to the increase of value of stock, as supported by substantial credible evidence, and the court properly applied this section in concluding that the value of the husband's gifted stock shares should not be included in the marital estate. Entitlement to Equitable Share of Preserved Value of Property Based on Spouse's Indirect Contributions in Maintaining Property: The husband and wife enjoyed a very comfortable standard of living by using all their income for their needs and comforts with little or no income saved, intending to preserve the value of a Nebraska farm for retirement. The husband inherited the farm, and it was in his name. When dividing the marital estate, the husband contended that the wife was not entitled to a portion of the value of the farm because she did not contribute money for it. With respect to inherited property, a District Court must consider the contributions of the nonacquiring spouse to the marriage, including: (1) nonmonetary contributions of a homemaker; (2) the extent to which nonmonetary contributions facilitated the maintenance of the property; and (3) whether or not the property division serves as an alternative to maintenance arrangements. In the present case, although the wife did not contribute directly to the farm, the couple justified the assumption of high marital debts upon the fact that they intended to preserve the value of the husband's inheritance; therefore, in contributing as a homemaker and in allowing her earnings to be entirely dissipated in reliance upon her husband's inheritance, the wife indirectly facilitated the maintenance of the farm property and accordingly was entitled to an equitable share of its preserved value. In re Marriage of Foreman, 1999 MT 89, 294 M 181, 979 P2d 193, 56 St. Rep. 373 (1999), following Hill v. Hill, 197 M 451, 643 P2d 582, 39 St. Rep. 723 (1982), and distinguishing In re Marriage of Engen, 1998 MT 153, 961 P2d 738, 55 St. Rep. 595 (1998).

Even Split of Account Both Contributed to — Refusal to Give Husband Full Value of His Contributions: Dennis brought $7,705 to the marriage and established a joint account from which the couple drew to pay bills and fund projects around the house. He also deposited $5,200 that he received during the marriage from disposition of a property interest that he acquired before the marriage. Martha deposited in the account money that she received from a previous employer's profit-sharing plan. They also deposited the proceeds of a home equity loan. Martha did most of the cooking and housework and payment of bills, thus contributing to maintenance of the account because such work would have otherwise been expenses of the marriage if done by someone else. The lower court did not abuse its discretion in evenly splitting the funds in the account upon dissolution of the marriage and in refusing to give Dennis the $7,705 originally in the account. In re Marriage of Hogstad, 275 M 489, 914 P2d 584, 53 St. Rep. 257 (1996).

Prior-Acquired Land That Spouse Did Not Contribute to Maintenance or Appreciation Of: Before marrying, Dennis acquired a property interest for $8,000. Upon dissolution of the marriage, the property had appreciated to $21,500 in value. Martha's contributions as a homemaker did not contribute to the maintenance and appreciation in value of the property. The District Court erred in giving Dennis $8,000 and one-half of the difference between $21,500 and $8,000 as his share of the value of the property. He should have been given the entire $21,500 value of the property. In re Marriage of Hogstad, 275 M 489, 914 P2d 584, 53 St. Rep. 257 (1996).

Prior-Acquired Assets Held Not Part of Marital Estate: Nordberg argued that the lower court erred in omitting his ex-wife's property from the marital estate. The Supreme Court held that those assets belonging to a spouse prior to a marriage or acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent during the marriage are not part of the marital estate unless the other spouse made contributions in the preservation or interest in the property. In re Marriage of Nordberg, 265 M 352, 877 P2d 987, 51 St. Rep. 531 (1994).

Lack of Spouse's Facilitation of Premarital Property as Precluding Proportionate Share of Estate: Wife objected to the amount she received in a dissolution proceeding based on percentage comparisons indicating a disproportionate property division. Husband brought substantially more property to the marriage, and wife's contribution to the maintenance of the property was minimal. A horseracing business was acquired with husband's premarital funds, but wife's efforts did not facilitate the business in light of the fact that the business lost about $231,000 during the marriage. Wife's award of a disproportionate share of the premarital property was therefore proper. In re Marriage of Scott, 254 M 81, 835 P2d 710, 49 St. Rep. 634 (1992).

Law Partnership Interest as Sole Property — Exclusion From Estate Proper: Husband acquired his interest in a law firm prior to marriage. Wife's nonmonetary contributions to the marriage did not facilitate the maintenance of the partnership asset. The District Court properly found that the partnership interest was husband's sole property and excluded the asset from the marital estate. In re Marriage of Gallagher, 248 M 100, 809 P2d 579, 48 St. Rep. 346 (1991).

Military Benefits From Prior Marriage Part of Marital Estate: In a dissolution case, the husband was awarded a military pension and disability pension that had accrued during a prior marriage. The Supreme Court held that the military benefits did constitute part of the marital assets of the second marriage. In re Marriage of Cooper, 243 M 175, 793 P2d 810, 47 St. Rep. 1112 (1990), partially overruled and clarified in In re Marriage of Murphy, 261 M 363, 862 P2d 1143, 50 St. Rep. 1360 (1993).

Property Acquired Prior to Marriage:

When a special master determined that in order to determine the value of each party's individual property it was necessary to consider joint assets and obligations acquired after engagement but before marriage, it was not error for the District Court to consider all the parties' mutual financial transactions and include premarital assets in the marital estate. Further, inclusion of premarital assets did not result in distribution of more than 100% of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Peterson, 238 M 470, 778 P2d 402, 46 St. Rep. 1424 (1989).

The District Court awarded equal shares in the equity of the family home to each party, although husband had owned the property prior to the marriage. Where wife had contributed to maintenance of the home and the home was mortgaged for the purpose of investing in joint business operations in which both spouses were involved, the division of equity in the property settlement was not reversible error. In re Marriage of Syljuberget, 234 M 178, 763 P2d 323, 45 St. Rep. 1825 (1988).

When property acquired by one party prior to marriage is subject to division in a dissolution proceeding, the District Court must consider the origin of the property, but the property acquired prior to marriage is still subject to division. Equitable apportionment does not require the parties be returned to their premarital status. In re Marriage of White, 218 M 343, 708 P2d 267, 42 St. Rep. 1634 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Roullier, 229 M 348, 746 P2d 1081, 44 St. Rep. 2035 (1987), and In re Marriage of Walls, 278 M 413, 925 P2d 483, 53 St. Rep. 974 (1996).

District Court was not compelled in annulment action to order property acquired in joint names of husband and wife before marriage sold and proceeds divided equally between parties, but had right under evidence to find that husband had no ownership rights in property and to award property to wife on ground that husband's name was placed on deed only as security for downpayment loan made on property. Houser v. Houser, 173 M 65, 566 P2d 73 (1977).

Settlement Proceeds From Lawsuit Concerning Real Property in Community Property State Subject to Equitable Distribution: Prior to divorce, the husband and wife sued the husband's father over real estate located in California, resulting in a money judgment against the father. During the divorce proceeding, the husband argued that the real property, located in a community property state, had been gifted to him by his father and could not be considered part of the marital estate. The lower court's decision to divide the judgment proceeds equally was affirmed on appeal. The Supreme Court ruled that although Montana courts have no jurisdiction over real property located outside the state, the lawsuit in California had transformed the nature of the property to personal property over which Montana courts do have jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Grecian, 238 M 125, 777 P2d 283, 46 St. Rep. 1142 (1989).

Exclusion of Expected Inheritance: Husband claimed the District Court should have included the value of wife's expected inheritance in the marital estate. As held in Becker v. Becker, 218 M 229, 707 P2d 526, 42 St. Rep. 1541 (1985), property gifted during marriage may be excluded from the marital estate when an objecting spouse can claim no contribution to the property's value. Likewise, an expectation of property may be similarly excluded. In re Marriage of Dalley, 232 M 235, 756 P2d 1131, 45 St. Rep. 1017 (1988).

Expectation of Inheritance: The court properly considered the husband's expectation of an inheritance in making an equitable division of the marital property. Under this section, the District Court must consider the future acquisition of assets in proceedings to divide property on dissolution of a marriage. The court might have erred if it had failed to consider the husband's expectation of an inheritance. In re Marriage of Alt, 218 M 327, 708 P2d 258, 42 St. Rep. 1621 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Johns, 238 M 256, 776 P2d 839, 46 St. Rep. 1249 (1989), and in In re Marriage of Isaak, 257 M 176, 848 P2d 1014, 50 St. Rep. 219 (1993).

Wife's Gift Stock Excluded — Husband's Stock Acquired With Contribution of Wife Included in Estate: The wife's stock in a farm received during marriage as a gift from her parents was properly excluded from marital estate because the husband made no contribution to gain or facilitate maintenance of it. However, the lower court properly included in the marital estate the value of stock acquired by husband in his father's business. The wife's nonmonetary contributions as a homemaker assisted husband in devoting time to employment that ultimately resulted in husband's stock acquisition. The husband's stock was a product of the marital effort. Becker v. Becker, 218 M 229, 707 P2d 526, 42 St. Rep. 1541 (1985). The rationale of excluding gift stock from the marital estate was applied even in a case where husband arguably contributed to increasing the value of the stock through his labor because he was salaried and there was no agreement that he would receive stock as compensation. In re Marriage of Barnard, 241 M 147, 785 P2d 1387, 47 St. Rep. 152 (1990).

Land Bought With Wife's Premarital Money and Husband's Marital Income — Even Distribution of Proceeds of Sale: The lower court was within its discretion in equally dividing the proceeds of the sale of a piece of property, despite wife's claim that she used $5,000 from her premarital savings for its downpayment, because husband's income was used for the rest of the payments. In re Marriage of Perry, 217 M 162, 704 P2d 41, 42 St. Rep. 1101 (1985).

Distribution of Residence of Parties Based on "Tracing" of Trust Funds Acquired by Gift: Where the parties to a dissolution proceeding acquired a new residence and maintained that residence with funds obtained from a trust established by a gift of money to the wife from her father, the District Court did not err in awarding the new residence only to the wife, as there was sufficient evidence that the funds used were hers. Glasser v. Glasser, 206 M 77, 669 P2d 685, 40 St. Rep. 1518 (1983).

Other Relevant Factors: The husband contended the District Court erred in distributing property, including property acquired prior to marriage. The Supreme Court held that marriage is not a business relationship. Equitable distribution of marital assets depends upon more than just each party's initial financial contribution to the relationship. Many other relevant factors are found in 40-4-202(1). The court gave consideration to the parties' occupations, amounts and sources of income, vocational skills, employability, estates, needs, and opportunities for future acquisition of capital assets and income. There was no abuse of discretion in distributing the marital estate. Vance v. Vance, 204 M 267, 664 P2d 907, 40 St. Rep. 836 (1983), as related to denial of mistrial based on failure to consider allegations of marital misconduct, followed in In re Marriage of Fitzmorris, 229 M 96, 745 P2d 353, 44 St. Rep. 1809 (1987). See also In re Marriage of Dalley, 232 M 235, 756 P2d 1131, 45 St. Rep. 1017 (1988).

Property Brought to Marriage as Supporting Unequal Distribution of Property — Equity in Family Home: Where the appellant and respondent were twice married to and divorced from one another, and the respondent wife brought to the second marriage the family home from the first marriage, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in awarding the entire equity in the home to the respondent upon the second divorce. Of all of the factors considered by the District Court in the property division, the court correctly considered the contributions of the parties to be most important, other factors being substantially equal between the parties. Because the assets brought to the second marriage by the respondent, including the family home, were greater than those contributed by the appellant, the respondent's contribution during the marriage exceeded the appellant's. Parenteau v. Parenteau, 204 M 239, 664 P2d 900, 40 St. Rep. 815 (1983).

Previously Owned Real Property Subject to Distribution: Where real property owned by the husband prior to the marriage of the parties was transferred in joint tenancy to the wife during the marriage, the District Court did not err in refusing to set aside that transfer and to consider only the profits from the sale of the property as subject to distribution. Section 40-4-202 makes it clear that the disputed property is subject to equitable distribution upon dissolution of the marriage. Beck v. Beck, 193 M 166, 631 P2d 282, 38 St. Rep. 1054 (1981).

Award of Equal Interest in Property Purchased by Husband Before Marriage: Where both parties to a dissolution contributed to the maintenance of certain real property purchased by the husband prior to the marriage, and both were responsible for their separation which caused a dissipation of the marital estate, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in awarding the wife an equal interest in the real property. Schultz v. Schultz, 188 M 363, 613 P2d 1022 (1980), proper findings and conclusions made and judgment affirmed. In re Marriage of Schultz, 203 M 473, 662 P2d 286, 40 St. Rep. 576 (1983).

Distribution of Property Acquired by Gift: In making an equitable division of marital property upon dissolution, property acquired by gift must be traceable before the District Court is required to make specific findings regarding the property. If none of the value of the property is a product of contribution from the marital effort, the District Court can justifiably find that the nonacquiring spouse has no interest in the property. If, on the other hand, both parties to the marriage contribute to the maintenance and thus the appreciated value of the gift property, it is inequitable to award the nonacquiring spouse only a fraction of the value of the asset upon dissolution. Here, where the majority of the property was acquired from the wife's father, a 50/50 division of marital property was an abuse of discretion. Herron v. Herron, 186 M 396, 608 P2d 97 (1980), followed in In re Marriage of Luisi, 232 M 243, 756 P2d 456, 45 St. Rep. 1023 (1988), and In re Marriage of Engen, 1998 MT 153, 289 M 299, 961 P2d 738, 55 St. Rep. 595 (1998), and distinguished in In re Marriage of Dalley, 232 M 235, 756 P2d 1131, 45 St. Rep. 1017 (1988); distinguished from ranching situations where District Court determines that wife's interest in ranch property, regardless of source (for example, received by gift), was earned by her contributions as a homemaker. Prior-Acquired and Gifted Property — Disposition: The trial court found the wife had not contributed financially to property gifted to the husband during the marriage and property acquired by the husband prior to the marriage, and that her contribution as a homemaker had not facilitated maintenance of that property. Any increase in the value of the property was the result of inflation. Such findings were not clearly erroneous, unsupported by the evidence, or made arbitrarily without employment of conscientious judgment or in excess of the bounds of reason. Jacobson v. Jacobson, 183 M 517, 600 P2d 1183 (1979); In re Marriage of Jorgensen, 180 M 294, 590 P2d 606 (1979).

Equitable Division of Property — However Acquired: The lower court's disposition of marital property did not constitute an abuse of discretion in the form of an award to the wife of property with an aggregate value of $8,000 although the husband alleged that only $1,550 worth of property was acquired during marriage. This section calls for an equitable division of marital property by the court, regardless of however or whenever acquired or in whose name the property is held. Houtchens v. Houtchens, 181 M 70, 592 P2d 158 (1979), followed in In re Marriage of Schultz, 199 M 332, 649 P2d 1268, 39 St. Rep. 1435 (1982), and In re Marriage of Gauthier, 201 M 320, 654 P2d 517, 39 St. Rep. 2137 (1982).

Apportionment — Factors Considered: In apportionment of marital property, an inheritance of one of the parties is a factor to be considered as property "however and whenever acquired". Morse v. Morse, 174 M 541, 571 P2d 1147 (1977). See also In re Marriage of Alt, 218 M 327, 708 P2d 258, 42 St. Rep. 1621 (1985).

Pension Benefits

Marital Misconduct Not Factor in Equitable Distribution of Marital Assets — Portion of Husband's Retirement Funds Awarded to Wife Who Depleted Her Own Retirement in Restitution for Criminal Offense: The wife was convicted of embezzling nearly $25,000 from her employer and made restitution from her retirement account. The parties later sought a divorce, and the District Court awarded the wife one-fourth of her husband's retirement funds, plus child support and maintenance conditioned upon the wife's management of her personal finances according to the court's requirements. The husband appealed the pension distribution, citing 1-3-208 for the proposition that his wife's crime and consequent restitution resulted in dissipation of the marital assets and that she should not be allowed to take advantage of her own wrong. The Supreme Court declined to apply a general maxim of jurisprudence in light of the specific provisions of this section, which preclude consideration of marital misconduct as a factor in the equitable distribution of marital property. The record showed that the husband also contributed to dissipation of the estate. The trial court conducted a thorough analysis in equity of the required statutory factors in determining how to allocate the marital estate in toto. Its findings were not clearly erroneous and were thus affirmed. In re Marriage of Kotecki, 2000 MT 254, 301 M 460, 10 P3d 828, 57 St. Rep. 1043 (2000).

Veteran Disability Benefits Federally Protected From Inclusion in Marital Estate — Disability Benefits Considered in Award of Spousal or Child Support as Party's Ability to Earn Income: The District Court included a portion of the husband's Veterans Benefits Association (VA) disability benefits as part of the division of marital property. The Supreme Court held that under the antiattachment clause of 38 U.S.C. 5301, VA disability benefits are federally protected from inclusion in the marital estate. In enacting that section and the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act, 10 U.S.C. 1408, Congress preempted state courts from including VA disability benefits in the marital estate because VA disability benefits are not considered "disposable retired pay" to be treated as marital property. An award of VA disability benefits upon dissolution amounts to a seizure of those benefits in violation of 38 U.S.C. 5301. To avoid damaging federal objectives, the property division dictates of this section must yield to the federal law. Consistent with both federal and state law, a District Court may consider VA disability benefits in the same way that it considers each party's ability to earn income after dissolution as an important factor in achieving an equitable property division, including consideration of the military disability retirement pay as a source of income in the award of spousal maintenance or child support, or generally as an economic circumstance of the parties justifying a disproportionate award of marital property to the nonretiree spouse. Thus, disability payments should not, either in form or substance, be treated as marital property subject to division upon dissolution. However, under Rose v. Rose, 481 US 619 (1987), a state court is free to consider postdissolution disability income and to order a disabled veteran to pay spousal support even when disability benefits would be used to make support payments. In re Marriage of Strong, 2000 MT 178, 300 M 331, 8 P3d 763, 57 St. Rep. 709 (2000), following Mansell v. Mansell, 490 US 581 (1989), and In re Marriage of Murphy, 261 M 363, 862 P2d 1143 (1993). See also McCarty v. McCarty, 453 US 210 (1981).

Provision for Equal Distribution of Retirement Benefits Not Ambiguous — Payable on Value of Benefits at Retirement, Not at Time of Property Settlement: A provision in the parties' settlement agreement granted the wife 50% of the husband's retirement benefits when he retired. The husband claimed that the provision was ambiguous because it was not clear whether the benefits should be valued as of the time he retired or when the agreement was settled. The Supreme Court found no ambiguity. The proceeds of the retirement benefits were to be split when the husband retired, including any accumulated value to the retirement fund, which was viewed as the husband's continuing contributions to the marital estate correlative to the wife's continuing contributions through her payment of the mortgage on the family home until it was sold at a future date and the proceeds also split equally. In re Marriage of Pfennigs, 1999 MT 250, 296 M 242, 989 P2d 327, 56 St. Rep. 981 (1999).

Assignment of Unvested Pensions Improper: In distributing marital property, the trial court awarded husband two "optional" pension plans in which his interest was not vested. The trial court must finally equitably apportion property and assets belonging to either party or to both parties, however and whenever acquired and whether title is in the name of husband or wife, or both. The right to receive a pension may be included in and distributed as part of a marital estate, and the value of a pension is its present value. When substantial risk is involved in the calculation of the value of a pension, both parties should share those risks. In the present case, the wife did not submit evidence of the value of either of two unvested optional pensions, while the husband took the position at trial that the pensions had no value. The District Court incorrectly assigned all risks to the husband rather than considering the significant risks to both parties. Because the estimates of value assigned by the court had no support in the record, it was reversible error for the court to assign the unvested pensions to the husband as his part of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Blades, 269 M 198, 887 P2d 735, 51 St. Rep. 1538 (1994), following Kis v. Kis, 196 M 296, 639 P2d 1151 (1982), and In re Marriage of Keedy, 249 M 47, 813 P2d 442 (1991), and distinguishing In re Marriage of Laster, 197 M 470, 643 P2d 597 (1982).

Pension Benefits Properly Divided Based Upon Marital Circumstances and Present Value of Benefits: Upon dissolution of the marriage, the District Court used the services of an actuary to establish a present value for Charles' pension benefits from his employment with the IRS and awarded Priscilla 35% of the retirement benefits. The Supreme Court held that inasmuch as the District Court determined the value and the award based upon the estimates by an actuary and such considerations as the amount of the value earned while the parties were married, Priscilla's earning capacity, and the length of the marriage, substantial credible evidence supported the award made by the District Court. In re Marriage of Robinson, 269 M 293, 888 P2d 895, 51 St. Rep. 1243 (1994).

Improper Award to Wife of One Hundred Percent Interest in Husband's Pension: The marital estate consisted of two major assets: the family home and husband's pension. The trial court determined that an equitable distribution would be achieved by granting wife the home and husband the pension. However, because the wife was not likely to accumulate an adequate pension prior to her retirement, the court awarded her a 100% contingent annuity interest in the present value of the husband's pension in the event he predeceased her. By designating wife as the irrevocable recipient of the survivorship benefits, the pension value to husband was diminished because part of a pension's value is the ability to provide for others through the survivorship benefits. If husband predeceased wife prior to retirement, he would have essentially received nothing from the marital estate. This inequitable distribution constituted an abuse of discretion, warranting reversal. In re Marriage of Zander, 262 M 215, 864 P2d 1225, 50 St. Rep. 1522 (1993).

Teachers' Retirement System Benefits — Each Party Entitled to Own Account: The District Court did not err in finding that each party was entitled to his or her respective retirement account when the record supports the finding that the husband's account was larger than the wife's because he had worked longer than she did and that the difference in retirement accounts was readily explainable as being earned prior to marriage and after separation. In re Marriage of Selsor/Mossman, 256 M 260, 846 P2d 972, 50 St. Rep. 80 (1993).

Spouse Denied Portion of Military Pension Under Theory of Laches: Under the divorce decree, the husband paid his ex-wife maintenance for a period of 5 years. Immediately after the maintenance obligation expired, the ex-wife initiated an action, asking that she be given a portion of the husband's military pension. The Supreme Court held that the petitioner had waited on her rights for an unreasonable time and that in light of the fact that her ex-husband had never attempted to conceal the pension from her, she was barred from asserting a claim by the doctrine of laches. In re Marriage of Samson, 245 M 464, 802 P2d 1241, 47 St. Rep. 2209 (1990).

Equal Division of Military Pension — Wife's Contribution as Homemaker: The District Court did not err in equally dividing the present value of husband's military pension after finding wife had foregone employment and the attendant retirement benefits in order to raise the children and maintain the family home. Additionally, her contribution as homemaker helped husband acquire two college degrees and a significantly higher earning capacity than her own. In re Marriage of Luisi, 232 M 243, 756 P2d 456, 45 St. Rep. 1023 (1988).

Retirement Benefits — Substitution for Maintenance Upon Retirement: Wife was awarded 78% of the marital property, one-third of husband's future retirement benefits in three plans, two of which were vested but not matured and one of which was unvested and unmatured (husband was 51), and $350 a month maintenance, which would end upon retirement of husband. Substantial evidence supported the maintenance award, and it was thus not an abuse of discretion to substitute a part of the retirement benefits for the maintenance upon husband's retirement. Laster v. Laster, 197 M 470, 643 P2d 597, 39 St. Rep. 737 (1982). See also Wallace v. Wallace, 203 M 255, 661 P2d 455, 40 St. Rep. 430 (1983).

Military Retirement Pay Not Part of Marital Estate: The language of McCarty v. McCarty, 453 US 210, 69 L Ed 2d 589, 101 S Ct 2728 (1981), precluding a state court from dividing military retirement pay pursuant to state community property law, is broad enough to include noncommunity property states. Appellant's military retirement pay is to be excluded as an asset of the marital estate. McGill v. McGill, 196 M 40, 637 P2d 1182, 38 St. Rep. 2105 (1981). However, see In re Marriage of Blair, 271 M 196, 894 P2d 958, 52 St. Rep. 401 (1995)(special separation payments received by military member are subject to division as marital property).

Military Pension as Marital Property — Previous Ruling Requiring Remand: Where, following entry of the court's order dissolving the marriage of the appellant and respondent, who was eligible for retirement under a military pension plan, but before the parties filed their appellate briefs, the Supreme Court held in In re Marriage of Miller, 187 M 286, 609 P2d 1185 (1980), that a military pension is marital property to be considered as part of the marital estate, the appellant's case had to be remanded to the District Court for additional findings of fact. Because of the many factors that could be affected by inclusion of the pension in the marital estate, the Supreme Court should not fashion a formula for disposition of the pension until the District Court has done so. Ebert v. Ebert, 189 M 477, 616 P2d 379, 37 St. Rep. 1674 (1980).

Military Pension Vested Property Subject to Distribution in Property Division: The military pension of a party to a divorce resembles an ordinary private pension, and just as a private pension, it should be treated as a vested property right that can be distributed as a part of a court's property division. A military pension is distinguishable from a pension under the Railroad Retirement Act, which is subject to limitations on its distribution. Further, the heirs of the former spouse of the divorced party receiving the pension could inherit the spouse's share freely. In re Marriage of Miller, 187 M 286, 609 P2d 1185 (1980). See also Karr v. Karr, 192 M 388, 628 P2d 267, 38 St. Rep. 506 (1981). Impliedly overruled in McGill v. McGill, 196 M 40, 637 P2d 1182, 38 St. Rep. 2105 (1981).

Farm, Ranch Property

Policy of Keeping Family Ranch Intact Not to Be Used to Deprive Spouse of Equitable Share of Marital Estate: Upon the dissolution of Maureen and Joseph's marriage, the District Court ordered the sale of the parties' ranch. Joseph contended that the District Court erred when it ordered the sale, citing the state's policy to keep a family farm intact when a court distributes marital property. Citing In re Marriage of Tonne, 226 M 1, 733 P2d 1280 (1987), the Supreme Court held that the state's policy cannot be used to deprive a spouse of the spouse's equitable share in marital estate. In re Marriage of Ortiz, 282 M 500, 938 P2d 1308, 54 St. Rep. 446 (1997).

Improper Award of CRP Payments: It was an abuse of discretion for the trial court to award wife 25% of a Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) payment when she had not participated in the management of the family farming corporation for several years or participated in efforts to secure the payment and the CRP payment was traditionally earmarked to pay certain corporate debts. In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 833 P2d 215, 49 St. Rep. 597 (1992).

Income Insufficient to Allow Ranch Purchase — Order for Sale of Property Proper: The District Court did not err in ordering the wife to purchase ranch property within 15 days of dissolution of the marriage. The parties were to sell the property if the wife failed to make the purchase. The evidence showed that the wife's horse breeding business and rental income could not generate sufficient income to allow her to pay the husband's share of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Peetz, 252 M 448, 830 P2d 543, 49 St. Rep. 362 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Kimm, 260 M 479, 861 P2d 165, 50 St. Rep. 1146 (1993).

One Party Divides Property, Other Chooses Portion: An equal division of property generally will result when one party draws the line dividing the property and the other party makes the first choice between the parcels. In re Marriage of Hancock, 226 M 383, 736 P2d 101, 44 St. Rep. 740 (1987), followed in In re Marriage of Binsfield, 269 M 336, 888 P2d 889, 52 St. Rep. 16 (1995).

Remand of Order to Sell Ranch — Modification to Allow Time Extension or Buyout: Where on one hand the District Court acted within its discretion, based on its findings, when it ordered sale of the family ranch, but on the other hand the worst economic times in 50 years had crippled the market for ranches to the point where immediate forced sale would deprive the parties of the value the ranch would possess in a market closer to historical norms, the Supreme Court remanded with the suggestion that the decree be modified to allow 36 months for sale or, alternatively, that a structured buyout be allowed, similar to the one in In re Marriage of Gomke, 192 M 169, 627 P2d 395, 38 St. Rep. 578 (1981). In re Marriage of Tonne, 226 M 1, 733 P2d 1280, 44 St. Rep. 411 (1987), followed in In re Marriage of Meeks, 276 M 237, 915 P2d 831, 53 St. Rep. 365 (1996).

Preservation of Family Ranch — Not Proper Consideration Upon Division: Montana's policy in favor of keeping a family farm or ranch intact upon dissolution is not a proper consideration when dividing marital property under this statute. The policy is only to be considered upon distribution of the marital property after it has been allocated. In re Marriage of Glass, 215 M 248, 697 P2d 96, 42 St. Rep. 328 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Meeks, 276 M 237, 915 P2d 831, 53 St. Rep. 365 (1996). See also In re Marriage of Binsfield, 269 M 336, 888 P2d 889, 52 St. Rep. 16 (1995), and In re Marriage of Ortiz, 282 M 500, 938 P2d 1308, 54 St. Rep. 446 (1997).

Unnecessary Forced Sale of Ranch When Spouse Dead — Partition Ordered: Although it has long been the Supreme Court's policy to avoid splitting up ranches in property dispositions, that policy cannot be used to avoid a party's right to an equitable distribution of marital property. Husband and wife owned ranch as joint tenants. Husband died during first appeal of the property disposition. The case was remanded, and the trial court made a second disposition ordering forced sale of the ranch to satisfy marital debts. The ranch had been the wife's home for 17 years. She opposed the sale and wished to live on it and raise her quarter horses. The Supreme Court could see no reason to force the sale of the entire ranch. The record showed that it could easily have been partitioned to give wife the buildings and about 70 acres, selling the rest. The trial court was ordered to modify the decree to allow wife to keep that part of the ranch upon which she made her home. In re Marriage of Beck, 203 M 455, 661 P2d 1282, 40 St. Rep. 565 (1983).

Family Farm — Installment Payments for Spouse's Share: Petitioner and respondent were divorced. In the decree dissolving the marriage, the trial judge divided the major asset, the family farm, with 55% to go to the husband and 45% to the wife. The farm had been in the husband's family since 1917. The husband was to pay the wife's share in four equal annual installments. The wife contends that the farm should have been sold so that she would have the opportunity of sharing in any gain realized on the property. She also contends that the settlement scheme is unfair because it allows the husband to retain income-producing property while she receives only cash. The dissolution decree was consistent with the policy of keeping a farm or ranch intact and operating as a unit upon dissolution whenever there is a reasonable means of providing a wife her equitable share of the property short of selling the land. The value of the estate is a question of fact for the District Court, and there was no showing that the valuation was "clearly erroneous". Giving the wife a lien on the property until the payments are made adequately protects her interests. Gomke v. Gomke, 192 M 169, 627 P2d 395, 38 St. Rep. 578 (1981), followed in In re Marriage of Bell, 220 M 123, 713 P2d 552, 43 St. Rep. 226 (1986).

Ranch Property — Division or Forced Sale: While it is a policy to avoid splitting up a ranch or forcing its sale, that policy cannot be used to avoid a party's right to an equitable distribution of marital property. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in giving each party a 6-month option to buy each other's share of the ranch or otherwise leaving it up to the parties to reach their own terms on a purchase. In re Marriage of Owen, 187 M 214, 609 P2d 292 (1980).

Attachment and Large Contribution to Farm as Justifying 60/40 Property Division: There was no abuse of discretion where trial court awarded only 40% of the value of the marital assets to wife and 60% to husband when the major asset of the marriage, a farm, was acquired by the husband through exceptionally hard work, the wife did not care for farming, and the husband requested the trial court to keep the farm intact. Knudson v. Knudson, 186 M 8, 606 P2d 130 (1980).

Party's Right to an Equitable Share Not to Be Overridden By Policy to Keep Farm or Ranch Intact: In making an equitable distribution of marital property, it is a premise in this state that a ranch or farm should be kept intact and operated as a unit. That policy, however, may not be used to override a party's right to an equitable share. Jacobson v. Jacobson, 183 M 517, 600 P2d 1183 (1979).

Parties' Premarital Cohabitation Or Relationship

Proper to Consider Two and One-Half-Year Premarital Relationship: The District Court did not err in considering the parties' 2 ½-year premarital relationship and cohabitation in apportioning the marital estate. It was necessary for the court to consider the parties' premarital history to aid in determining which party brought which assets into the marriage. In re Marriage of Rolf, 2000 MT 361, 303 M 349, 16 P3d 345, 57 St. Rep. 1536 (2000).

REVIEW OF PROPERTY DISPOSITION

Property Transferred to Deny Spousal Interest in Marital Estate — Inclusion as Distributable Property Proper: A husband and wife owed about $6,000 in back taxes on their property, which was in jeopardy of being sold at a tax sale. The couple was unable to obtain a loan because of a prior bankruptcy, so they arranged to transfer the property to the husband's mother, who then took out a loan to pay the taxes, using the property as collateral. When the couple later sought to dissolve their marriage, their petition made no mention of any real property acquired during the marriage. The husband testified at the hearing, but the wife did not attend, and dissolution was granted without addressing the wife's interest in the property. She moved to set aside the judgment pursuant to 40-4-135, and the District Court voided the deed transferring the property to the mother, issued a court deed naming the mother as grantor and the husband and wife as grantees to hold the property as tenants in common, and included the property in the marital estate. The mother contended that the property transfer more than 2 years before commencement of the dissolution was final against the husband and wife as grantors, citing 70-20-303, and that the property was thus not available as an asset of the couple and was improperly included in the marital estate. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the couple had submitted false proposed findings and conclusions when they made no mention of any real property acquired during the marriage, which had the effect of defrauding the court and denying the wife her interest in the marital property. Inclusion of the property in the marital estate was proper. In re Marriage of Bell, 2000 MT 88, 299 M 219, 998 P2d 1163, 57 St. Rep. 381 (2000).

District Court to Resolve Conflicting Testimony: The parties disagreed on who should receive a set of dishes, and the trial court awarded them to the wife. The Supreme Court held that the trial court is in the best position to resolve conflicting testimony, and it would not substitute its judgment for the findings of the District Court, which were based to a large extent on the credibility of the witnesses. In re Marriage of Engen, 1998 MT 153, 289 M 299, 961 P2d 738, 55 St. Rep. 595 (1998), distinguished in In re Marriage of Foreman, 1999 MT 89, 294 M 181, 979 P2d 193, 56 St. Rep. 373 (1999), and followed in In re Marriage of Davis, 1999 MT 218, 295 M 546, 986 P2d 408, 56 St. Rep. 856 (1999).

Division of Property — Standard of Review:

The Supreme Court standard for reviewing factual findings of a District Court relating to the division of marital property, as set out in In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 833 P2d 215 (1992), is whether the trial court's findings are clearly erroneous. In re Marriage of Miller, 260 M 15, 858 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 912 (1993). See also In re Marriage of Rada, 263 M 402, 869 P2d 254, 51 St. Rep. 110 (1994), and In re Marriage of DeWitt, 273 M 513, 905 P2d 1084, 52 St. Rep. 1089 (1995). The standard of review in regard to the factual findings of the District Court relating to the division of marital property, as set out in In re Marriage of Sacry, 253 M 378, 833 P2d 1035, 49 St. Rep. 452 (1992), is whether the findings are clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court is not bound by the District Court's conclusions and is free to reach its own conclusions. The basis for simply determining whether the lower court's conclusions are correct is that there is no discretion in determining a question of law; the lower court either correctly or incorrectly applies the law. However, discretionary judgments made by the trial court are presumed to be correct and will not be disturbed absent an abuse of discretion by the trial court. In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 833 P2d 215, 49 St. Rep. 597 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Scott, 254 M 81, 835 P2d 710, 49 St. Rep. 634 (1992), In re Marriage of Johnston & Turrin, 255 M 421, 843 P2d 760, 49 St. Rep. 1047 (1992), In re Marriage of Newton, 255 M 463, 844 P2d 47, 49 St. Rep. 1068 (1992), In re Marriage of Rada, 263 M 402, 869 P2d 254, 51 St. Rep. 110 (1994), In re Marriage of McNellis, 267 M 492, 885 P2d 412, 51 St. Rep. 1125 (1994), In re Marriage of Griffin, 275 M 37, 909 P2d 707, 53 St. Rep. 28 (1996), In re Marriage of Foreman, 1999 MT 89, 294 M 181, 979 P2d 193, 56 St. Rep. 373 (1999), and In re Marriage of Hanni, 2000 MT 59, 299 M 20, 997 P2d 760, 57 St. Rep. 279 (2000).

The Supreme Court specifically rejected phraseology for the standard of review regarding division of marital property, as stated in prior cases, and adopted the standard set out in In re Marriage of Watson, 227 M 383, 739 P2d 951, 44 St. Rep. 1167 (1987), that the District Court's judgment, when based on substantial credible evidence, will not be altered unless a clear abuse of discretion is shown. In re Marriage of Stewart, 232 M 40, 757 P2d 765, 45 St. Rep. 850 (1988), followed in In re Marriage of Johns, 238 M 256, 776 P2d 839, 46 St. Rep. 1249 (1989), In re Marriage of Bos, 238 M 267, 776 P2d 841, 46 St. Rep. 1258 (1989), In re Marriage of Deichl, 239 M

425, 781 P2d 254, 46 St. Rep. 1801 (1989), In re Marriage of Barnard, 241 M 147, 785 P2d 1387, 47 St. Rep. 152 (1990), In re Marriage of Otto, 245 M 271, 800 P2d 706, 47 St. Rep. 2080 (1990), In re Marriage of Scott, 246 M 10, 803 P2d 620, 47 St. Rep. 2237 (1990), and in In re Marriage of Rada, 263 M 402, 869 P2d 254, 51 St. Rep. 110 (1994). See also In re Marriage of Zander, 262 M 215, 864 P2d 1225, 50 St. Rep. 1522 (1993).

In reviewing a District Court's determination, the Supreme Court generally gives deference to the District Court's discretion and will reverse only if the findings are clearly erroneous in light of the evidence in the record. A presumption exists in favor of the judgment, and the lower court will be reversed only if appellant demonstrates that there was a clear abuse of discretion or an error in the findings. The standard of review for abuse of discretion is whether the lower court acted arbitrarily without conscientious judgment or exceeded the bounds of reason resulting in substantial injustice. In re Marriage of Johnson, 225 M 404, 732 P2d 1345, 44 St. Rep. 353 (1987). See also In re Marriage of Davis, 1999 MT 218, 295 M 546, 986 P2d 408, 56 St. Rep. 856 (1999).

The following test is applicable in reviewing a lower court judgment in a dissolution: "Did the District Court in the exercise of its discretion act arbitrarily without employment of conscientious judgment or exceed the bounds of reason resulting in substantial injustice?" In re Marriage of Edwards, 215 M 512, 699 P2d 67, 42 St. Rep. 593 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Shelton, 219 M 456, 712 P2d 782, 43 St. Rep. 89 (1986). See also In re Marriage of Hundtoft, 225 M 242, 731 P2d 401, 44 St. Rep. 204 (1987).

The standard of review in disputes over a District Court's division of marital property is whether in the exercise of its discretion the court acted arbitrarily, unreasonably, or without regard to recognized principles resulting in substantial injustice. In re Marriage of Vert, 210 M 24, 680 P2d 587, 41 St. Rep. 895 (1984); Balsam v. Balsam, 180 M 129, 589 P2d 652 (1979). See also In re Marriage of Gallinger & Weissman, 221 M 463, 719 P2d 777, 43 St. Rep. 976 (1986), and In re Marriage of Peetz, 252 M 448, 830 P2d 543, 49 St. Rep. 362 (1992).

"Law of the Case" Doctrine:

Once a decision has been rendered by the Supreme Court on a particular issue between the parties, the decision is binding upon the courts and those parties and cannot be relitigated in a subsequent appeal. Implicit in this court's holding in a prior appeal in this case, that the District Court had sufficient grounds to modify the distribution of marital assets to allow the husband what he would have received if he had been paid child support payments, is agreement with the District Court's child support grant and valuation of the marital personal property. Therefore, the doctrine of the law of the case applies, and the wife could not have those matters addressed again in the present (second) appeal following remand after the first appeal. In re Marriage of Becker, 255 M 357, 842 P2d 332, 49 St. Rep. 983 (1992).

Supreme Court dismissed appeal on issue of partition of real property in marital dissolution proceeding addressed and decided in prior appeal of this case on ground that, where decision has been rendered by the court on a particular issue between the same parties in the same case, such decision is binding on the parties and the courts and cannot be relitigated in a subsequent appeal. In re Marriage of Gies, 218 M 433, 709 P2d 635, 42 St. Rep. 1715 (1985).

Dissolution Award in Excess of the Marital Estate:

While affirming the decision in Lippert (see note below), the Supreme Court found that when a couple's premarital assets were properly included in the marital estate, the lower court did not distribute more than 100% of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Peterson, 238 M 470, 778 P2d 402, 46 St. Rep. 1424 (1989).

In an action for dissolution of marriage, the District Court exceeded its authority under 40-4-202 by awarding the respondent property in excess of the proven net worth of the estate. The District Court may never award more than 100% of the marital estate. Lippert v. Lippert, 192 M 222, 627 P2d 1206, 38 St. Rep. 625 (1981).

Death of Spouse Before Final Disposition — Distribution as Severance of Joint Tenancy: Wife contended that: (1) because husband died before final resolution of property division, her right of survivorship remained; and (2) the District Court erred in refusing to recognize that the property was held in joint tenancy and should therefore have given the wife the property upon husband's death. On review, the Supreme Court found that a lower court order distributing the property in question to the husband effectively severed the joint tenancy. In re Marriage of Butler, 232 M 419, 756 P2d 1159, 45 St. Rep. 1160 (1988).

Factors for Consideration — Review of Disproportionate Distribution: A seemingly disproportionate distribution of marital property, with or without an award of maintenance, must be considered in light of the overall property distribution, the requirements of this section and 40-4-203, and whether there is substantial credible evidence to support the District Court's division. In re Marriage of Bowman, 226 M 99, 734 P2d 197, 44 St. Rep. 488 (1987).

Wife as Partner in Real Estate Investments — Distribution of Property Sale Proceeds Proper: The District Court properly awarded wife her share of proceeds of the sale of real property when deeds and the property settlement agreement identified her as a partner in the jointly held property. In re Marriage of Sabo, 224 M 252, 730 P2d 1112, 43 St. Rep. 2175 (1986).

Wife's Appeal Held Meritorious — Remand for Redetermination of Maintenance and Attorney Fees: Since wife's appeal had merit, husband's assertion that it did not and his request for damages were denied where, among other things, the court was sympathetic to a claim but did not agree with it, a request for a redetermination of the maintenance award was granted, and a request for attorney fees was remanded for a determination. In re Marriage of Perry, 217 M 162, 704 P2d 41, 42 St. Rep. 1101 (1985).

Failure to Disclose Debts — Extrinsic Fraud: A couple's failure to disclose certain debts in their property settlement agreement misled the trial court as to the actual financial status of the marital estate. This failure to disclose was extrinsic fraud. It misled the court to a false judgment that wrongfully insulated the couple's property from creditors. Extrinsic fraud justifies invoking the inherent equitable power of a court to reopen and set aside a judgment. Relief from a judgment obtained by extrinsic fraud may be granted on motion in the original action or in a separate suit in equity. In re Marriage of Witbart, 216 M 178, 701 P2d 339, 42 St. Rep. 725 (1985) , overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Independent Action to Set Marital Property Disposition Aside — Failure of Fraud and Notice Claims: Wife seeking to have court set aside that part of decree of dissolution of marriage that distributed the marital property elected not to file a timely motion for relief under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), and instead elected to file an independent action for relief as allowed by the last part of Rule 60(b). Her action was properly dismissed insofar as it sought relief on grounds of mistake, inadvertence, excusable neglect, and fraud on herself, which could be the basis for relief only under a timely Rule 60(b) motion. Her independent action claim of no actual personal notification of the divorce proceeding must fail, since she signed the response to the petition (though perhaps not completely sober at the time), indicating actual personal notice. An independent action is not a remedy for inadvertence or oversight by the party losing the original action. Her independent action claim grounded in fraud on the court must fail because she failed to plead with particularity all the elements of the fraud. Her mere suspicion of fraud was not sufficient to sustain her action. The postnuptial agreement she signed some 3 years before her husband filed for a divorce proceeding at which she was not represented by an attorney must stand, since she signed a response to the petition that affirmed the fairness and terms of the agreement and did not appear at the final hearing at which the court approved the agreement with a change favoring her. In re Marriage of Hoyt, 215 M 449, 698 P2d 418, 42 St. Rep. 532 (1985).

Preservation of Family Ranch — Not Proper Consideration Upon Division: Montana's policy in favor of keeping a family farm or ranch intact upon dissolution is not a proper consideration when dividing marital property under this statute. The policy is only to be considered upon distribution of the marital property after it has been allocated. In re Marriage of Glass, 215 M 248, 697 P2d 96, 42 St. Rep. 328 (1985).

Affirmation of Judgment Concerning Family Ranch: In a divorce proceeding involving the valuation and award of the ranch of the parties, the District Court did not err in requiring the sale of the ranch only as a last resort. The Supreme Court, however, vacated the remainder of the judgment on other grounds. Popp v. Popp, 206 M 415, 671 P2d 24, 40 St. Rep. 1747 (1983). Valuation and distribution of marital estate were considered on later appeal in In re Marriage of Popp & Martin, 235 M 372, 767 P2d 871, 46 St. Rep. 64 (1989).

Difference Between Time of Valuation of Assets and Debts — Undervaluation of Crops — Clear Error Found: The District Court committed reversible error when it valued the crops on the parties' ranch at one time and valued the debts of the parties at another. The valuation of the crops in February, rather than at harvesttime, was reversible error in itself, as it eliminated a significant asset from the gross marital estate. The error was compounded by valuing the debts at a later time, which meant that the wife was not allowed to share in the profits of the ranch accrued since the date of the parties' separation but she was charged with a portion of the parties' debts accruing during the same time. This was fundamentally unfair and resulted in clear error. Popp v. Popp, 206 M 415, 671 P2d 24, 40 St. Rep. 1747 (1983). Valuation and distribution of marital estate were considered on later appeal in In re Marriage of Popp & Martin, 235 M 372, 767 P2d 871, 46 St. Rep. 64 (1989).

Order for Sale of Ranch Property to Pay Wife's Share Upheld: Where the District Court ordered that the parties' ranch be sold and the proceeds divided between the wife and husband in a dissolution proceeding if the husband could not raise enough capital within 90 days to buy the wife's interest, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in making the order despite the policy of Montana courts to keep a family ranch intact in such circumstances. The order of the District Court shows that it tried to follow that policy by giving the husband time to secure the necessary money to buy out his wife but that given the value of the ranch, the success of the husband was unlikely. The District Court's order was equitable and fair, and the Supreme Court could not say the District Court abused its discretion under the circumstances. Garst v. Garst, 206 M 89, 669 P2d 1063, 40 St. Rep. 1526 (1983).

Failure to Find Property Subject to Distribution — Conflicting Findings Requiring Remand: Where the District Court found, in a dissolution proceeding, that a coin collection was acquired by the wife's wages during the marriage and therefore constituted property subject to division and awarded the collection to the wife but failed to include the collection in a list of property subject to division, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for amendment of the findings in a manner consistent with the Supreme Court opinion. Glasser v. Glasser, 206 M 77, 669 P2d 685, 40 St. Rep. 1518 (1983).

Residence Gifted to Wife and Maintained By Husband — Award to Wife Upheld: Where the wife's father gave the wife a house, it was not error for the District Court to award the house to the wife in a dissolution proceeding despite the fact that the husband had performed maintenance on the house and it had increased in value over the course of the marriage. The husband did not present sufficient contrary evidence to the record for the findings of the District Court to be reversed. Glasser v. Glasser, 206 M 77, 669 P2d 685, 40 St. Rep. 1518 (1983).

Inequitably Small Award to Wife With No Maintenance and Retarded Child: The parties were married for 30 years, wife was 64 and retired, and husband was 59 and a property manager and carpenter with most of his income coming from rentals on property he owned and managed. They owned a California house, a Missoula house, and a ranch. Husband lived in the Missoula house, and wife lived in the California house. Their children were all over 21, though one lived with wife as the child was mentally retarded and could not be left alone for more than 3 hours. Trial court awarded wife all property held in her name and in her possession, subject to all debts, except that the $16,500 mortgage on her California house was made husband's obligation. Husband was apparently awarded everything else, including the ranch, which the parties' appraisers valued at $1,184,725 and $1,649,166. No provision was made for the mentally retarded child, and no maintenance was awarded. The property division was inequitable, and the case was remanded for reconsideration in light of this section, the cases construing it, and the marital property's value at the time of dissolution of the marriage. In re Marriage of Wolfe, 202 M 454, 659 P2d 259, 40 St. Rep. 211 (1983), followed in Vance v. Vance, 204 M 267, 664 P2d 907, 40 St. Rep. 836 (1983).

Distribution in Kind Not Required: The trial court found that the wife's share of the marital estate was $247,320, with $25,000 paid at the time of the judgment and 20 annual installments of $11,116. The court also granted the wife a security interest in shares of closely held stock owned by the husband. The husband argued that the court should have made a distribution of stock in kind rather than giving the wife annual payments. The Supreme Court found no error in failing to distribute the property in kind. In addition, the court approved the granting of a security interest for the wife's protection. In re Marriage of Burleigh, 200 M 1, 650 P2d 753, 39 St. Rep. 1538 (1982).

Discretion Not Abused — Valuation Generally: No abuse of discretion could be found in findings that carefully set forth the fair market value, outstanding obligations, and net value of each marital asset, developed the reasoning for accepting husband's appraisals and estimates over those of wife, and were fully supported by the record. In re Marriage of LeProwse, 198 M 357, 646 P2d 526, 39 St. Rep. 1053 (1982), followed in In re Marriage of Ereth, 232 M 493, 757 P2d 1312, 45 St. Rep. 1223 (1988).

Arbitrary, Nonconscientious, Unreasonableness Test: The rule governing review of a District Court division of marital property upon divorce is whether the District Court acted arbitrarily, without employment of conscientious judgment, or exceeded the bounds of reason in view of the circumstances. Hill v. Hill, 197 M 451, 643 P2d 582, 39 St. Rep. 723 (1982), followed in Laster v. Laster, 197 M 470, 643 P2d 597, 39 St. Rep. 737 (1982), followed in In re Marriage of White, 218 M 343, 708 P2d 267, 42 St. Rep. 1634 (1985); In re Marriage of Keating, 212 M 462, 689 P2d 249, 41 St. Rep. 1865 (1984).

Inherited Vested Future Remainder Interest — Determination of Vesting: Husband involved in divorce and property disposition proceeding had inherited from his father a one-fourth remainder interest in one-half of the family ranch, subject to mother's life estate. Husband's interest was described in the decree of distribution of his father's estate as not being subject to divestment. The nature of the interest could not be changed by a collateral attack in which husband claimed his father's will required a different decree of distribution and made his remainder interest subject to divestment in the event he died before his mother. District Court's property disposition finding that the interest was a vested interest subject to divestment was not supported by the evidence. Hill v. Hill, 197 M 451, 643 P2d 582, 39 St. Rep. 723 (1982).

Land Held With Third Party — Equitable Interest: Husband in divorce proceeding had, during marriage, purchased with his brother a tract of land, and it was recorded in the names of husband and brother as tenants in common. Husband and brother each ranched and farmed other tracts of land. Testimony showed that the record owners of the various pieces of land owned by the two brothers and other family members, and ranched and farmed by the two brothers, were not always the equitable owners. For example, their mother and sisters had interests which were sometimes put up as security for loans with which the brothers purchased more land. Husband was the legal one-half owner of the tract he and his brother held as tenants in common, but the husband apparently considered himself the owner of the entire property; his brother apparently had nothing to do with it and was helping to pay for it in exchange for husband's interest in another tract of land. The District Court's finding that husband's interest in the tract he and his brother purchased was a one-half equitable interest was supported by substantial credible evidence, did not appear to be arbitrary or beyond reason, and was sustained. Hill v. Hill, 197 M 451, 643 P2d 582, 39 St. Rep. 723 (1982).

Duress in Entering Property Settlement Agreement: Where appellant sought to set aside prior separation agreement and property settlement on grounds of duress, the court held the totality of circumstances in this case indicated any threat by respondent to seek custody rights of children or to impugn appellant's reputation because of adultery was not sufficient to constitute duress in entering the agreement. Lawrence v. Lawrence, 197 M 262, 642 P2d 1043, 39 St. Rep. 548 (1982).

Using Threat of Custody Dispute as Violation of Public Policy: Threat of a custody dispute in order to gain leverage in the property distribution is not violative of public policy such that the separation agreement and property settlement will be set aside. Lawrence v. Lawrence, 197 M 262, 642 P2d 1043, 39 St. Rep. 548 (1982).

Division of Property — Effect of Tax Liens Created After Dissolution: When the parties were divorced in 1974 and support and property settlement matters were deferred, the division of property giving certain property encumbered by federal and state tax liens to the appellant was not unfair since the liens represented appellant's delinquent federal and state income obligations primarily for years after the marriage of the parties was dissolved. In re Marriage of Dahl, 188 M 128, 612 P2d 196 (1980).

Admission of Irrelevant Evidence: In a trial for a decree of divorce in which the only issue was the disposition of the family home, the District Court admitted evidence concerning bank deposits and checks. As the evidence admitted had nothing to do with the issue at trial, it cannot serve as a basis for error; no error exists for appeal unless a substantial right of the objecting party has been affected. In re Marriage of Schwartz, 184 M 178, 602 P2d 175 (1979).

Review of Apportionment: The apportionment made by the District Court will not be disturbed on review unless there has been a clear abuse of discretion as manifested by a substantially inequitable division of the marital assets resulting in substantial injustice. Green v. Green, 181 M 285, 593 P2d 446 (1979).

Reflection of Net Worth Required: If the Supreme Court cannot determine from the findings and conclusions whether the District Court weighed each element delineated in this section in dividing the property, the cause must be remanded for a redetermination of the disposition of the parties' marital estate. If the District Court's findings and conclusions do not reflect the net worth of the parties' marital assets at the time of the divorce, the Supreme Court on appeal cannot determine if the property was equitably divided. Robertson v. Robertson, 180 M 226, 590 P2d 113 (1978).

Abuse of Discretion Required: The standard for reviewing the property division in a dissolution decreed by a District Court is that the apportionment made by the District Court will not be disturbed on review unless there has been a clear abuse of discretion as manifested by a substantially inequitable division of the marital assets resulting in substantial injustice. Brown v. Brown, 179 M 417, 587 P2d 361 (1978), followed in In re Marriage of Larson, 234 M 400, 763 P2d 1109, 45 St. Rep. 2003 (1988).

40-4-203. Maintenance.

Commissioners' Note

Section 308(a) [40-4-203(1)] authorizes the court to order maintenance to either spouse in three kinds of proceedings: (1) dissolution of marriage; (2) legal separation; and (3) independent proceedings for maintenance following an earlier proceeding for dissolution of the marriage by a court which lacked personal jurisdiction over the absent spouse and thus could not affect maintenance [see comment to Section 302(a) [40-4-104(1)]]. In all three kinds of proceedings the court may award maintenance only if both findings listed in (1)[(a)] and (2)[(b)] are made. The dual intention of this section and Section 307 [40-4-202] is to encourage the court to provide for the financial needs of the spouses by property disposition rather than by an award of maintenance. Only if the available property is insufficient for the purpose and if the spouse who seeks maintenance is unable to secure employment appropriate to his skills and interests or is occupied with child care may an award of maintenance be ordered.

Assuming that an award of maintenance is appropriate under subsection 308(a) [40-4-203(1)], the standards for setting the amount of the award are set forth in subsection 308(b) [40-4-203(2)]. Here, as in Section 307 [40-4-202], the court is expressly admonished not to consider the misconduct of a spouse during the marriage. Instead, the court should consider the factors relevant to the issue of maintenance, including those listed in subdivisions (1)-(6) [(a)-(f)].

REQUIRED FINDINGS

Marital Debt and Assets Considered — Ability to Work Precluding Maintenance Award: During the marriage, the wife worked 10-hour days, 5 to 7 days a week; following the couple's separation, the wife chose to work only part-time and lived beyond her means, despite her accounting degree. The District Court correctly found that the wife was not entitled to maintenance because she did not meet the requirements of subsection (1)(b) of this section, inasmuch as she was capable of supporting herself through appropriate employment. In re Marriage of Hanni, 2000 MT 59, 299 M 20, 997 P2d 760, 57 St. Rep. 279 (2000).

Failure to Consider Future Share of Retirement Benefits Not Error: The parties stipulated to a division of husband's employer-sponsored future retirement benefits. Husband contended that it was error not to consider wife's retirement share in determining whether she had sufficient property to provide for her reasonable needs. However, the retirement benefit to be received by the wife in the future was totally irrelevant to her present ability to provide for her needs because it was property she did not currently have and thus could not contribute to her living expenses. In re Marriage of Doolittle, 265 M 168, 875 P2d 331, 51 St. Rep. 450 (1994).

Adopting One Party's Proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law Not Necessarily Error: Joseph Barker argued that the lower court's adoption of his wife's proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law in awarding maintenance was error based upon In re Marriage of Kukes, 258 M 324, 852 P2d 655 (1993). The Supreme Court ruled that the case before it was distinguishable because the District Court did not adopt the findings and conclusions "wholesale" but demonstrated that it had exercised independent judgment in making its decisions. In re Marriage of Barker, 264 M 110, 870 P2d 86, 51 St. Rep. 176 (1994).

Evidence of Self-Support and Sufficient Income-Producing Property — Maintenance Not Warranted: When the record showed that wife was able to provide for her reasonable needs through earned income and property obtained in the dissolution, an award of maintenance was not warranted. In re Marriage of Overturf, 253 M 321, 833 P2d 213, 49 St. Rep. 613 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Scott, 254 M 81, 835 P2d 710, 49 St. Rep. 634 (1992).

Contradictory Findings Not Supporting Maintenance Award: The lower court's findings were contradictory as to whether permanent maintenance was justified. The case was remanded to District Court for reconsideration after making new findings complying with statutory requirements. In re Marriage of Hughes, 236 M 427, 770 P2d 499, 46 St. Rep. 482 (1989).

Lack of Specific Findings — Findings and Evidence Sufficient: Although the court did not make specific findings on each element of this section, the findings it did make showed it considered the proper factors, and those findings and the award of maintenance were based on substantial credible evidence. In re Marriage of Cole, 234 M 352, 763 P2d 39, 45 St. Rep. 1965 (1988), followed in In re Marriage of Dorville, 254 M 111, 836 P2d 588, 49 St. Rep. 658 (1992), In re Marriage of Corey, 266 M 304, 880 P2d 824, 51 St. Rep. 859 (1994), In re Marriage of Chew, 269 M 331, 888 P2d 428, 52 St. Rep. 13 (1995), and In re Marriage of Hanni, 2000 MT 59, 299 M 20, 997 P2d 760, 57 St. Rep. 279 (2000).

Maintenance Appropriate — Standard of Living and Ability to Pay: An award of maintenance is appropriate when a spouse is unable to achieve a similar standard of living after dissolution and when the other spouse is able to meet his or her own needs as well as pay maintenance. In re Marriage of Luisi, 232 M 243, 756 P2d 456, 45 St. Rep. 1023 (1988), followed in In re Marriage of Eide, 250 M 490, 821 P2d 1036, 48 St. Rep. 1054 (1991), and in In re Marriage of Silverman, 259 M 337, 856 P2d 533, 50 St. Rep. 823 (1993). See also In re Marriage of Harper, 1999 MT 321, 297 M 290, 994 P2d 1, 56 St. Rep. 1280 (1999).

Voluntary Maintenance Agreement — Findings of Need and Duration Not Required: Husband contended that, prior to awarding temporary maintenance, the District Court failed to make proper findings of need and duration required by 40-4-121 and this section. However, the court was not required to make such findings since the parties voluntarily entered into a maintenance agreement. In re Marriage of Halverson, 230 M 226, 749 P2d 518, 45 St. Rep. 162 (1988).

Specific Findings of Nature of Properties Owned by Maintenance-Seeking Spouse Required — Investment Ability as Valid Consideration: In determining whether maintenance is proper, for future clarity and ease of appellate review, the Supreme Court requires a specific finding regarding the nature of properties owned by the maintenance-seeking spouse. That spouse's ability to invest his or her assets is a valid consideration. In re Marriage of Tow, 229 M 483, 748 P2d 440, 44 St. Rep. 2154 (1987).

Final Custody Plan and Maintenance Schedule Required: Where the District Court on one hand stated that the sale of the family home "should be retained as an available option" and on the other hand set terms of a 30-day buy-out or sale period, the case was remanded for determination of a final custody plan and maintenance schedule, since resolution of custody and maintenance hinged on sale of the home. In re Marriage of Ensign, 227 M 357, 739 P2d 479, 44 St. Rep. 1146 (1987).

Factors for Consideration — Review of Disproportionate Distribution: A seemingly disproportionate distribution of marital property, with or without an award of maintenance, must be considered in light of the overall property distribution, the requirements of 40-4-202 and this section, and whether there is substantial credible evidence to support the District Court's division. In re Marriage of Bowman, 226 M 99, 734 P2d 197, 44 St. Rep. 488 (1987).

Award of Maintenance After Marriage of Short Duration — Expenses Incurred After Separation: Husband appealed from a judgment awarding wife maintenance when parties separated less than a year after marriage. He contended that no maintenance was required because the wife chose to purchase things she could not afford after the parties separated and that the requirements of 40-4-203 were not followed in awarding maintenance to the wife. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that the District Court Judge specifically recognized the appropriate standards for awarding maintenance, including the fact that the wife lacked sufficient property to provide for her reasonable means and that she was unable to support herself through appropriate employment, as well as the fact that the husband had the financial resources to pay maintenance and still meet his own needs. The District Court judgment was affirmed. In re Marriage of Forney, 221 M 63, 716 P2d 635, 43 St. Rep. 637 (1986). See also In re Marriage of Lundvall, 241 M 172, 786 P2d 10, 47 St. Rep. 173 (1990), and In re Marriage of Harris, 252 M 291, 828 P2d 1365, 49 St. Rep. 255 (1992).

Factors Considered in Maintenance and Support Awards:

An award of maintenance under this section must be made in accordance with the factors this section sets forth. Laster v. Laster, 197 M 470, 643 P2d 597, 39 St. Rep. 737 (1982).

When a District Court is required to make an award of maintenance and support in a dissolution proceeding, it must consider the items and factors set out in 40-4-203 and 40-4-204. Grenfell v. Grenfell, 182 M 229, 596 P2d 205 (1979).

"Sufficient Property" for Spouse's Needs — Income-Producing Property: With respect to this section's requirement that maintenance cannot be awarded unless the spouse who will receive it lacks sufficient property to provide for that spouse's needs, the term "sufficient property" means income-producing, not income-consuming, property. Laster v. Laster, 197 M 470, 643 P2d 597, 39 St. Rep. 737 (1982).

Net Worth of Marital Estate to Be Determined: The true net worth of the marital estate must be accurately determined in accordance with the requirements of 40-4-202 before the issues of equitable apportionment, maintenance, and child support can be resolved. Peterson v. Peterson, 195 M 157, 636 P2d 821, 38 St. Rep. 1723 (1981).

Determination of Net Worth Required — Maintenance: In the distribution of marital property upon dissolution, the District Court must make a determination of the true net worth of assets before an equitable division can be made. The District Court cannot properly determine that the parties lack sufficient property to provide for their needs and are unable to support themselves through appropriate employment (the basis for awarding maintenance) until the marital assets have been valued and equitably apportioned. The District Court must also determine if the property to be awarded is income-producing or income-consuming property. Herron v. Herron, 186 M 396, 608 P2d 97 (1980), proper findings and conclusions made and judgment affirmed in In re Marriage of Herron, 226 M 485, 736 P2d 487, 44 St. Rep. 823 (1987). See also In re Marriage of Hanni, 2000 MT 59, 299 M 20, 997 P2d 760, 57 St. Rep. 279 (2000).

Factual Determinations Imperative:

Maintenance payments require an affirmative showing as a condition precedent to their award. The existence or lack of this condition precedent is to be shown by a recordation of the essential and determining facts upon which the court rested its conclusions of law and without which the judgment lacks support. Schultz v. Schultz, 183 M 20, 597 P2d 1174 (1979). See also Collett v. Collett, 190 M 500, 621 P2d 1093, 38 St. Rep. 36 (1981).

The pertinent factors in 40-4-203 and 40-4-204, with findings of fact to support them, should be set out in the District Court's decision. Otherwise the appellate court has nothing upon which to base its review. Moreover, under 40-4-208 the District Court can grant modification or termination of maintenance and support only if there is a showing of circumstances making the payments unconscionable, which compels proper findings and conclusions. Capener v. Capener, 177 M 437, 582 P2d 326 (1978). See also Park v. Park, 190 M 183, 619 P2d 1200, 37 St. Rep. 1874 (1980).

Construction — Standard of Living During Marriage: The appropriate construction of the language of subsections (1)(a) and (1)(b) of this section is whether the spouse seeking maintenance lacks sufficient property and is unable to support herself through appropriate employment according to the standard of living established during the marriage. Madson v. Madson, 180 M 220, 590 P2d 110 (1978). See also Bowman v. Bowman, 194 M 233, 633 P2d 1198, 38 St. Rep. 1515 (1981); In re Marriage of Goodman, 222 M 446, 723 P2d 219, 43 St. Rep. 1410 (1986); In re Marriage of Luisi, 232 M 243, 756 P2d 456, 45 St. Rep. 1023 (1988); In re Marriage of Skinner, 240

M 299, 783 P2d 1350, 46 St. Rep. 2141 (1989); In re Marriage of Dunn, 285 M 95, 809 P2d 571, 48 St. Rep. 341 (1991), In re Marriage of Van Atta, 252 M 310, 829 P2d 3, 49 St. Rep. 264 (1992), In re Marriage of Dorville, 254 M 111, 836 P2d 588, 49 St. Rep. 658 (1992), distinguishing Dunn, In re Marriage of Lozon, 256 M 59, 843 P2d 793, 49 St. Rep. 1135 (1992), and In re Marriage of Silverman, 259 M 337, 856 P2d 533, 50 St. Rep. 823 (1993). Dunn was cited in In re Marriage of Bross, 256 M 174, 845 P2d 728, 50 St. Rep. 13 (1993).

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law to Agree: Where finding of fact in dissolution of marriage proceeding stated that wife had need for $200 per month for maintenance and in conclusion court allowed $250 per month for maintenance, discrepancy between finding and conclusion could be cured by allowing trial court to amend one or other figure to agree with actual decision on maintenance. Caprice v. Caprice, 178 M 455, 585 P2d 641 (1978).

Mandates Ignored — Effect: It was readily apparent from the District Court record that the trial court judge in his exercise of discretion over the property settlement abused his discretion when he ignored statutory mandates and refused to consider the needs of appellant for some financial assistance during the transition from housewife to a single person. Cromwell v. Cromwell, 174 M 356, 570 P2d 1129 (1977).

EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT FINDINGS

Increase of Maintenance Upon Cessation of Child Support Obligation Not Considered Modification: The District Court concluded that the wife was entitled to maintenance of $750 a month until the husband's child support obligation ceased, at which time the maintenance would increase to $1,250 a month for a total maintenance period of 8 years. The husband asserted that it was error to connect the maintenance award to child support and provide an automatic increase because the future increase was a modification of the maintenance award that required notice and findings of changed circumstances pursuant to 40-4-208. However, the husband did not offer a single case in which a maintenance award was reversed because the trial court considered child support in reaching its conclusion. Further, the award of increasing maintenance payments was one of the terms of the dissolution decree, not a subsequent modification of the terms of the decree that required notice and a showing of changed circumstances, so the award was affirmed. In re Marriage of Harkin, 2000 MT 105, 299 M 298, 999 P2d 969, 57 St. Rep. 422 (2000).

Trust Income Properly Considered in Award of Maintenance: Despite the fact that the husband later resigned as cotrustee of a revocable trust, at the time of trial, he was still acting as cotrustee and was entitled to receive $1,000 a month in compensation. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in finding that he earned $1,000 a month in income as trustee and, following examination of the parties' assets, in awarding the wife $1,000 a month in maintenance. In re Marriage of Beadle, 1998 MT 225, 291 M 1, 968 P2d 698, 55 St. Rep. 943 (1998).

Property Award of Sufficient Income-Producing Property — Maintenance Award Unjustified: Wife complained that the District Court erred in not awarding her maintenance because she was not awarded sufficient income-producing property. Noting that she had been awarded $335,465 in property, including 7 horses, 10 Charolois cattle, 2 Longhorn cattle, 2 pairs of ostriches, horse trailers, irrigation line, and cleaning equipment and a temporary possessory interest in a 160-acre ranch worth at least $480,000 for which she was not responsible to pay taxes, mortgage, or insurance; $400,000 in cash; and $6,977 a month in child support, the court properly concluded that maintenance was not warranted because the property award would provide her with sufficient income-producing property, allow her to support herself through the employment of her choosing, and enable her to enjoy a standard of living similar to the standard that she enjoyed while married. In re Marriage of Pfeifer, 282 M 461, 938 P2d 684, 54 St. Rep. 432 (1997).

Ability to Support Oneself Through Appropriate Employment — Maintenance Unwarranted: Wife contended that the District Court erred in finding that she was able to support herself and that maintenance was therefore not warranted. On review, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that: (1) wife was relatively young and healthy; (2) husband was retired and unable to meet his own expenses because of a monthly loan payment of $5,000; and (3) wife had secured work as a waitress and should be able to support herself through appropriate employment and meet her monthly expenses without an award of maintenance. In re Marriage of Walls, 278 M 413, 925 P2d 483, 53 St. Rep. 974 (1996).

Husband argued that, even though he did not request maintenance, the trial court was required to consider an award of maintenance. However, maintenance was properly not awarded upon a showing that husband could support himself, given the following facts: (1) he was 43 years old and in good health; (2) he had two college degrees, both obtained before the marriage; (3) he had been self-supporting before the marriage, working as a corporate vice president, and was well-respected in the industry in which he had worked; and (4) he was presently employed as a clerk earning about $18,000 a year. In re Marriage of Smith, 270 M 263, 891 P2d 522, 52 St. Rep. 174 (1995).

Maintenance for Wife With Monthly Income $582 Short of Monthly Expenses When Husband's Monthly Income $1,133 Above Monthly Expenses: Wife was entitled to maintenance because her net income was $881 a month and her living expenses were $1,463 a month. The evidence supported the finding that she lacked sufficient property to provide for her needs and was unable to support herself through employment. She testified that her retail sales employer did not allow employees to have another job working for a competitor and that it would be difficult to coordinate the hours of a second job in another field. Retraining or additional education would raise the prospect of a large student loan debt and entering the job market at over 50 years of age. Her standard of living had diminished since the separation. Husband, whose monthly income exceeded monthly expenses by $1,133, was properly ordered to pay $500 a month maintenance. Ellis v. Ellis, 277 M 494, 922 P2d 1176, 53 St. Rep. 801 (1996).

Five-Month Marriage to Husband With Poorer Financial and Employment Prospects and Deteriorating Health — Maintenance for Wife Refused: The lower court properly determined that maintenance for the wife was inappropriate. The wife was young and able-bodied, had a job, was able to support herself, had much brighter educational and economic prospects than her husband, and had been married to him for only 5 months. The husband's left arm was paralyzed, his left side was impaired, and his condition was expected to deteriorate. He had a learning disability, had trouble communicating, and could work only at manual labor jobs. In re Marriage of Bradshaw, 270 M 222, 891 P2d 506, 52 St. Rep. 154 (1995).

Award of Maintenance After Marriage of Short Duration: A maintenance award of $800 a month for 18 months following a marriage of less than 1 year was proper when wife, awarded $1,000 to compensate her for basic household items she disposed of prior to and during the marriage, did not receive sufficient income-producing property to support herself and could not obtain appropriate employment to support herself because of lack of training and sufficient education. In re Marriage of Eschenbacher & Crepeau, 253 M 139, 831 P2d 1353, 49 St. Rep. 393 (1992).

Distortion of Actual Income by Adjustments — Maintenance Award Proper: Husband asserted that he could not make $800-a-month maintenance payments when his annual expenses, including maintenance, would be $29,950.92, but his income was only $22,219. However, the maintenance award was proper in light of the District Court's findings that husband had adjusted his gross annual income downward to reflect depreciation and payments on certain nonincome-producing properties and that without these deductions, his actual annual income was closer to $30,000. In re Marriage of Harris, 252 M 291, 828 P2d 1365, 49 St. Rep. 255 (1992).

Permanent Disability as Evidence of Need for Maintenance: An award of maintenance was proper based on evidence that a 54-year-old woman with an artificial bladder, who was classified as totally disabled by the Social Security Administration and was characterized by her own testimony as unemployable, could not work. In re Marriage of Harris, 252 M 291, 828 P2d 1365, 49 St. Rep. 255 (1992).

Additional Income From Profit Sharing as Allowing Spouse to Meet Personal Needs While Paying Maintenance: Husband contended that his monthly income from salary of $1,500 and monthly expenses of $1,768.45 made a maintenance award of $450 a month to wife erroneous. The Supreme Court affirmed the award after noting that the husband's additional income from an annual profit sharing check in an amount approximately equal to his salary would enable him to provide for his own needs while also paying maintenance. In re Marriage of Newton, 255 M 463, 844 P2d 47, 49 St. Rep. 1068 (1992), following In re Marriage of Jacobson, 255 M 394, 825 P2d 561, 49 St. Rep. 92 (1992).

Maintenance Appropriate: Wife's poor health and husband's ability to earn income and manage assets satisfy the statutory conditions for maintenance award. In re Marriage of Dzivi, 247 M 165, 805 P2d 567, 48 St. Rep. 140 (1991).

No Permanent Maintenance Awarded for Forfeiture of Professional Advancement: The wife argued that she should be awarded permanent maintenance because she had forfeited 20 years of advancement as a teacher by working in the home. The Supreme Court held that the Special Master had taken special care to consider the wife's nonmonetary contributions when computing the maintenance award, and the court found no abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Herman, 245 M 451, 802 P2d 623, 47 St. Rep. 2196 (1990).

Owner of Failed Pizza Business Entitled to Maintenance: The Supreme Court affirmed the award of maintenance to the wife on the basis that for most of the marriage, she had run the household, she had no specific job skills, and her only attempt at outside employment, a pizza business, failed. In re Marriage of Sullivan, 243 M 292, 794 P2d 687, 47 St. Rep. 1231 (1990).

Psychotherapy for Paranoid Wife Appropriate Expense: The husband appealed a maintenance award to the wife that included an amount to pay for her psychotherapy. The Supreme Court ruled that there was substantial evidence proving that the wife suffered from a paranoid mental disorder that if not treated would impair her ability to find employment. The court also found that there was ample evidence for the lower court to find that physical abuse by the husband was causative of the wife's psychological problems. In re Marriage of Ernst, 243 M 114, 793 P2d 777, 47 St. Rep. 1034 (1990).

Maintenance Awarded Despite Short Duration of Marriage: In a divorce action, the husband argued that the lower court erred in awarding the wife maintenance due to the short duration of the marriage. The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court had considered all the factors, of which duration was one, and did not err in making the award. In re Marriage of Cannon, 242 M 230, 790 P2d 479, 47 St. Rep. 752 (1990).

Insistence on Receiving Income-Consuming Property — Denial of Maintenance Proper: During entirety of dissolution proceedings, husband sought to sell a Flathead Lake cabin, which required monthly payments of $1,500, to reduce the drain on the family cash. Wife resisted all attempts to sell it and insisted it be awarded to her as part of the marital estate. Following dissolution, wife sought maintenance because she had not been awarded sufficient income-producing property to provide for her reasonable needs. The District Court did not err in failing to order maintenance payments that were not necessitated by wife's reasonable needs but rather through her voluntary decision to choose a piece of income-consuming property. In re Marriage of Garner, 239 M 485, 781 P2d 1125, 46 St. Rep. 1852 (1989).

Property Settlement and Employment Opportunities Adequate to Supply Reasonable Needs: The District Court properly denied an award of maintenance in light of evidence showing that a payment of $3,000 a month for 2 ½ years as part of a property settlement, coupled with excellent employment opportunities available as a result of attendance at a prestigious law school, was adequate to supply a spouse's reasonable needs. In re Marriage of Garner, 239 M 485, 781 P2d 1125, 46 St. Rep. 1852 (1989).

Consideration of Shared Expenses in Determining Maintenance: The District Court did not err in increasing the amount of available income for maintenance when evidence showed that husband was sharing expenses with a close friend he employed at $12.50 an hour. In re Marriage of Penning, 238 M 75, 776 P2d 1214, 46 St. Rep. 1103 (1989).

Employability and Medical Factors Properly Considered: A maintenance award was proper where wife's medical problems precluded employment while husband was healthy, engaged in stock option trading, and planned to resume his career as a real estate agent. In re Marriage of Purdy, 234 M 502, 764 P2d 857, 45 St. Rep. 2084 (1988).

Spousal Ability for Self-Support — Award of Income-Producing Property and Portion of Marital Estate — Maintenance Properly Refused: The District Court awarded wife a substantial portion of the marital estate, including income-producing property and her business. The court also found she was able to support herself through appropriate employment. Wife's claim for maintenance failed to meet the statutory requirements. In re Marriage of Anderson, 230 M 89, 748 P2d 469, 45 St. Rep. 40 (1988).

Prerequisites for Award of Maintenance Met: District Court findings of wife's limited resources (nonincome-producing family home only), limited educational background (high school education), and length of marriage (22 years) were sufficient to warrant a maintenance award under this section. In re Marriage of Sullivan, 229 M 23, 744 P2d 1240, 44 St. Rep. 1748 (1987).

No Evidence of Inability to Support Self — Maintenance Denied: Because wife failed to prove inability to support herself, she failed to prove herself entitled to maintenance. In re Marriage of Hall, 228 M 36, 740 P2d 684, 44 St. Rep. 1321 (1987).

Evidence Sufficient to Support Retroactive Maintenance Award — Rights Not Prejudiced by Award Made at Time of Dissolution: A temporary order of child support issued at the date of dissolution 2 years prior to final judgment did not prejudice the rights of the parties or the children adjudicated at the later hearings. It was clearly within the District Court's discretion, after hearing the matter of child support and maintenance, to make the award of maintenance retroactive to the date of dissolution. In re Marriage of Revious, 226 M 304, 735 P2d 301, 44 St. Rep. 674 (1987), followed in In re Marriage of Spence, 257 M 188, 849 P2d 161, 50 St. Rep. 225 (1993).

Retraining Needs and Children's Needs — Maintenance Justified: Wife's need for retraining in order to enter the job market and the needs of the children relating to care and education, when coupled with a lack of sufficient property and incapability of self-support, were sufficient to warrant a $300 a month maintenance award for 5 years. In re Marriage of Manus, 225 M 457, 733 P2d 1275, 44 St. Rep. 398 (1987).

Duration of Maintenance Too Brief — Wife's Immediate Earning Prospects Questionable: The District Court relied too heavily on the husband's assertion that the wife could earn $17,000 a year as an elementary school teacher in awarding maintenance for only 1 year. The wife was 46 years old, did not hold a current teaching certificate, and had not worked as a teacher for the last 16 years. The husband worked throughout the marriage and made $2,000 a month. Awarding maintenance for 1 year did not meet the criteria of this section. It ignored the time necessary to find employment, the standard of living of the marriage, the duration of the marriage, the age and physical condition of the wife, and the husband's ability to meet his needs. In re Marriage of Rolfe, 216 M 39, 699 P2d 79, 42 St. Rep. 623 (1985).

Distinctions Based on Duration of Marriage and Employability of Spouse: The court did not abuse its discretion in setting its maintenance award since the wife was able to work and contribute to her own maintenance. This case is to be distinguished from those in which there were marriages of long standing, and the circumstances were such that the wife was not able to go out and successfully compete in the job market. In re Marriage of Loegering, 212 M 499, 689 P2d 260, 41 St. Rep. 1892 (1984); In re Marriage of Jorgensen, 180 M 294, 590 P2d 606 (1979). See also Bowman v. Bowman, 194 M 233, 633 P2d 1198, 38 St. Rep. 1515 (1981).

Working Wife Given House and $52,000: It was not an abuse of discretion to deny maintenance to wife who had been employed for the past 25 years, had $530 a month take-home pay, and received from the marital estate a house, $8,000 in stock, and $44,000, $24,000 of which would be paid in installments of $400 a month. Snell v. Snell, 205 M 359, 668 P2d 238, 40 St. Rep. 1359 (1983).

Disparity in Income and Health Justifying Maintenance: Husband and wife were married for 19 years. During the marriage wife was a homemaker, took care of the parties' two children, and did not work outside the home. One child has now reached adulthood. Both children live with the wife. The wife has no vocational skills and is not in good health. She earns $3.50 an hour. Husband earns $1,980.42, net, a month on his regular job and earns extra money selling health care products. He is in good health, and his job is secure. The District Court ordered that the husband pay maintenance, child support, and the wife's attorney fees. Husband appealed the maintenance and attorney fees awards. The Supreme Court ruled that in view of the evidence presented on the parties' relative financial situations, the award of maintenance was not clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court further ruled that for similar reasons, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in awarding attorney fees to the wife. Carr v. Carr, 205 M 269, 667 P2d 425, 40 St. Rep. 1263 (1983).

Wife Caring for Retarded Adult Child: In determining maintenance issue, trial court must give consideration to wife's need for maintenance in light of the property division, her age and health, and the condition of mentally retarded child over 21 who resided with her, as child was incapable of staying alone for more than 3 hours at a time. In re Marriage of Wolfe, 202 M 454, 659 P2d 259, 40 St. Rep. 211 (1983).

Failure to Consider Homemaker Contributions and Future Financial Picture: The evidence did not show on appeal that the District Court considered the factors required by 40-4-202 to be considered in apportioning the marital assets, and in particular did not show that the court considered the wife's contributions as homemaker or the apparent significant difference between the spouses in regard to future acquisition of capital assets and income. Thus, additional findings were required as a proper foundation for an equitable property distribution. The award of maintenance to the wife would be vacated as well as the property disposition. Upon redetermining the property distribution, the District Court should further consider the needs of both spouses and decide whether the wife lacked sufficient property to provide for her needs and whether she would be able to support herself. The husband in this case had a net worth of $194,809; the wife had a $10,000 equity in real estate she purchased for $42,000 and owned an interest in a Paris apartment on which the court had not placed a value; husband had a $28,000 a year 1979 income; and wife had an income of approximately $500 a month with little chance that it would increase significantly. In re Marriage of Lewis, 189 M 51, 643 P2d 604, 39 St. Rep. 759 (1982).

Voluntary Departure From Employment Insufficient Basis for Relief From Maintenance Award: Where the marriage of the parties was previously dissolved and the wife awarded maintenance without being required to seek employment in order that she be able to care for a handicapped child at home, the husband was not denied his right of review of the maintenance award by his former wife's voluntary action of leaving her job, thereby making continuation of maintenance necessary. The evidence that the respondent left her job voluntarily was introduced, but the findings and testimony indicate that the trial court found other factors to be determinative in the decision to continue the maintenance payments. The voluntary departure alone does not require a finding that the wife was no longer entitled to maintenance. Tidball v. Tidball, 192 M 1, 625 P2d 1147, 38 St. Rep. 482 (1981).

Maintenance Ordered Following Purchase of Marital Property — No Error Found: In an action for dissolution of marriage in which the defendant was awarded all the property of the parties and was ordered to make 96 monthly property settlement payments of $305.35 each to the plaintiff who showed living expenses of $400 per month and a net salary of $464.98, the trial court did not err in also awarding the plaintiff $100 per month maintenance payments to commence after the termination of all property settlement payments. After the plaintiff's equity in the marital property has been purchased by the defendant's payments, the plaintiff's net worth will have been reduced by the value of her share of the marital property while the defendant's has been correspondingly increased. If the plaintiff were forced to invade the property settlement payments, she would then be forced to consume her marital property while the defendant was able to make an investment. Given these circumstances, there was nothing prejudicial to the defendant in the trial court's award of maintenance. Sundstrom v. Sundstrom, 191 M 371, 624 P2d 1000, 38 St. Rep. 395 (1981).

Findings — Supported by Substantial and Creditable Evidence: The trial court did not abuse its discretion in awarding the wife $200 per month maintenance. Even though the trial court did not go so far as to draw up a monthly budget of wife's reasonable needs, it did make the appropriate findings required by this section supported by substantial and creditable evidence of the status of both parties. In re Marriage of Vivian, 188 M 259, 613 P2d 699 (1980).

Maintenance Denied — Evidence of Self-Support and Income Property: The trial court correctly denied maintenance to wife because she had been employed and self-supporting for 2 years prior to the divorce and because she had been awarded cash by way of annual installment payments and other income properties. Knudson v. Knudson, 186 M 8, 606 P2d 130 (1980).

Award of Maintenance — Consideration of Overtime Pay: The Supreme Court upheld an award of maintenance for 3 years to the wife in an action for dissolution. The wife was not capable of earning more than the minimum wage because of lack of education and training. She had custody of a 9-year-old child, and the husband had an average monthly net income of $1,300. The District Court properly considered overtime pay in determining the husband's income potential. Vashler v. Vashler, 183 M 444, 600 P2d 208 (1979).

Maintenance Related Only to Needs of Spouse Seeking It — Discretion of Court: An award of maintenance is related only to the needs of the spouse seeking maintenance, and the wide discretion of the court in determining maintenance is not to be disturbed unless clearly erroneous. When findings that a wife lacked sufficient property to provide for her reasonable needs and was unable to support herself were supported by the record, the court's award of maintenance to her met the test. Aanenson v. Aanenson, 183 M 229, 598 P2d 1120 (1979), followed in In re Marriage of Skinner, 240 M 299, 783 P2d 1350, 46 St. Rep. 2141 (1989), and in In re Marriage of Eide, 250 M 490, 821 P2d 1036, 48 St. Rep. 1054 (1991).

Both Parties Capable of Working: The court held that since both parties were capable of working no maintenance was required. Jermunson v. Jermunson, 181 M 97, 592 P2d 491 (1979).

Alimony Provision in Property Settlement: Where wife accepted alimony in lieu of distribution of other property, alimony provision of property settlement agreement as incorporated in divorce decree was intended to act as inseverable contractual provision and could not be stricken from decree, despite claimed unconstitutionality of alimony statute. Taylor v. Taylor, 167 M 164, 537 P2d 483 (1975).

Error in Not Considering Wife's Qualifications for Alimony: Trial court's finding that wife should leave marriage with nothing, leaving her at large in community without means of support due to her lack of marketable skills and physical disabilities, because she had brought no assets into marriage was erroneous where for 14 years wife had contributed to marriage by helping on family farm, by aiding husband in building of an addition to farm home, and by performance of domestic duties. Stenberg v. Stenberg, 161 M 164, 505 P2d 110 (1973).

REVIEW OF MAINTENANCE AWARD

Home Providing Both Housing and Potential Income — Failure to Show Inability for Self-Support — No Maintenance Award: The wife argued that the District Court improperly failed to provide her a cash maintenance award because she was unable to meet her needs and those of the children without one. However, this section requires a showing that a spouse requesting maintenance both lacks sufficient property to provide for needs and is unable to support oneself.

In this case, the wife failed to show that she could not support herself. The husband was required to pay child support, plus one-half the mortgage payments on the family home to which the wife had exclusive use. The wife also testified that the property would allow her to expand her horse boarding business and rent an apartment attached to the house, providing additional potential income. The decision not to award additional maintenance was not clearly erroneous and was affirmed on review. In re Marriage of Stoneman, 2000 MT 274, 302 M 107, 14 P3d 12, 57 St. Rep. 1145 (2000).

Evidence of Parties' Relative Financial Condition Unsupportive of Maintenance — Award Vacated: An award of maintenance must be based on substantial evidence presented by the parties and clearly identified and articulated by the court. In the present case, wife presented evidence of need, but the award of maintenance was not consistent with the evidence of husband's financial condition, nor did it take into account wife's bank account balance or monthly medical premiums that she received through her employment. The award was vacated on remand for a recalculation based on the evidence. In re Marriage of Stufft, 286 M 239, 950 P2d 1373, 54 St. Rep. 1391 (1997).

Award of $100 Annually for Five Years Affirmed: Despite wife's contention that the District Court erred in awarding her maintenance of $100 a year for 5 years, the Supreme Court affirmed the award, noting that in its findings of fact, the District Court had considered the party's property assets, employment opportunities, earning capacity, and marital debt and that the findings were not clearly erroneous. Wife retained the option to seek a modification upon a showing of changed circumstances so substantial and continuing as to make the terms of the decree unconscionable. In re Marriage of Lee, 282 M 410, 938 P2d 650, 54 St. Rep. 409 (1997).

Lack of Evidence of Income From Law Practice and Availability of Employment — Case Remanded for Findings: In its order dissolving the marriage of David and Mayla, the District Court found that David had an income of $35,000 a year from his law practice and $50,000 a year from his position as family farm manager. The District Court awarded Mayla $2,000 a month as maintenance for 2 years or until she became employed by the school district of her new residence, whichever came first. David claimed that he was not capable of paying the $2,000 a month. The Supreme Court found that there was no evidence to support the law practice income attributed to David by the District Court. Additionally, the Supreme Court noted that David claimed that he had resigned as farm manager and that although under In re Marriage of Chiovaro, 247 M 185, 805 P2d 575 (1991), a court may impute income to a party if past employment remains available to the party, there was no evidence in the record showing that the position as farm manager remained available to David. The Supreme Court therefore remanded the case to the District Court to make findings consistent with the order. The Supreme Court also noted that in making those findings, the District Court should, in accordance with subsection (2)(a) of this section, consider the award of child support. In re Marriage of Stufft, 276 M 454, 916 P2d 767, 53 St. Rep. 467 (1996).

Issue of Maintenance Remanded to District Court When Apportionment of Marital Property Also Remanded: In the decree of dissolution of Margaret and Mark's marriage, the District Court set out a schedule for payment of maintenance by Mark and also refused to award certain shares of ranch corporate stock to Margaret. The Supreme Court reversed the property distribution determined by the District Court and remanded the case to the District Court for further proceedings. Because an award of maintenance must consider the amount of marital property apportioned between the parties, the Supreme Court also remanded the case to the District Court for a further determination of maintenance in light of the further apportionment of marital property. In re Marriage of Davies, 266 M 466, 880 P2d 1368, 51 St. Rep. 929 (1994).

Failure to Make Complete Findings Regarding Ability to Make Maintenance Payments — Remand: The District Court ordered husband to pay $150 a month in maintenance for 2 years but did not consider his visitation travel expenses; amounts owed to attorneys, expert witnesses, and counselors; or the reasonable cost of housing when considering his monthly expenses and needs. The award was vacated and remanded for further findings as to whether, after consideration of these expenses and a reasonable allowance for repayment of debts, the husband had the financial ability to meet his needs and still pay maintenance. In re Marriage of D.F.D. & D.G.D., 261 M 186, 862 P2d 368, 50 St. Rep. 1280 (1993).

Permanent Lifetime Maintenance: A court may award permanent lifetime maintenance if the facts necessitate it. In re Marriage of Burris, 258 M 265, 852 P2d 616, 50 St. Rep. 525 (1993).

Incarceration Not Sufficient Grounds to Retroactively Modify Maintenance Award: The husband argued that the lower court should have retroactively modified its maintenance award because his incarceration changed his circumstances. The Supreme Court held that the amount of the award was based on the wife's needs and that the husband had sufficient liquid assets to cover the maintenance payments regardless of the fact that he was incarcerated. In re Marriage of Olsen, 257 M 208, 848 P2d 1026, 50 St. Rep. 234 (1993).

Remand for Consideration of Possible Maintenance Award: Wife's workers' compensation permanent total disability payments were scheduled to cease after 10 years, leaving her potentially unable to support herself, and she had spent the bulk of her cash distribution on postseparation living expenses and legal fees in litigating the divorce. Because the case was remanded for a redetermination of the valuation of marital property, the Supreme Court also directed a reconsideration of whether a maintenance award was appropriate under the circumstances. In re Marriage of Schmitz, 255 M 159, 841 P2d 496, 49 St. Rep. 919 (1992).

Standard of Review on Appeal:

In determining whether a maintenance award was clearly erroneous, the Supreme Court applied the test set out in Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285, 48 St. Rep. 986 (1991): (1) the Supreme Court will review the record to determine whether findings are supported by substantial evidence; (2) if findings are supported by substantial evidence, the Supreme Court will determine whether the trial court has misapprehended the effect of the evidence; and (3) if substantial evidence exists and the effect of the evidence has not been misapprehended, the Supreme Court may still find that a finding is clearly erroneous when, although there is evidence to support it, a review of the record leaves the court with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed. In re Marriage of Eschenbacher & Crepeau, 253 M 139, 831 P2d 1353, 49 St. Rep. 393 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Dorville, 254 M 111, 836 P2d 388, 49 St. Rep. 658 (1992), In re Marriage of Sacry, 253 M 378, 833 P2d 1035, 49 St. Rep. 452 (1992), In re Marriage of Weed, 254 M 162, 836 P2d 591, 49 St. Rep. 861 (1992), and in In re Marriage of McLean/Fleury, 257 M 55, 849 P2d 1012, 50 St. Rep. 35 (1993).

If there is no clear abuse of discretion resulting in substantial injustice, the award made by the District Court will not be disturbed. In re Marriage of Deichl, 239 M 425, 781 P2d 254, 46 St. Rep. 1801 (1989); In re Marriage of Loegering, 212 M 499, 689 P2d 260, 41 St. Rep. 1892 (1984); Grenfell v. Grenfell, 182 M 229, 596 P2d 205 (1979), following Brown v. Brown, 179 M 417, 587 P2d 361 (1978). See also Levandowski v. Levandowski, 193 M 121, 630 P2d 239, 38 St. Rep. 1002 (1981).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in the award of support and maintenance to appellant or in the property disposition since the record failed to disclose an arbitrary exercise of discretion without employment of conscientious judgment. In re Marriage of Wash, 239 M 204, 779 P2d 526, 46 St. Rep. 1622 (1989); In re Marriage of Loegering, 212 M 499, 689 P2d 260, 41 St. Rep. 1892 (1984); Jerome v. Jerome, 175 M 429, 574 P2d 997 (1978). See also Tidball v. Tidball, 192 M 1, 625 P2d 1147, 38 St. Rep. 482 (1981).

The following test is applicable in reviewing a lower court judgment in a dissolution: "Did the District Court in the exercise of its discretion act arbitrarily without employment of conscientious judgment or exceed the bounds of reason resulting in substantial injustice?" In re Marriage of Edwards, 215 M 512, 699 P2d 67, 42 St. Rep. 593 (1985).

Improper Modification of Maintenance Awarded "for Life": The District Court modified a property settlement agreement, which provided that the wife receive $300 a month "as maintenance for life" in lieu of property for which she was to receive income, after husband unilaterally discontinued maintenance when wife began receiving social security payments. The maintenance agreement was a plain and unambiguous contract between the parties that was not subject to later interpretation or construction by a court. The agreement was drawn up by husband, a practicing attorney, who clearly understood the meaning of the term "for life". The District Court erred in modifying the agreement, absent a showing of substantial credible evidence that modification was warranted, without considering all necessary information in the original settlement agreement. In re Marriage of McKeon, 252 M 15, 826 P2d 537, 49 St. Rep. 127 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Woodford, 254 M 501, 839 P2d 574, 49 St. Rep. 887 (1992).

Failure to Consider Statutory Factors and Nature of Assets in Setting Temporary Maintenance Award: An award of $100 a week temporary maintenance was unjustified in light of wife's financial resources, education, employment skills, age, physical and emotional condition, duration of the marriage, standard of living established during the marriage, and husband's ability to provide maintenance in an amount that was fair and just. The Supreme Court remanded after finding that the factors of this section were not considered, the marital estate was not properly valued, and there was no consideration of the nature of the majority of assets awarded to wife. In re Marriage of Rudio & Harlan, 238 M 485, 778 P2d 410, 46 St. Rep. 1437 (1989).

Award of Maintenance to Able-Bodied Spouse Upheld: In a dissolution proceeding, the husband argued that an award of a $750-a-month maintenance for not less than 5 years to his wife was not justified because she was in good health and physically capable of working. The maintenance award was upheld on the basis that maintenance is proper when the requesting party is physically capable of working but needs training for employment. In re Marriage of Stephenson, 237 M 157, 772 P2d 846, 46 St. Rep. 700 (1989).

Judge's Discretion to Award Maintenance When Not Specifically Requested: A court's discretion to award relief to which a party is entitled, even if it is not requested, under Rule 54(c), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), is subject in dissolution proceedings to established statutory dissolution guidelines. Under this section, a court is required to make specific findings regarding maintenance. The findings are subject to review. In re Marriage of Hughes, 236 M 427, 770 P2d 499, 46 St. Rep. 482 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Haney, 267 M 107, 882 P2d 497, 51 St. Rep. 981 (1994).

Consent to Modification by Court: The parties executed a separation agreement containing a maintenance clause calling for monthly payments from husband to wife. The agreement was incorporated in the dissolution decree. In a subsequent action to enforce the clause, the District Court concluded that the parties intended the monthly payments to be a property division and ordered respondent husband to draft a promissory note secured by a mortgage lien payable to his wife. The Supreme Court held that the District Court could not, in its own discretion, remove the maintenance provision and recalculate the parties' property distribution. However, by reason of the consent of the parties, the court was given power to make a modification in the terms of the agreement, but under these circumstances, it was not appropriate to use a real estate mortgage. In re Marriage of Nelson, 235 M 227, 766 P2d 873, 45 St. Rep. 2340 (1988).

Current Employability of Elderly Wife: The Supreme Court remanded for clarification a decision that a 66-year-old wife was currently employable. In re Marriage of Dow, 230 M 416, 750 P2d 1064, 45 St. Rep. 317 (1988).

Impossibility of Maintenance Payments: Husband's annual income was $20,422.50, but expenses were $1,680.25 a month or $20,163 annually. This left him a surplus of $259.50 a year. It was found to be impossible for him to make maintenance payments of $925 a month, and it appeared wife would have husband sell his only current source of income, rental payments from his farm, in order to support her. The case was remanded for a redetermination of maintenance. In re Marriage of Tow, 229 M 483, 748 P2d 440, 44 St. Rep. 2154 (1987).

Antenuptial Agreement Maintenance Provision Improper: It was error for the District Court to honor a provision in an antenuptial Contract that disallowed consideration of each party's property owned prior to the marriage for purposes of determining maintenance and property disposition because such a provision conflicts with the inherent public policy expressed in this section. In re Marriage of Feisthamel, 227 M 321, 739 P2d 474, 44 St. Rep. 1117 (1987).

Separation Agreement Overlooked — Discretion Abused: The District Court acted unreasonably and arbitrarily in abuse of its discretion by: (1) concluding that the parties' separation agreement, which provided maintenance to the wife, was abandoned in absence of supporting evidence; (2) distributing the marital estate 4 to 1 favoring the husband; (3) ordering the wife fully responsible for the family home payments and liable to the husband for his equity in the home upon default; and (4) not providing any maintenance to the wife to make these payments after finding that she was in need of maintenance. In re Marriage of Bowman, 226 M 99, 734 P2d 197, 44 St. Rep. 488 (1987).

Designation of Living Expense Payments as Maintenance: The District Court did not err in designating monthly sums paid to wife to help with living expenses as maintenance rather than as prepayment of her share of the marital estate when her trial testimony showed she met the standards for maintenance set out in this section. In re Marriage of Pryor, 224 M 488, 731 P2d 895, 43 St. Rep. 2358 (1986).

Maintenance and Child Support Order Remanded — Insufficient Evidence of Ability to Meet Personal and Spouse's Needs: The Supreme Court remanded an order requiring husband to pay $200 a month support for each of three children, to pay all medical, optical, dental, and drug bills incurred by the children but not covered by insurance, and to pay $300 a month maintenance to wife. The court found no evidence that: (1) the trial court applied the formula set out in In re Marriage of Carlson, 214 M 209, 693 P2d 496, 41 St. Rep. 2419 (1984), in awarding child support; and (2) the wife's age or physical or emotional condition prevented her from seeking employment to meet her needs independently. The court further noted that father's financial obligations very nearly exceeded his financial resources and that after meeting his marriage-related debts, support, and maintenance obligations, he was not left with enough to meet his own personal needs. In re Marriage of Keel, 223 M 305, 726 P2d 812, 43 St. Rep. 1742 (1986).

Scope of Review — Relevant Statutory Factors Considered: The scope of Supreme Court review of a maintenance award is determining whether the District Court properly considered the statutory factors set out in this section and whether there is substantial evidence to support the findings. The District Court is not required to draw up a monthly budget of reasonable expenses. In re Marriage of Cannon, 223 M 42, 723 P2d 951, 43 St. Rep. 1517 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Peetz, 252 M 448, 830 P2d 543, 49 St. Rep. 362 (1992).

Interest on Future Maintenance: Maintenance does not accrue until is becomes due, and an award of future maintenance does not warrant interest on the maintenance. In re Marriage of Williams, 220 M 232, 714 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 319 (1986).

Lost Career Maintenance Award — Forgone Wages and Retirement Benefits: The parties were married in 1963, and in that year the wife received a bachelor's degree in Art. She currently holds a provisional teaching certificate. After marriage, she remained at home to care for the children and home. The husband was given $396,294 of the marital estate, and the wife was given $202,890. She was also given 4 years of $800-a-month maintenance and 4 years of school costs at $1,353 a year. The court found that she sustained career losses of $76,313 in retirement benefits and $86,284 in salary and awarded her those amounts as additional maintenance, to be paid one-tenth a year starting 4 years after the date of the dissolution decree, without interest. The court found that in view of the lost career award it was equitable to award almost twice as much property to the husband as to the wife. The Supreme Court upheld the career loss award. In re Marriage of Williams, 220 M 232, 714 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 319 (1986).

One Year of Maintenance Insufficient for Wife Who Had Not Worked for Ten Years: Wife had a B.S. degree, had been a pediatric microchemistry lab worker for 11 years prior to the marriage, did not work during the marriage, and had not worked for 10 years. She started working upon separation and was making about $175 and $300 a month teaching piano lessons and selling skin care products, respectively. The husband was a self-employed electrician with a varying income of about $25,000 a year. There was evidence that the wife would need additional schooling to return to her lab work, that it would be very difficult for wife to work 40 hours a week teaching piano or selling cosmetics, and that she and the children were struggling financially while the husband was not. It was error to award her only the 1 year's maintenance of $7,440 husband had paid during the separation, because it was not enough for her to become financially independent. The case was remanded for a new maintenance determination. In re Marriage of Perry, 217 M 162, 704 P2d 41, 42 St. Rep. 1101 (1985).

Wife's Appeal Held Meritorious — Remand for Redetermination of Maintenance and Attorney Fees: Since wife's appeal had merit, husband's assertion that it did not and his request for damages were denied where, among other things, the court was sympathetic to a claim but did not agree with it, a request for a redetermination of the maintenance award was granted, and a request for attorney fees was remanded for a determination. In re Marriage of Perry, 217 M 162, 704 P2d 41, 42 St. Rep. 1101 (1985).

Maintenance Awarded — Former Wife Not Required to Sell House and Get Job Training: It was not error for the District Court to order appellant to pay permanent maintenance to his former wife even though she was awarded the family residence and was not disabled. The evidence indicated that due to her limited work history and education, respondent was not capable of fully supporting herself. The Supreme Court refused to require respondent to sell her house and get job training. In re Marriage of Edwards, 215 M 512, 699 P2d 67, 42 St. Rep. 593 (1985).

Factors Indicating Maintenance: The parties were married in 1965, and a dissolution was entered in 1984. As part of the decree, the wife was awarded $250 a month maintenance, which was to increase to $500 a month upon the youngest child's reaching majority. The husband contended that the award of maintenance was improper and that maintenance may be granted only if the spouse seeking maintenance lacks sufficient property to provide for her needs and is unable to support herself through appropriate employment. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court was correct in awarding maintenance. At the time of the dissolution after 19 years of marriage, the wife had only a year's experience as a real estate salesperson and it was impossible to determine her probable income without further experience. After the sale of the residence, she would incur a rental expense. The court held that considering the duration of the marriage, the short period of employment experience, and the husband's ability to pay, the requirements of 40-4-203 were met in that the wife did not have sufficient property to provide for her needs, nor was there adequate proof of her ability to support herself. In re Marriage of Schenck, 213 M 310, 692 P2d 6, 41 St. Rep. 2137 (1984), followed in In re Marriage of Jones, 225 M 69, 731 P2d 903, 44 St. Rep. 49 (1987). See also In re Marriage of Roullier, 229 M 348, 746 P2d 1081, 44 St. Rep. 2035 (1987).

Award of Maintenance After Equitable Division of Property: Sections 40-4-202 and 40-4-203 are to be read together. Thus, if the District Court has made an equitable distribution of property but then determines that the property was insufficient to provide for the spouse's financial needs, it may award maintenance. Such a determination must be made individually in each case, requiring the District Court to balance the considerations of both sections, supported by substantial evidence with appropriate findings to form an adequate basis for review. Hilt v. Hilt, 209 M 140, 679 P2d 783, 41 St. Rep. 604 (1984).

Maintenance Award — Findings Sufficiently Specific Where Appellant of Little Help and Lacks Credibility: The parties were married to each other twice. Following the second dissolution, the wife was awarded maintenance until remarriage, death, or passage of 10 years. The District Court found that the property distributed to wife was income-consuming as opposed to income-producing property. The wife was facing a monthly deficit situation. The husband, through financial wheeling and dealing, had previously taken considerable amounts from the estate of the wife. The husband failed to substantiate his financial position, and his credibility was questionable. The Supreme Court found that the trial court had done its best to make statutory findings with no help from the husband. The wife's current standard of living was considerably lower than during the marriage. The award of maintenance was proper and was supportable based on the facts and the weight given to the witness' credibility. Thompson v. Thompson, 208 M 156, 676 P2d 223, 41 St. Rep. 237 (1984).

Award of "Adjustment Allowance" Upheld: In a dissolution proceeding, the wife was awarded an "adjustment allowance" of $150 a month for 2 years, to be paid by her husband. The husband appealed, arguing that the District Court abused its discretion by making an award not provided for by law and by not substantiating the reasons for the award. The Supreme Court affirmed the award, holding that the District Court properly evaluated the factors set forth in the statute and that regardless of the name attached to the award, it was an award of separate maintenance. In re Marriage of Chapin, 202 M 153, 655 P2d 991, 39 St. Rep. 2392 (1982).

Statutory Factors Considered and Referred to Sufficient — Findings as to Mineral Interest and Attorney Fees Required: In awarding child custody to the husband, the court included in its finding the factors outlined in 40-4-212. In ordering the husband to pay maintenance, the court applied the factors set forth in 40-4-203 and referred to them in its findings of fact. There is no clear abuse of discretion by the District Court on either of these issues, and therefore the findings are affirmed. The District Court did not, however, place a value on a mineral interest, and the findings do not explain this exclusion. The court also failed to substantiate why attorney fees were not awarded to the wife. The case is therefore remanded to make findings on the value of the mineral interest and to state reasons as to the grant or denial of the wife's attorney fees. Hammeren v. Hammeren, 201 M 443, 663 P2d 1152, 39 St. Rep. 2222 (1982).

Agreement Basing Payments on Taxable Income of Payor Unconscionable: Four years after entry of a decree of dissolution of marriage, wife moved the District Court to hold husband in contempt for failure to comply with the property settlement agreement that had been incorporated in the dissolution decree and to increase monthly maintenance payments. The agreement provided that husband pay wife $750 a month or 13% of his annual income. The amount of the monthly payment was to be adjusted annually, based on husband's taxable income for the previous calendar year. The District Court refused to hold husband in contempt and denied wife's modification motion, holding that the evidence presented did not indicate that circumstances had changed so much as to render the agreement unconscionable within the meaning of 40-4-208. The District Court interpreted the words "taxable income" to mean taxable income within the meaning of the Internal Revenue Code, except that husband would not be permitted to subtract the amount of his maintenance payments in calculating his taxable income. This interpretation ensured that wife would receive larger payments in the future. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court on the contempt issue but reversed on the maintenance issue, ruling that the agreement was unconscionable as a matter of law because husband could adjust his deductible expenses in such a way as to reduce the total amount of his taxable income and ultimately the amount of wife's monthly maintenance payments. In re Marriage of Rowen, 199 M 315, 649 P2d 1259, 39 St. Rep. 1423 (1982).

Drawing Account for Maintenance — Permissible Uses: Wife in divorce proceeding was granted a four-plex, the income to be used to fulfill husband's maintenance and support obligations amounting to $1,000 a month. The husband was to maintain a $1,000 bank account in wife's name upon which wife could draw to the extent that the four-plex did not provide income of $1,000 a month. The account was not established until several months after dissolution of the marriage, and wife drew upon it to cover child support owed by husband for the period between the dissolution and the establishment of the account. Husband then closed the account on the basis of an agreement that he could do so if wife withdrew money from it for any purpose other than to make up the difference should the four-plex not provide a $1,000 income in any given month. On wife's motion for enforcement of the divorce decree, trial court properly directed the husband to reestablish the account, as husband had an obligation to care for the children, as provided in the divorce decree, during the period between the decree date and the opening of the account. In re Marriage of Baker, 198 M 371, 646 P2d 522, 39 St. Rep. 1031 (1982).

Spendable Income Determination — Salary Deductions: District Court improperly calculated husband's spendable income when it took account of federal taxes deducted from his salary but did not take account of other deductions, such as state taxes, retirement payments, insurance payments, and union dues. However, the error was harmless and did not require remand because his spendable income was determined in order to decide how much maintenance he could pay, and he could pay the amount awarded when his other income was taken into consideration. Laster v. Laster, 197 M 470, 643 P2d 597, 39 St. Rep. 737 (1982), followed in In re Marriage of Korpela, 219 M 150, 710 P2d 1359, 42 St. Rep. 1912 (1985).

Denial of Maintenance Rendering Spouse Ward of State: If the effect of not awarding a spouse maintenance in a divorce proceeding would be to make that spouse a ward of the state, maintenance should be awarded if possible. In re Marriage of D.C. v. M.C., 195 M 505, 636 P2d 857, 38 St. Rep. 2027 (1981).

Maintenance Required for Incompetent Wife: Portions of divorce decree were remanded for a new disposition that included a reasonable amount of maintenance and would meet the reasonable needs of the wife where wife was seriously mentally ill, had poor prospects for recovery, was unemployable due to her illness, was in the bottom 10% of the population intellectually, and would become a ward of the state if dependent upon the trust income, and husband had a gross income slightly higher than $20,000 a year. In re Marriage of D.C. v. M.C., 195 M 505, 636 P2d 857, 38 St. Rep. 2027 (1981).

FELA Settlement Funds Properly Considered in Amendment of Award of Permanent Maintenance: Where, following the injury of the defendant in a railroad accident, the District Court eliminated an award of permanent maintenance, the court did not abuse its discretion in reinstating the award based upon the defendant's receipt of money in settlement of a Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) claim for his injuries. The fact that the FELA funds cannot be awarded as a property settlement under federal law does not mean that the same money cannot be considered by the District Court in reevaluating its previous denial of permanent maintenance for the plaintiff. Heintzelman v. Heintzelman, 193 M 183, 631 P2d 290, 38 St. Rep. 1074 (1981).

Failure to Provide Coherent Distribution: The trial court failed to determine the net worth of the parties or to value the personal property of the parties distributed by the court. The Supreme Court on review was unable to determine any coherent plan for an equitable distribution of the parties' property. The wife also asserted that she was entitled to maintenance, contending that the trial court had made an erroneous finding as to her earning capacity. This, however, could not be determined until there had been an equitable distribution of property. Because of the failure to value the property or to provide for an overall plan for distribution, the Supreme Court could not adequately review the findings and remanded the case for further proceedings. In re Marriage of McGill, 187 M 187, 609 P2d 278 (1980).

Maintenance Versus Property Settlement — Termination on Remarriage — Intent of Court Decree: In a divorce decree, the language of the decree provided that payments to the wife were to be in lieu of a division of property and were to be for her support and maintenance. This language showed that the intent of the court was clearly that the payments were for support and maintenance, not a division of property, and could therefore be terminated upon wife's remarriage. Bertagnolli v. Bertagnolli, 185 M 1, 604 P2d 299 (1979), followed in In re Marriage of Rowen, 199 M 315, 649 P2d 1259, 39 St. Rep. 1423 (1982).

Reduction of Award: In order to defray substantial debts incurred after separation by a party who later had received a maintenance and support award, the District Court apparently had considered the debt and reduced the award accordingly. This action was upheld as being within the court's discretion, but a property settlement which was computed considering the same debt again could not stand because it effectively penalized the debtor a second time. Grenfell v. Grenfell, 182 M 229, 596 P2d 205 (1979).

Insufficiency of Maintenance Award: In light of the trial court's finding of (1) petitioner's needs for support in addition to her own earnings, (2) the standard of living during her marriage, which included anticipated secure retirement, and (3) respondent's ability to provide continuing support to his former wife, the Supreme Court ordered the decree to be modified so as to provide continued maintenance to petitioner as well as increase the amount of maintenance. In re Marriage of Cromwell, 180 M 40, 588 P2d 1010 (1979). See also In re Marriage of Rolfe, 216 M 39, 699 P2d 79, 42 St. Rep. 623 (1985).

Maintenance to Be Determined After Division of Marital Estate: The needs of the spouse as to maintenance and the reasonableness of such an award can only be properly determined after there has been an equitable division of the marital estate. Vivian v. Vivian, 178 M 341, 583 P2d 1072 (1978).

MISCELLANEOUS

Veteran Disability Benefits Federally Protected From Inclusion in Marital Estate — Disability Benefits Considered in Award of Spousal or Child Support as Party's Ability to Earn Income: The District Court included a portion of the husband's Veterans Benefits Association (VA) disability benefits as part of the division of marital property. The Supreme Court held that under the antiattachment clause of 38 U.S.C. 5301, VA disability benefits are federally protected from inclusion in the marital estate. In enacting that section and the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act, 10 U.S.C. 1408, Congress preempted state courts from including VA disability benefits in the marital estate because VA disability benefits are not considered "disposable retired pay" to be treated as marital property. An award of VA disability benefits upon dissolution amounts to a seizure of those benefits in violation of 38 U.S.C. 5301. To avoid damaging federal objectives, the property division dictates of 40-4-202 must yield to the federal law. Consistent with both federal and state law, a District Court may consider VA disability benefits in the same way that it considers each party's ability to earn income after dissolution as an important factor in achieving an equitable property division, including consideration of the military disability retirement pay as a source of income in the award of spousal maintenance or child support, or generally as an economic circumstance of the parties justifying a disproportionate award of marital property to the nonretiree spouse. Thus, disability payments should not, either in form or substance, be treated as marital property subject to division upon dissolution. However, under Rose v. Rose, 481 US 619 (1987), a state court is free to consider postdissolution disability income and to order a disabled veteran to pay spousal support even when disability benefits would be used to make support payments. In re Marriage of Strong, 2000 MT 178, 300 M 331, 8 P3d 763, 57 St. Rep. 709 (2000), following Mansell v. Mansell, 490 US 581 (1989), and In re Marriage of Murphy, 261 M 363, 862 P2d 1143 (1993). See also McCarty v. McCarty, 453 US 210 (1981).

Lump-Sum Maintenance Award Based on Concerns for Husband's Health Affirmed: The trial court concluded that the wife was entitled to a lump-sum maintenance award because of significant concerns about the security of future maintenance payments because of the husband's poor health and inability to sustain gainful employment. The husband contended on appeal that the lump-sum award was erroneous. The trial court's concerns were well founded, despite the husband's contention that his health was improving, so the Supreme Court affirmed the lump-sum award. In re Marriage of Harkin, 2000 MT 105, 299 M 298, 999 P2d 969, 57 St. Rep. 422 (2000).

Facts Regarding Spousal Maintenance Known Nearly Twenty-One Months Before Trial — Leave to Amend Properly Denied: Within one month before trial, a wife sought to amend her petition for dissolution of marriage to include a claim for spousal support. The trial court denied the motion as untimely, and the case went to trial as scheduled. The wife appealed on grounds that the court abused its discretion by not freely giving leave to amend the petition. However, the issue of maintenance was not previously part of the case, which had been pending for more than 2 years. The wife's claim was based on facts known to her nearly 21 months earlier, yet she did not raise the issue until the eve of trial. She offered no reason for the delay in filing the motion, nor did she do anything pretrial to bring her maintenance claim to the attention of the court or opposing counsel. To expect the husband to proceed to trial on the maintenance issue without adequate discovery or preparation would have been patently unfair and prejudicial, and the court properly denied the motion to amend. Stundal v. Stundal, 2000 MT 21, 298 M 141, 995 P2d 420, 57 St. Rep. 108 (2000), following Peuse v. Malkuch, 275 M 221, 911 P2d 1153, 53 St. Rep. 135 (1996).

Modification of Temporary Maintenance Order — Pending Motion: Lisa maintained that Shawn's motion to modify temporary maintenance was previously denied and that it was improper for the District Court to modify maintenance when no motion was before the court. A review of the record showed that Shawn had initially moved to modify temporary maintenance, and the hearing was continued. At a contempt hearing some months later, Shawn explained why he had not paid temporary maintenance and moved for a hearing on his outstanding motion to modify. A hearing on that motion was held about 1 month later. Thus, when the court ruled on Shawn's motion, it was ruling on a still-pending motion, and the modification was not in error. In re Marriage of Lee, 282 M 410, 938 P2d 650, 54 St. Rep. 409 (1997).

Award of Lump-Sum Maintenance Award Proper: Although Montana law does not make any specific provision for the award of lump-sum maintenance payments, neither does it specifically prohibit such an award. If possible, the District Court should retain its power to modify the alimony provision either way. While it may provide greater flexibility to the court in terms of future modifications of a maintenance decree to award periodic versus lump-sum maintenance, there is no basis on which to prohibit a lump-sum award if it meets the statutory criteria and best meets the recipient's needs under the particular facts of the case at issue. In re Marriage of Schara, 266 M 76, 878 P2d 908, 51 St. Rep. 676 (1994).

Sua Sponte Maintenance Award Upheld: Colleen and Daniel were married in 1983 and divorced approximately 10 years later. During the pendency of the dissolution, Daniel made no maintenance payments to Colleen, even though she was a student and had no income of her own. On its own motion, the District Court awarded Colleen retroactive temporary maintenance of $4,200 plus one-half of the parties' 1991 income tax refund. The Supreme Court upheld the award, ruling that the District Court properly exercised its discretion in making the award. In re Marriage of Strizic, 263 M 193, 867 P2d 386, 51 St. Rep. 11 (1994).

Error in Awarding Indefinite Maintenance: The trial court granted wife maintenance during the time necessary to complete a nursing degree, estimated by her to be 2 to 5 years, but the court placed no time limitation on the award. Thus, the decree could result in a maintenance obligation for an indefinite period of time. The Supreme Court favors providing the person obligated to pay maintenance as much certainty as possible regarding the amount and duration of the obligation. Therefore, the case was remanded for hearing to determine a reasonable limitation on the duration of the maintenance award. In re Marriage of Zander, 262 M 215, 864 P2d 1225, 50 St. Rep. 1522 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Simms, 264 M 317, 871 P2d 899, 51 St. Rep. 306 (1994), and distinguished in In re Marriage of Doolittle, 265 M 168, 875 P2d 331, 51 St. Rep. 450 (1994).

Medical Insurance as Form of Maintenance — Time Limitation Required: The trial court required husband to continue wife's medical insurance for an indefinite period of time. The requirement that husband pay medical insurance is another form of maintenance. The Supreme Court favors providing the person obligated to pay maintenance as much certainty as possible regarding the amount and duration of the obligation. Therefore, the case was remanded for hearing to determine the duration of husband's obligation to pay for wife's insurance, consistent with the duration of his obligation to pay other maintenance. In re Marriage of Zander, 262 M 215, 864 P2d 1225, 50 St. Rep. 1522 (1993).

Court to Order Division of Property in Lieu of Maintenance: James Dowd alleged that the District Court had erred in awarding his wife the bakery business. The Supreme Court held that 40-4-202 and this section, when read together, compel a District Court, when proper, to order a division of marital property, as opposed to an award of maintenance, to satisfy the financial need of the parties. In re Marriage of Dowd, 261 M 319, 862 P2d 1123, 50 St. Rep. 1341 (1993).

Union Disability Payments: Union disability payments are subject to meeting maintenance payments and are subject to a qualified domestic relations order to enforce the payments. In re Marriage of Boharski, 257 M 71, 847 P2d 709, 50 St. Rep. 161 (1993).

Judgment Lien Against Husband's Property Not Supportive of Execution Against Interests of Second Wife and Children — Property Subject to Prior Judgments Only: Following dissolution of his marriage, Ken Jones purchased real property in 1986. In May 1987, he executed a homestead declaration on the property pursuant to 70-32-105. In July 1987, he conveyed the property by quitclaim deed, with one-half interest to himself and one-half to his second wife and their two daughters in equal shares. In January 1988, his second wife also filed a declaration of homestead. Also in 1988, Ken declared bankruptcy. As a result of that filing, a dissolution decree property settlement provision that he pay certain sums to his first wife Rita was redesignated as a maintenance obligation. Ken appealed that order, and while the appeal was pending, Ken and his second wife conveyed the real property to Poindexter. Rita executed upon one-half of the sale proceeds, which Poindexter had withheld to satisfy Ken's past-due maintenance and support, but $2,113.53 remained due on the underlying judgment. Rita moved for an order of sale of the property so that she could recover the remaining maintenance plus her attorney fees. The District Court determined that Ken's homestead exemption was abandoned when he sold the property to Poindexter and that because Rita's judgment liens had never been removed or extinguished, the liens attached and encumbered the property at the time the homestead exemption was abandoned and thus the property was conveyed to Poindexter subject to the liens and the execution order. The Supreme Court disagreed and reversed because: (1) Rita had already executed on Ken's half of the sale proceeds and further execution would be against the interests of the second wife and daughters and was therefore unsupported; and (2) the maintenance payments became due and judgments were entered after Ken sold the property. Under 70-21-306, a purchaser takes property subject only to prior judgments; therefore, execution was inappropriate on the property for judgments entered after Poindexter's purchase. In re Marriage of Jones v. Poindexter, 253 M 408, 833 P2d 1044, 49 St. Rep. 501 (1992).

Maintenance Award for Psychotherapy and Education Not Too Indefinite: The husband appealed the lower court's award of maintenance to the wife for psychotherapy and education on the basis that the award was not for an amount certain. The Supreme Court stated that it was impossible for the lower court to know the exact costs of the items for which it had made the award but that the court had placed time limits on the award, thus eliminating much of the uncertainty concerning the husband's liability. In re Marriage of Ernst, 243 M 114, 793 P2d 777, 47 St. Rep. 1034 (1990).

Original Obligations Not Extinguished by New Obligations: The respondent argued that the trial court should have modified his support obligation because he had remarried since the divorce and had a new family to support. The Supreme Court affirmed the decision, stating that the lower court had taken into consideration the respondent's remarriage but had properly found that the respondent's obligation to his first wife and children was not extinguished by his second marriage. In re Marriage of Jones, 242 M 119, 788 P2d 1351, 47 St. Rep. 595 (1990).

Marital Misconduct — Not to Be Considered: Marital misconduct is not a factor to be considered in setting maintenance. In re Marriage of Barnard, 241 M 147, 785 P2d 1387, 47 St. Rep. 152 (1990).

Improper Consideration of Maintenance as Marital Asset: The District Court erred in considering a total of $4,000 in maintenance payments to be a marital asset assignable to the wife. The effect of the order was to charge wife the full amount of maintenance payments made to her under a temporary maintenance order issued in connection with the marital dissolution. In re Marriage of Lundvall, 241 M 172, 786 P2d 10, 47 St. Rep. 173 (1990), distinguished in In re Marriage of Gerhart, 245 M 279, 800 P2d 698, 47 St. Rep. 2106 (1990).

Ability to Pay Maintenance Not Determining Factor: A person's ability to pay maintenance and to meet his own needs is an element that should be given great weight in deciding whether that person should be ordered to pay maintenance, but it is not the deciding factor. In re Marriage of Cole, 234 M 352, 763 P2d 39, 45 St. Rep. 1965 (1988), followed in In re Marriage of Jacobson, 251 M 394, 825 P2d 561, 49 St. Rep. 92 (1992), and in In re Marriage of Tahija, 253 M 505, 833 P2d 1095, 49 St. Rep. 571 (1992).

Heavily Indebted Property With Profits-Use Limitation: A partnership loan agreement with a bank requiring all profits of the heavily indebted partnership to be applied to debt reduction did not change the character of the partnership from income-producing to income-consuming, and the partnership remained income-producing. In re Marriage of Cole, 234 M 352, 763 P2d 39, 45 St. Rep. 1965 (1988).

Maintenance Supplements Property Division — Whether Property Is Income-Producing: Maintenance supplements the property division. If after an equitable division of the marital assets one party lacks sufficient property to fulfill its reasonable financial needs, maintenance may be appropriate. In determining whether a spouse has sufficient property, a court should consider whether that spouse has received income-producing or income-consuming assets. The lower court properly awarded maintenance when wife was unable to support herself in a manner that would approximate the standard of living established during the marriage without the aid of maintenance. In re Marriage of Cole, 234 M 352, 763 P2d 39, 45 St. Rep. 1965 (1988), followed in In re Marriage of Greenlee, 249 M 521, 816 P2d 1073, 48 St. Rep. 818 (1991), and in In re Marriage of Jacobson, 251 M 394, 825 P2d 561, 49 St. Rep. 92 (1992).

Credit for Voluntary Predissolution Maintenance Payments: The trial court did not err in finding maintenance totaling $19,010 was due to wife and then giving husband credit for his voluntary predissolution payments of $29,475. In re Marriage of Voelkel, 226 M 143, 734 P2d 217, 44 St. Rep. 538 (1987).

Short-Term Maintenance for Education — Retired Husband — Retirement Income: Upon dissolution of 35-year marriage, it was not abuse of discretion for the trial court to award approximately equal value of property and resultant income to each party, to split the husband's civil service retirement benefits, and to award $150 a month maintenance to wife for a short period to help her while she returned to school. Maintenance, although diminishing husband's income for a while, differed from an award of marital assets and was clearly permissible for the purpose of making wife self-supporting. In re Marriage of Singer, 222 M 255, 721 P2d 755, 43 St. Rep. 1242 (1986).

Defining Past Payments as Maintenance: District Court's order that certain payments by husband to wife during the past year be treated as maintenance and deductible by the husband for tax purposes was not an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Williams, 220 M 232, 714 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 319 (1986).

Wife's Appeal Held Meritorious — Remand for Redetermination of Maintenance and Attorney Fees: Since wife's appeal had merit, husband's assertion that it did not and his request for damages were denied where, among other things, the court was sympathetic to a claim but did not agree with it, a request for a redetermination of the maintenance award was granted, and a request for attorney fees was remanded for a determination. In re Marriage of Perry, 217 M 162, 704 P2d 41, 42 St. Rep. 1101 (1985).

Statute Inapplicable in Modification Proceeding: This section is not applicable in a proceeding to modify the terms of a dissolution decree when it is not the first opportunity that one spouse has had to litigate the question of maintenance. In re Marriage of Rush, 215 M 498, 699 P2d 65, 42 St. Rep. 581 (1985).

Ex Parte Maintenance Order Entered After Final Decree Upheld: It was proper for the District Court to award wife temporary maintenance ex parte even though the effect of the award was amendment of the dissolution decree without holding the hearing required by Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). The Supreme Court held that since the intent of the District Court's earlier order, i.e., that the wife be maintained pending final disposition of the matter, was not being carried out, it was within the District Court's discretion to grant the wife temporary maintenance. In re Marriage of Rohrich, 211 M 130, 683 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 1261 (1984).

Maintenance Permissible While Attaining Skills: The parties' 7-year marriage was dissolved. The marriage's liabilities exceeded assets. The court gave the husband his semitruck with which to continue earning a living. The wife had no job skills but wanted to become a beautician. The court found that giving the husband most of the assets along with their liabilities was proper but that the wife could not be turned out to fend for herself. In this case it was proper to award the wife maintenance for 40 months while she attended beauty college. Peckenpaugh v. Peckenpaugh, 201 M 314, 655 P2d 144, 39 St. Rep. 2132 (1982).

Future Financial Status — Use of Fiancee's Income in Determining: The income of husband's fiancee could be used to determine husband's future financial status and his ability to pay maintenance. Laster v. Laster, 197 M 470, 643 P2d 597, 39 St. Rep. 737 (1982).

Earnings Exempt From Execution on Unpaid Alimony Judgment: Section 25-13-614, exempting earnings of a judgment debtor from execution, does not differentiate between different types of judgments, plainly provides an exemption of earnings against execution regardless of the nature of the underlying claim, and the Supreme Court cannot insert an exception for delinquent alimony payment judgments. Earnings are exempt from execution on a judgment for unpaid alimony, and though an alimony claim is not strictly a debt, when reduced to judgment it becomes merged in the judgment, loses its underlying character, and the judgment creates a debt the same as any other money judgment. White v. White, 195 M 470, 636 P2d 844, 38 St. Rep. 2041 (1981) (case of first impression).

Gift to Children — No Effect on Duty to Support Wife: There is nothing in the law that transmutes a spouse's generosity toward the support of children past the age of minority into an obligation which relieves the spouse of a potential duty to provide maintenance to the other spouse upon dissolution of the marriage. In re Marriage of D.C. v. M.C., 195 M 505, 636 P2d 857, 38 St. Rep. 2027 (1981).

Interest on Delinquent Support Payments: When the marital dissolution decree is silent as to interest, interest is automatically collectible by the judgment creditor spouse on past due payments for support money or maintenance the same as any other money judgment under 25-9-205. Williams v. Budke, 186 M 70, 606 P2d 515 (1980).

Guidelines Not Ignored — Lump-Sum Settlement: The trial court did not abuse its discretion in awarding a lump-sum settlement and interest on any deferred payment. Interest payments could not be properly characterized as maintenance. Hebel v. Hebel, 176 M 339, 578 P2d 305 (1978).

Property Disposition Required Before Maintenance Allowed: Since the property division statute and maintenance statute have a dual purpose, an award of maintenance is allowed only when a spouse has insufficient assets to cover living expenses and cannot have appropriate employment for reasons stated in the maintenance statute. Thus, maintenance needs can only be determined after there is an equitable division of the marital estate. Johnsrud v. Johnsrud, 175 M 117, 572 P2d 902 (1977).

Wife Entitled to Reimbursement: Trial court properly allowed wife reimbursement for her cash outlay, from her separate property, that directly benefited her husband and his children by a former marriage, as early cases holding a housewife is not entitled to reimbursement or damages in a divorce action are clearly anachronistic in view of modern approach to domestic relations litigation which this court has recognized and which Montana's Legislature has followed by adopting the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act. Rogers v. Rogers, 169 M 403, 548 P2d 141 (1976).

"Property Settlement" Payments Mistakenly Labeled "Alimony" Not Subject to Modification: District Court properly denied husband's motion to set aside alimony award payments on grounds they were void because divorce was granted to him. Husband was estopped after relying upon divorce decree to compel wife to transfer certain property to him to challenge validity of decree because what obviously was intended to be part of the "property settlement" became mistakenly labeled "alimony". Englund v. Englund, 169 M 418, 547 P2d 841 (1976).

Divorce Granted to Husband: Although divorce was granted to husband, where District Court had made finding that both parties were entitled to a divorce, the court had jurisdiction to make alimony award for wife and also had jurisdiction to increase award. Clontz v. Clontz, 166 M 206, 531 P2d 1003 (1975).

Estoppel From Terminating Alimony: Where divorce had been granted to the husband but both parties were at fault, court had jurisdiction to make award of alimony to wife; and since husband had accepted the benefits of the divorce he was estopped from seeking relief from its burdens, which had been agreed to by him in writing at the time of the divorce. Clontz v. Clontz, 166 M 206, 531 P2d 1003 (1975).

Survival of Support Obligation: District Court may make support obligation a continuing one that survives the father's death and is enforceable against his estate. Hornung v. Estate of Lagerquist, 155 M 412, 473 P2d 541 (1970).

40-4-204. Child support — orders to address health insurance — withholding of child support.

Commissioners' Note

This section does not set forth the conditions under which a parent owes a duty of support to a child. Principles affecting duties of support occur elsewhere in the Act, as well as in the other statutes or the common law of the State. Rather, the intent is merely to indicate the factors which a court should consider in setting the amount of support to be paid by either the mother or the father or both. [See 1989 amendment note.] The provision authorizing an order requiring either or both parents to pay child support permits the court to order the custodial parent to contribute to the child's support as well, or to insure that property or payment set aside to the custodial parent for child support are used for that purpose. "Child" includes any child recognized by the laws of the state as "living" or "in being", and, also, a child by adoption. The Section authorizes the issue of child support to be raised in independent proceedings for dissolution of marriage or legal separation.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 542 substituted (7) concerning statutes governing modification or adjustment of a judgment or order establishing a child support order for former text that read: "(7) Each district court judgment, decree, or order establishing a final child support obligation under this part and each modification of a final order for child support must contain a statement that the order is subject to review and modification by the department of public health and human services upon the request of the department or a party under 40-5-271 through 40-5-273 when the department is providing services under Title IV-D of the Social Security Act for the enforcement of the order." Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

1999 Purported Amendment: Although sec. 4, Ch. 545, L. 1999, purported to amend this section, the final version of the text remained unamended.

1997 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 343 at end of (2)(b) substituted "parents" for "custodial parent"; deleted former (2)(e) that read: "the financial resources and needs of the noncustodial parent"; in (2)(g) substituted "parenting plan" for "custody arrangement"; in (8)(a), at end after "support", substituted "obligation to be paid, without need for further court order" for "to be paid"; substituted (8)(a)(i) through (8)(a)(iv) pertaining to the person or entity that a court order, judgment, or decree requires child support to be paid for former (8)(a)(i) through (8)(a)(iv) that read: "(i) the legal custodian of the minor child;

(ii) (A) any other person, organization, or agency having legal physical custody of the minor child under a legal assignment of rights; or

(B) the court for the benefit of the minor child;

(iii) any other person or agency designated as caretaker of the minor child by agreement of the legal custodian; or

(iv) any assignee or other person, organization, or agency authorized to receive or collect child support"; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 552 inserted (3)(d) providing that obligations under this section are subject to the registration and processing provisions of chapter 5, part 9; inserted (5)(d) providing that the support order for an obligor exempt from income withholding for support must include a requirement that if the case is receiving Title IV-D services, support payments must be paid through the department as provided in 40-5-909; in (6) substituted provision that each court order establishing paternity or modifying child support must include a requirement that the parties promptly file with the court and keep up-to-date certain information identifying the parties and health insurance coverage, requiring the court to keep the information confidential, except for giving it to the Department for Title IV-D purposes, and requiring the court order to provide that in a subsequent child support enforcement proceeding, notice and service by mail are permissible under certain conditions for former subsection that read: "For the purposes of income withholding under subsection (5), each district court judgment, decree, or order that establishes or modifies a child support obligation must include a provision requiring the parent obligated to pay support to inform the court and, if the department of public health and human services is providing services under Title IV-D of the Social Security Act for the enforcement of the judgment, decree, or order, the department, of the following:

(a) the name and address of the parent's current employer;

(b) whether the parent has access to health insurance through an employer or other group; and

(c) if insurance coverage is available, the health insurance policy information"; clarified the meaning of (8)(a) regarding to whom payment of child support obligations must be made (voided by Ch. 343 amendment); inserted (8)(b) requiring payment to be made through the Department if the Department is providing Title IV-D services; inserted (9) providing that an order establishing or modifying support must require that a parent or guardian who is the obligee and is also obligated to support the child under 41-3-406, 41-5-403 (renumbered 41-5-1304), or 41-5-523 (renumbered 41-5-1512) assign to the Department all rights the parent or guardian may have to child support that are not otherwise assigned under 53-2-613; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the most appropriate.

Saving Clause: Section 41, Ch. 343, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 42, Ch. 343, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 43, Ch. 343, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] applies to proceedings begun after October 1, 1997, including proceedings regarding modification of orders or decrees existing on October 1, 1997."

Contingent Termination — Request for Federal Exemptions: Section 104, Ch. 552, L. 1997, contained the following contingent termination provisions and order that the Department of Public Health and Human Services seek federal exemptions:

"(1) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date of the suspension if the federal government suspends federal payments to this state for this state's child support enforcement program and for this state's program relating to temporary assistance to needy families because of this state's failure to enact law as required by the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(2) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date that a final decision is rendered in federal court invalidating the child support provisions of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(3) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that one of the following provisions is no longer required by federal law because of repeal of or amendment to federal statutes that require that provision, the provision terminates on the date the certification takes effect:

(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];

(b) [section 11] [40-5-924];

(c) [sections 22 through 24] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, and 40-4-105];

(d) [section 93] [50-15-403];
(e) [section 95] [61-5-107];
(f) the bracketed provisions in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116].

(4) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that the federal government has granted this state an exemption from one of the following provisions, the provision terminates on the date the exemption takes effect:
(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];
(b) [section 11] [40-5-924];
(c) [sections 22 through 24] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, and 40-4-105];
(d) [section 93] [50-15-403, certification filed April 24, 1998];
(e) [section 95] [61-5-107];
(f) the bracketed provisions in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116].

(5) (a) The department of public health and human services shall do everything reasonably within its power to obtain, as soon as possible, federal government exemptions from the provisions listed in subsection (4).

(b) Because section 395(c) of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (PRWORA) allows a grace period for states to amend their constitutions in order to comply with PRWORA and because the Montana legislature believes that the section of PRWORA prohibiting a jury trial in a paternity proceeding violates Article II, section 26, of the Montana constitution and is therefore rejected, the department of public health and human services shall seek a federal government exemption from the jury trial prohibition in PRWORA as the first exemption it seeks under subsection (5)(a). [This exemption was received on December 8, 1997.]

(6) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate July 1, 1999.

(7) If the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminates, the code commissioner is instructed to renumber subsections, adjust internal references, and correct grammar and arrangement."

1995 Amendments: Chapter 60 in (3)(b), at end of first sentence, deleted "that the application of the standards and guidelines is unjust to the child or a party or is inappropriate in that particular case"; in (5)(c) inserted second sentence allowing retention of excess support if the excess is the result of annualized withholding; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 504 in (4), after "Each", inserted "temporary or final", after "establishing a" deleted "final", and after "include a" substituted "medical support order as provided for in Title 40, chapter 5, part 8" for "provision addressing health insurance coverage in the following cases:

(a) If either party has available through an employer or other organization health insurance coverage for the child or children for which the premium is partially or entirely paid by the employer or organization, the judgment, decree, or order may contain a provision requiring that coverage for the child or children be continued or obtained.

(b) In the event that health insurance required in a child support judgment, decree, or order becomes unavailable to the party who is to provide it, through loss or change of employment or otherwise, that party must, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, obtain comparable insurance or request that the court modify the requirement.

(c) All temporary child support orders must contain a provision requiring the party who has health insurance in effect for the child or children of the parties to continue the insurance coverage pending final disposition of the case.

(d) The parties may by written agreement provide for the health care coverage required by this section, subject to the approval of the court.

(e) Unless otherwise provided in the decree, the health care coverage required by this section is in addition to and not in substitution, in whole or in part, for the child support obligation"; deleted former (7) that read: "(7) If the department of social and rehabilitation services is providing or later provides support enforcement services under Title IV-D of the Social Security Act, each district court order or modification of an order must contain a statement providing that the noncustodial parent, without further order of the court, is required to obtain and maintain health insurance coverage as provided in 40-5-208. Failure to include a warning statement in the judgment or order does not preclude the imposition of sanctions under 40-5-208"; adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 throughout section substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of social and rehabilitation services"; and at beginning of (5)(c) deleted "After October 1, 1993". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Severability: Section 18, Ch. 60, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Section 33, Ch. 504, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 504, L. 1995, provided: "WHEREAS, it is appropriate to draft a bill specifically to present proposed program improvements for medical support enforcement in a single, comprehensive bill that promotes the needs of legislative energy, efficiency, and economy by limiting the number of possible bills and by reducing the need for hearings and readings on those bills; and

WHEREAS, parents should be held responsible for providing medical care for their children, whether or not the parents voluntarily do so."

1995 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 504, L. 1995, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it grants rulemaking authority to the department of social and rehabilitation services to adopt rules for expedited procedures."

Saving Clause: Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1993 Amendments: Chapter 294 in (3)(a), near middle, inserted second and third sentences requiring use of guidelines in all cases and allowing use of verified representation of defaulting parent's income and in fourth sentence inserted first clause concerning presumption of adequate and reasonable support; in (2)(b), near beginning, substituted "finds that the guideline amount is unjust or inappropriate in a particular case" for "does not apply these standards and guidelines to determine child support" and inserted last two sentences concerning agreement on support amount and statement of ordinary support amount when varied; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 9, 1993.

Chapter 631 inserted (5)(c) allowing withholding on a weekly or biweekly basis; inserted (9) requiring a provision that support be paid to the child's caretaker or other agency authorized to receive or collect support; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendments: Chapter 266 inserted (8) requiring statement relating to review and modification of orders by Department.

Chapter 635 deleted former (5) that read: "(5) (a) Except as provided in subsection (5)(b), each district court judgment, decree, or order establishing a child support obligation under this title, whether temporary or final, and each modification of an existing child support order must:

(i) provide that the amount of child support must be withheld from the obligor's income and paid to the department pursuant to procedures established by the department under Title 40, chapter 5, part 4; and

(ii) include the obligor's social security number and the name and address of the obligor's employer and of any other payor of income to the obligor.

(b) Income is not subject to automatic withholding if:

(i) the obligee or obligor demonstrates and the court finds that there is good cause not to require automatic income withholding; or

(ii) the obligee and obligor agree in writing to an alternative arrangement regarding the payment of child support that provides sufficient security to ensure compliance with their agreement. The security is in addition to the child support obligation.

(c) When a judgment, decree, or order for child support is entered or modified and automatic income withholding is ordered, an obligee who is not a recipient of public assistance shall apply for the support enforcement services of the department pursuant to Title IV-D of the Social Security Act for the collection of support through automatic income withholding under Title 40, chapter 5, part 4. The department shall accept the application. Pending an application, the department shall immediately implement automatic income withholding and hold any amounts collected in trust for the obligee until the obligee makes application.

(d) When automatic income withholding is ordered under subsection (5)(a), the clerk of court shall immediately forward a copy of the order to the department.

(e) If an obligor is not subject to income withholding or is exempted from income withholding, the district court judgment or order must include a warning statement that if the obligor is delinquent in the payment of support, the obligor's income may be subject to income withholding procedures under Title 40, chapter 5, part 3 or 4. Failure to include a warning statement in a judgment or order does not preclude the use of withholding procedures"; inserted (5) providing for enforcement of support obligation by immediate or delinquency income withholding and a warning to an obligor exempt from immediate withholding; and inserted (6) requiring court to require an obligated parent to provide certain information. Amendment effective April 24, 1991.

Severability: Section 24, Ch. 635, L. 1991, was a severability section.

1989 Amendments: Chapter 550 in (2)(f) substituted "provided in Title 53, chapter 4, part 2" for "as defined in 53-2-702". Amendment was voided by sec. 30, Ch. 702, L. 1989, so it has not been codified.

Chapter 702 in (1), after "court", substituted "shall" for "may"; at beginning of (2) inserted "The court shall consider"; in (2)(d) substituted "educational and medical needs" for "educational needs"; in (2)(f) inserted "the age of the child" and deleted "for the purposes of determining a minimum amount for support, the amount received by children under the AFDC program, as defined in 53-2-702"; inserted (2)(g) relating to cost of day care; inserted (2)(h) relating to custody arrangements; inserted (2)(i) relating to needs of other persons a parent is obligated to support; inserted (3)(a) requiring application of standards and guidelines; inserted (3)(b) relating to findings required for nonapplication of standards and guidelines; inserted (5)(a) requiring automatic income withholding; inserted (5)(b) relating to circumstances when income is not subject to automatic withholding; inserted (5)(c) requiring application for and immediate implementation of automatic income withholding; inserted (5)(d) relating to sending of court order to the Department; in (5)(e) substituted "If an obligor is not subject to income withholding or is exempted from income withholding, the district court judgment or order" for "Each district court judgment or order establishing a child support obligation under this title, whether temporary or final, and each modification of an existing order for child support entered after October 1, 1985"; inserted (6) relating to a warning statement concerning required health insurance coverage; and made minor changes in form and phraseology.

Applicability: Section 32, Ch. 702, L. 1989, provided: "[This act] applies to child support orders and modifications of child support orders issued after September 30, 1989."

Guidelines for Determining Child Support: On January 13, 1987, the Supreme Court adopted A Uniform District Court Rule on Child Support Guidelines proposed by the Montana Child Support Advisory Council as the result of a study prompted by the 1984 enactment of 42 U.S.C. 667. The federal statute required establishment of guidelines by each state as a condition for having the state plan approved for participation in Public Health and Welfare programs of the federal government. The guidelines may be found in the State Reporter, Vol. 44, pp. 828-842 (1987). See also 1989 amendment that provides the court shall apply the guidelines in determining the child support obligation.

1985 Amendment — Subsection Enactments: Chapter 727, L. 1985, inserted (2) requiring court to state reasons for not ordering child support.

Section 1, Ch. 434, L. 1985, was enacted as a separate section but is codified in this section as subsection (3) for convenience. Subsection (3) requires inclusion of a provision addressing health insurance coverage in certain cases.

Section 1, Ch. 651, L. 1985, was enacted as a separate section but is codified in this section as subsection (4) for convenience. Subsection (4) requires that each judgment or order establishing a child support obligation include a warning concerning the consequences of delinquency.

1983 Amendment: Inserted (6) relating to AFDC amount.

GENERAL

Claim of Children as Dependents for Tax Purposes — Assumptions of Parties and Recommendation of State Agency — District Court Reversed: Although the child support and property settlement agreement entered into between Michael and Kimberly at the time of their divorce provided that the parties would share the tax deductions for the children, the calculations for child support payments provided to the District Court by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) and upon which the District Court relied to order an increase in Michael's support obligation assumed that the tax deductions would belong to Michael. The Supreme Court held that because of these factors, because there was apparently no dispute on this point between the parties, and because the District Court's order on this matter was cursory and without explanation, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and remanded so that the District Court could revise its order to allow Michael to claim all of the children as dependents for tax purposes. In re Marriage of Syverson, 281 M 1, 931 P2d 691, 54 St. Rep. 32 (1997).

Social Security Benefits as Credit Toward Child Support Obligation — Not Considered Retroactive Modification — Durbin Overruled: A credit may be granted to a parent for Social Security benefits received prior to a motion to modify as a credit against the noncustodial parent's child support obligation, but the credit does not constitute a retroactive modification of the original support order. The credit merely changes the source of the support payments. In re Marriage of Cowan, 279 M 491, 928 P2d 214, 53 St. Rep. 1250 (1996), overruling contrary holdings in In re Marriage of Durbin, 251 M 51, 823 P2d 243 (1991), and In re Marriage of Malquist, 266 M 447, 880 P2d 1357 (1994).

Installment Payments of Property Settlement Not Required to Be Used as Child Support: When Kitty and Bernard divorced in 1987, they agreed that no child support payments would be made by either party. Bernard also agreed that he would make $70,000 in property settlement payments by making three annual payments of $10,000 each and eight annual payments of $5,000 each. Bernard later moved the District Court to determine Kitty's child support obligation and asked the District Court to require that some of the property settlement payments be used for child support. The Supreme Court held that the installment payments were made by Bernard as a method of paying his $70,000 property settlement obligation and that there was no rule requiring that those payments or any part of them be used by Kitty for the support of the children. The Supreme Court noted that just as Bernard is entitled to decide how to use his property resulting from the property settlement agreement, so Kitty in entitled to use her property any way she sees fit. In re Marriage of Widhalm/Miller, 279 M 97, 926 P2d 748, 53 St. Rep. 1067 (1996).

Clear and Convincing Evidence Required in Deviating From Support Guidelines: The District Court concluded that application of the Uniform Child Support Guidelines was inappropriate in this case but gave no written specific findings in support of that conclusion. The guidelines must be used in all cases; thus, the court erred in deviating from the guidelines without producing clear and convincing evidence justifying the failure to use the guidelines. The case was remanded for a determination of support due from each parent, based on the guidelines. In re Marriage of Brandon, 271 M 149, 894 P2d 951, 52 St. Rep. 381 (1995). See also In re Marriage of Stufft, 276 M 454, 916 P2d 767, 53 St. Rep. 467 (1996), and In re Marriage of Kovarik, 1998 MT 33, 287 M 350, 954 P2d 1147, 55 St. Rep. 117 (1998).

Waiver of Back Child Support — Court Retains Discretion Under Guidelines — Constitutional Challenge Raised for First Time on Appeal Not Considered: Following remand from the Supreme Court, the District Court recalculated a child support award but did not order the father to pay any back child support. When the District Court was presented with abundant evidence on the proper amount of past child support due under child support guidelines and the amount of additional back support (none) was within the range of the evidence presented, the District Court did not err in waiving past child support. When the mother's argument that child support statutes discriminate between legitimate and illegitimate children was raised for the first time on appeal, the Supreme Court did not consider argument. In re Paternity of W.L., 270 M 484, 893 P2d 332, 52 St. Rep. 301 (1995).

Refusal of Request That Child Be Named as Beneficiary of Husband's Annuity: The disposition of the husband's estate and payment of child support from that estate were not issues in a dissolution proceeding, and the Supreme Court would not consider them on appeal because there was no actual case or controversy. The wife had argued that the trial court should have ordered the husband's mother to be replaced by the couple's child as the surviving beneficiary of the husband's annuity because the husband's wife and mother did not get along and the replacement would avoid potential future litigation. In re Marriage of Bradshaw, 270 M 222, 891 P2d 506, 52 St. Rep. 154 (1995).

Award of Attorney Fees Based Upon Property Settlement Agreement Upheld: Debra and Kenneth were divorced, settling their differences in support, maintenance, and property division by signing an agreement addressing all issues. The agreement also provided that if one of the parties had to pay a debt of the other, the paying party could recoup the payment with interest and fees. Later, Debra sought reimbursement for debts that belonged to Kenneth but that were not disclosed at the time of the divorce. The Supreme Court held that attorney fees were properly payable under the language of the agreement. The fact that there was no clear winner in the proceedings and that there was no showing by Debra that she was without resources to pay her own fees was irrelevant because the award of fees was pursuant to the agreement and not pursuant to statute. In re Marriage of Craib & Rhodes, 266 M 483, 880 P2d 1379, 51 St. Rep. 937 (1994).

No Error in Refusal to Admit Evidence of Circumstances of Dissolution for Purposes of Interpreting Property Settlement Agreement: Debra and Kenneth were divorced, settling their differences in support, maintenance, and property division by signing an agreement addressing all issues. Later, Kenneth sought to introduce evidence of the circumstances of the dissolution to show that the agreement unfairly divided the marital property. The District Court refused to allow the evidence, ruling that the agreement "speaks for itself". The Supreme Court noted that it would not overrule District Court rulings on admissibility of evidence absent an abuse of discretion. The Supreme Court interpreted the District Court action as ruling that the evidence was irrelevant and noted that irrelevant evidence is inadmissible. In re Marriage of Craib & Rhodes, 266 M 483, 880 P2d 1379, 51 St. Rep. 937 (1994).

Application of Wrong Support Guidelines Irrelevant When Court Finds No Grounds for Modification: Janet Barnard sought an increase in child support on the basis that her ex-husband's income had greatly increased. The District Court stated that it would use the support guidelines in effect when the motion was filed. The lower court subsequently ruled that there was no showing that the current amount of support was insufficient and that increased income alone was not grounds for modification. The Supreme Court held that the lower court should have used the guidelines in effect at the time that it rendered its decision, but the error was harmless since the District Court had properly found that no grounds existed for modifying the amount of support. In re Marriage of Barnard, 264 M 103, 870 P2d 91, 51 St. Rep. 173 (1994). For a discussion of the correct standard of review, see In re Marriage of Kovash, 270 M 517, 893 P2d 860, 52 St. Rep. 280 (1995).

Proper Determination of Income Attributed to Assets: Pedersen initiated a suit against Nordahl to establish that he was the father of her unborn twins and to obtain child support. Nordahl argued that the funds in his logging account, personal banking account, and retirement accounts were derived solely from his 1992 income and that therefore the inclusion of those accounts in the "income attributed to assets" calculation resulted in a double counting of income. The Supreme Court held that pursuant to ARM 46.30.1514, income attributed to assets is the amount of interest that would be earned if the nonperforming assets were liquidated and the proceeds invested and that was the amount that the lower court had added to Nordahl's gross income. Therefore, no double counting of his 1992 income had occurred. In re Paternity of Pedersen v. Nordahl, 261 M 284, 862 P2d 411, 50 St. Rep. 1338 (1993).

Proper Average of Income and Refusal to Subtract Deductions From Gross Income in Determining Child Support: Pedersen initiated a suit against Nordahl to establish that he was the father of her unborn twins and to obtain child support. Nordahl argued that the lower court erred in determining the amount of support because it took the average of his income over a 2-year period and failed to subtract certain deductions from the amount of gross income. The Supreme Court held that Nordahl had not objected to the income averaging during trial and could not raise the issue on appeal and also held that the lower court had the option of subtracting certain deductions from gross income but was not required to do so. In re Paternity of Pedersen v. Nordahl, 261 M 284, 862 P2d 411, 50 St. Rep. 1338 (1993).

Payment of Proportionate Share of Child Care Expenses Required: Apportionment of expenses for child care is specifically authorized by the child support guidelines. It was not error for the District Court to provide for payment by the husband of a proportionate share of child care expenses incurred subsequent to the parties' separation and prior to the date of the final decree. In re Marriage of D.F.D. & D.G.D., 261 M 186, 862 P2d 368, 50 St. Rep. 1280 (1993).

Debtor's Child Support Obligation Fixed by Stipulation Governing Past-Due Amounts: After Gordon and Annette dissolved their marriage, they entered into a stipulation in which Gordon agreed to pay an amount in past-due child support. Later, after the District Court ordered a modification in child support, Gordon claimed that the court should have made the modification retroactive to 1988, when he first made a motion to modify the original child support order. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in refusing to make the modification retroactive. The amount of the payments during the time disputed by Gordon are governed by the 1989 stipulation. The District Court was bound by the terms of that stipulation as the terms were not contrary to law, court rule, or public policy. In re Marriage of Sullivan, 258 M 531, 853 P2d 1194, 50 St. Rep. 648 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Hill, 265 M 52, 874 P2d 705, 51 St. Rep. 396 (1994).

Placement of Child Support in Escrow Pending Modification of Support Order as Contempt of Court — Limited Review of Contempt Order: After Gordon and Annette dissolved their marriage, Gordon made a motion to modify the order for child support payments. Pending judicial action on that motion, he placed the arrearages in escrow with the Clerk of the District Court. The Supreme Court held that the District Court order holding him in contempt for failure to pay the arrearages directly to Annette could be reviewed by the Supreme Court for limited purposes and that the facts supported the District Court's finding of contempt. In re Marriage of Sullivan, 258 M 531, 853 P2d 1194, 50 St. Rep. 648 (1993).

Not Error to Fail to Award Support When Issue Not Before Court: The wife alleged that the lower court erred in not awarding her child support when it gave her custody of her children. The Supreme Court held that the lower court was not wrong in failing to award support because at no time during the hearing did the mother request support. Therefore, the issue was not before the lower court. In re Marriage of Welch/Phillips, 257 M 222, 848 P2d 500, 50 St. Rep. 240 (1993).

Written Order Required Awarding Back Child Support on Basis of Sole Rather Than Split Custody: The District Court orally agreed to award back child support on the basis of sole custody rather than split custody as provided in the decree. The court should have entered a written order awarding back child support covering the period of sole custody. In re Marriage of Johnston & Turrin, 255 M 421, 843 P2d 760, 49 St. Rep. 1047 (1992).

Business Deductions Not Relied Upon in Determining Support: The respondent introduced his tax returns, arguing that the business deductions appearing on the returns should also be relied on by the court in determining his disposable income. The Supreme Court ruled that the returns were only one item the lower court could rely on in determining support and were not controlling. In re Marriage of Sullivan, 243 M 292, 794 P2d 687, 47 St. Rep. 1231 (1990).

Case Continued by Mutual Agreement — Support Payments Current — Request for Retroactive Payments Denied: The District Court did not err in denying wife's request for retroactive child support after finding that: (1) the case had been continued on mutual agreement of the parties for over 2 years; (2) husband had always paid support that was ordered by the court; and (3) it would place a substantial unfair burden on husband to require retroactive payment of support. In re Marriage of Smith, 242 M 495, 791 P2d 1373, 47 St. Rep. 925 (1990).

Credit Against Support Arrearage — No Oral Promise by Custodial Parent: The divorce decree required the father to pay for all medical costs of the minor children that were not covered by his medical insurance. In an action for back support, the father argued that he should be allowed an offset for medical costs he had paid on the basis that his ex-wife had agreed to reimburse him for those costs. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that there was no substantial evidence of the existence of an express or implied agreement between the parties that the mother was to reimburse the father for medical expenses that were his obligation under the decree. In re Marriage of Wroot, 240 M 409, 784 P2d 904, 46 St. Rep. 2237 (1989).

Irrevocable Trust Not Marital Asset From Which Court Could Order Payment of Certain Support Items: In a divorce action, the husband had set up an irrevocable trust for his children prior to the divorce, using primarily inheritance funds. The lower court ordered that certain medical expenses of the parties' children be paid with trust fund money. The Supreme Court ruled that the trust was not a marital asset and that the trial court had no power to dispose of the trust funds. In re Marriage of Gebhardt, 240 M 165, 783 P2d 400, 46 St. Rep. 2026 (1989).

General Jurisdictional Rules for Divorce, Custody, and Child Support: A divorce action is generally in rem as to the status of the parties and in personam as to other matters. Thus, the lower court did not need in personam jurisdiction to grant dissolution to wife living in Montana when husband was in Tennessee. The court could grant the wife custody of the children living in Montana, but not of the child living in Tennessee with his father, since 40-4-211 specifically granted jurisdiction to determine custody of children living in Montana. The court was without jurisdiction to award child support because the court did not have in personam jurisdiction over the father under Rule 4, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). In re Marriage of Appleton, 234 M 345, 763 P2d 658, 45 St. Rep. 1959 (1988).

Plaintiff's Understandable Failure to Plead Pertinent Facts — No Constructive Fraud: Wife pleaded a 1965 marriage and did not mention husband's 1972 Tennessee divorce obtained while he was living in that state and his wife was living in Texas, and she did not plead a common-law marriage or mention that her husband lived in Tennessee. However, husband did not inform wife of the Tennessee divorce until almost 8 years after it occurred, when she told him she was going to sue for a Montana divorce, and it was understandable she might not believe him. When wife filed, she knew of no address for husband other than his most recent (Montana) address. She filed on August 1, and he was found and served in Tennessee on August 11. In addition, the two had lived together and held themselves out as husband and wife in Texas and Montana; therefore, a common-law marriage existed. Wife's divorce and the child support decree were not based on extrinsic, constructive fraud by wife. A court hearing a divorce action sits in equity. Given husband's acts of deceit and wife's good faith in pleading, the Supreme Court saw no reason to grant husband equitable relief by voiding wife's decree. In re Marriage of Appleton, 234 M 345, 763 P2d 658, 45 St. Rep. 1959 (1988).

Support Denied Husband Whose Income Was More Than Twice Wife's: It was proper for the lower court to refuse husband's request for child support. Wife's monthly expenses exceeded her income by $200 a month. Husband's income was more than twice wife's income. He earned $28,484 a year as a professor and could make money during 2 months each summer. Wife had minimal ability to acquire future assets. The children's needs could be met without support payments by wife, and their living standard would not be reduced. In re Marriage of Rolfe, 234 M 294, 766 P2d 223, 45 St. Rep. 1919 (1988).

Factors in Noncustodial Parent's Ability to Pay Support: Factors to be considered when deciding whether a noncustodial parent is able to contribute to the support of a minor child include: (1) the parent's ability to earn an income; (2) the parent's willingness to earn an income and support his child; (3) availability of jobs; and (4) the parent's use of his funds to provide himself only with the bare necessities of life prior to providing support for his child. The factors apply as well to consideration of a modification of support. In re Marriage of Callahan, 233 M 465, 762 P2d 205, 45 St. Rep. 1639 (1988), following In re Adoption of K.L.J.K., 224 M 418, 730 P2d 1135, 43 St. Rep. 2297 (1986).

Findings of Need for Support and Ability to Pay: Findings that the children lived primarily with their mother, who earned $800 a month in seasonal employment and worked as a waitress in other months, and that the father collected $2,300 a month in federal veterans benefits and social security disability payments represented substantial credible evidence of the children's need for support and the father's ability to pay it. In re Marriage of West, 233 M 47, 758 P2d 282, 45 St. Rep. 1281 (1988).

Failure to Consider Factors Involved in Carlson Calculations: The District Court held that it was precluded from applying the Carlson formula because neither party offered evidence of the child's total needs. Although the Carlson formula has been termed a "guideline", the factors it involves must be considered, and failure to do so constituted reversible error. In re Marriage of Saylor, 232 M 294, 756 P2d 1149, 45 St. Rep. 1062 (1988).

Use of Net Rather Than Gross Income in Applying Carlson Formula: The District Court used gross rather than net income as a factor in the Carlson formula for figuring child support. The Supreme Court held that the amounts used should be net amounts; however, since the figures finally established were substantially less than what the formula could have obliged the parties to pay, there was no error. In re Marriage of Revious, 226 M 304, 735 P2d 301, 44 St. Rep. 674 (1987).

Ordering Husband to Pay Mortgage and Including Amount Equal to Part of Mortgage in Child Support: It was clearly erroneous, resulting in substantial injustice and requiring remand for further findings, for the court, in determining child support, to include an amount equal to two-thirds of the total monthly mortgage payments and to in addition order the husband to make the mortgage payments. The court ordered that the wife possess the house and that it be sold when the youngest child reached 18, with the equity equally divided. The result would be a windfall to the wife upon sale of the house. In addition, the husband was not left with financial resources sufficient to meet his needs. In re Marriage of Johnson, 225 M 404, 732 P2d 1345, 44 St. Rep. 353 (1987).

No Abuse of Discretion in Divorce Settlement: Following dissolution of the marriage, husband and wife negotiated and signed a property settlement and child support agreement. The husband subsequently informed his attorney of his dissatisfaction with the agreement. The District Court allowed the amended agreement to be incorporated into the supplementary decree of dissolution. A year later the husband filed a motion to amend the judgment, alleging unconscionability. After a hearing to determine the parties' financial condition, the court held the agreement valid. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, stating that the husband had knowingly entered into the agreement and was competently represented by counsel. Prior to the execution of the final decree, the agreement was twice revised. In re Marriage of Hangas, 223 M 343, 725 P2d 1205, 43 St. Rep. 1773 (1986).

Child Support Not Court Ordered — Obligation Not Relieved: In an action brought by the Department of Revenue (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) pursuant to 40-5-221 and 53-4-248 to recoup funds paid by the state to support a father's two children, summary judgment for the Department was upheld. Although the trial court's prior dissolution and custody decree did not provide for support payments, a parent's legal and moral obligation to support his children was not relieved, nor was his obligation relieved by laches. St. v. Hubbard, 222 M 156, 720 P2d 1177, 43 St. Rep. 1135 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Becker, 244 M 469, 798 P2d 124, 47 St. Rep. 1729 (1990).

Child Support Obligation Not Dischargeable in Bankruptcy: The Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. 523(a)(5), specifically excludes child support obligations from debts that can be discharged in bankruptcy. State ex rel. Austin v. Austin, 221 M 488, 719 P2d 429, 43 St. Rep. 998 (1986).

Retroactive to Separation:

Once the issue of child support is before the trial court, pursuant to the parties' pleadings, the court has jurisdiction to award retroactive child support from the time of separation and is not limited to the child support prayed for or agreed to by the parties. In re Marriage of Di Pasquale, 220 M 497, 716 P2d 223, 43 St. Rep. 557 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Barnard, 241 M 147, 785 P2d 1387, 47 St. Rep. 152 (1990). See also In re Marriage of Saylor, 232 M 294, 756 P2d 1149, 45 St. Rep. 1062 (1988), In re Marriage of Welch, 273 M 497, 905 P2d 132, 52 St. Rep. 1081 (1995), and In re Marriage of Franks, 275 M 66, 909 P2d 712, 53 St. Rep. 41 (1996).

Where the wife had no complaints as to the adequacy of the child support agreement during the 8-year separation, the court did not err in failing to increase it retroactively from the time of separation. Tureman v. Tureman, 190 M 267, 620 P2d 1200, 37 St. Rep. 1922 (1980).

Management of Children's Accounts: District Court did not abuse its discretion when it allowed husband to manage financial accounts of the children that were to be kept separate from accounts of the husband and wife. In re Marriage of Williams, 220 M 232, 714 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 319 (1986).

Splitting Children's Education Costs: Provision that husband, who was to pay the children's education costs as they became due, could deduct half of the cost from maintenance or support payments was not an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Williams, 220 M 232, 714 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 319 (1986).

Splitting Children's Medical Costs: Provision that each parent bear half the uninsured medical costs of the children, who were to be covered by a medical and dental plan selected and paid for by the husband, was not an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Williams, 220 M 232, 714 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 319 (1986).

Nonpayment of Child Support as Contempt: A noncustodial parent should not be held in contempt for nonpayment of child support when payments are made directly to the custodial parent and when the location of the custodial parent is concealed. However, when nonpayment occurred both before and after the period of concealment, contempt is proper. In re Marriage of Robbins, 219 M 130, 711 P2d 1347, 42 St. Rep. 1897 (1985).

Payment of Child Support Not Absolved by Temporary Concealment of Custodial Parent: The obligation of a noncustodial parent to pay child support is not absolved by temporary concealment of the custodial parent when nonpayment of child support occurred both before and after the period of concealment. In re Marriage of Robbins, 219 M 130, 711 P2d 1347, 42 St. Rep. 1897 (1985).

District Court to Consider All Factors: The District Court awarded nearly all of marital estate to wife in lieu of child support from husband, whose occupation was professional gambler. The trial court found that the best interests of the children would be served by allowing them to remain in the family home, that forced sale of the family home would divert and dissipate assets needed for support, and that the only reasonable means to protect and promote the best interests of the children were to award the home to the mother. Husband appealed on the division of property issue, and the Supreme Court found that the District Court had not abused its discretion. Issues of property and support are not totally irrelevant to each other or inextricably interwoven; the court properly considered all factors and made a decision based on the extent to which they were interrelated. In re Marriage of King, 216 M 92, 700 P2d 591, 42 St. Rep. 666 (1985).

Assignment of Support — Not to Preclude Action for Arrearage: In order to receive public assistance from the state of Washington, wife assigned all of her unpaid child support to the Washington Department of Social and Health Services (WDSHS). During the term of assignment, WDSHS agreed with husband to a reduction in support and a compromise of the arrearage. The husband argued that WDSHS has the statutory authority to compromise support arrearages assigned to it and that because the wife acquiesced in WDSHS's actions, she was bound by the compromise made with that agency. The court held that the wife's interest in the accrued support payments could be assigned, and the State could step into the shoes of the wife. The statute allowing WDSHS to compromise support arrearages only pertains to arrears owed the state and does not pertain to arrears owed a parent. Entering into an assignment of support in order to receive welfare does not in any way affect the judgment of a court as contained in a decree. The wife could sue to recover any arrearages under the Montana decree, notwithstanding the agreement between the husband and WDSHS. The wife could proceed on her own right while allowing WDSHS the right of subrogation against a recovery by her. In re Marriage of Good, 213 M 269, 691 P2d 1337, 41 St. Rep. 2109 (1984).

Credit Against Support Arrearage — Oral Promise by Custodial Parent: Father and custodial mother agreed between themselves that the father would pay certain of the children's medical and dental bills and that in return the mother would give him credit against his child support obligation. The father made the payments. The mother contended the dissolution decree could not be modified by agreement to reduce or cancel past due and unpaid child support. On appeal, the court found no violation of the spirit and purpose of the support order by allowing the father credit for medical payments, particularly where the mother asked him to make them. The court found no modification of the decree, only a streamlining of the process, whereby the father paid the bills directly rather than going through the wife as an intermediary. In re Marriage of Good, 213 M 269, 691 P2d 1337, 41 St. Rep. 2109 (1984).

No Credit for Child Support During Summer Visitation: The trial court erroneously credited the husband with child support payments made during summer visitation. The issue was resolved by the unambiguous terms of the adopted settlement agreement. Gies v. Gies, 210 M 234, 681 P2d 1092, 41 St. Rep. 1028 (1984).

No Basis to Reopen Dissolution Decree: The appellant did not claim the existence of unconscionability, fraud, or any other inequitable situation that would give a court a legal basis upon which to reopen a dissolution decree. She attempted to enhance enforcement of the judgment that incorporated the parties' stipulations as to the property division by making a motion to modify. She was precluded by statutory time limits and by the fact that she had no legal basis to compel a court to reopen the judgment. Since no conditions existed that would justify reopening the judgment, the District Court was not required to enter findings of fact. Keirle v. Keirle, 210 M 214, 681 P2d 703, 41 St. Rep. 1016 (1984).

Use of Maintenance From Drawing Account for Child Support: Wife in divorce proceeding was granted a four-plex, the income to be used to fulfill husband's maintenance and support obligations amounting to $1,000 a month. The husband was to maintain a $1,000 bank account in wife's name upon which wife could draw to the extent that the four-plex did not provide income of $1,000 a month. The account was not established until several months after dissolution of the marriage, and wife drew upon it to cover child support owed by husband for the period between the dissolution and the establishment of the account. Husband then closed the account on the basis of an agreement that he could do so if wife withdrew money from it for any purpose other than to make up the difference should the four-plex not provide a $1,000 income in any given month. On wife's motion for enforcement of the divorce decree, trial court properly directed the husband to reestablish the account, as husband had an obligation to care for the children, as provided in the divorce decree, during the period between the decree date and the opening of the account. In re Marriage of Baker, 198 M 371, 646 P2d 522, 39 St. Rep. 1031 (1982).

Child Support for Adult or Emancipated Children — Express Agreement or Decree Required: A noncustodial father decreased his child support payments by one-half when one of his two children joined the Navy at the age of 17. In a contempt proceeding instituted by the custodial mother 2 years later, the District Court improperly directed the father to pay the balance of payments owing, and to continue the payments until the second child was 22 years of age if she attended college. Child support payments need not be made for adult or emancipated children unless the parents agree in writing or the dissolution decree expressly so provides. Torma v. Torma, 198 M 161, 645 P2d 395, 39 St. Rep. 839 (1982).

Interest on Delinquent Support Payments:

A noncustodial father decreased his child support payments by one-half when one of his two children joined the Navy at the age of 17. The District Court properly required the continuation of the entire monthly payment until the second child attained majority but improperly failed to order interest on the child support arrearage. Interest is automatically collectible by the judgment creditor spouse on past due support payments, absent contrary provision in a dissolution decree. Torma v. Torma, 198 M 161, 645 P2d 395, 39 St. Rep. 839 (1982), followed in In re Marriage of Callahan, 233 M 465, 762 P2d 205, 45 St. Rep. 1639 (1988).

When the marital dissolution decree is silent as to interest, interest is automatically collectible by the judgment creditor spouse on past due payments for support money or maintenance the same as any other money judgment under 25-9-205. Williams v. Budke, 186 M 70, 606 P2d 515 (1980).

Undivided Monthly Sum for Two Children — Effect of Emancipation of One Child: Pursuant to a dissolution decree, a noncustodial father was "ordered to pay for the support of the two minor children in the sum of $125.00 per month . . .". Upon the emancipation of one of the children, the father was not entitled to unilaterally reduce the payments by one-half. It became his burden to make such a showing as would entitle him to be relieved of all or a part of such obligation. Torma v. Torma, 198 M 161, 645 P2d 395, 39 St. Rep. 839 (1982).

Visitation and Obligation to Support — Interest on Unpaid Support: The Supreme Court rejected respondent's contention that he had no obligation to support his child under a divorce decree unless and until he exercised his right of visitation. The lower court incorrectly applied the rule in this case. Visitation has no bearing whatsoever upon the father's legal and moral obligation to support his child. Similarly, the father could not claim laches to avoid support payments owing over an 8-year period. Furthermore, on the basis of Williams v. Budke, 186 M 70, 606 P2d 515 (1980), appellant is entitled to receive interest on the past-due payments. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 190 M 66, 618 P2d 867, 37 St. Rep. 1350 (1980), followed in In re Marriage of Robbins, 219 M 130, 711 P2d 1347, 42 St. Rep. 1897 (1985), and, with regard to inapplicability of laches and equitable estoppel to recovery of child support arrears, in In re Marriage of Petranek, 255 M 458, 843 P2d 784, 49 St. Rep. 1107 (1992).

Support of Disabled Adult Child: It is public policy in Montana to require parents to care for children who are suffering from disability and unable to care for themselves if the parents are able to do so. Thus, the court did not err in ordering child support payments paid to the wife, who was caring for a disabled adult child. Maberry v. Maberry, 183 M 219, 598 P2d 115 (1979).

Impermissible Deduction of Temporary Custodial Expenses: It is improper for the husband to deduct expenses such as babysitting costs that he incurs while the child is in his temporary custody from those payments that are to be made to the wife for child support unless the court provides otherwise. In re Marriage of Jorgensen, 180 M 294, 590 P2d 606 (1979).

Oversight in Omitting Provision for Support: Failure of the court to make provision in the decree for the support of the minor children was an obvious oversight and required correction. Berthiaume v. Berthiaume, 173 M 421, 567 P2d 1388 (1977).

Survival of Child Support Obligations When Provided for in Father's Will: Father's obligation to make child support payments required by divorce decree survived his death and was enforceable against his estate where decree without exemption or qualification required him to pay during child's minority, mother had released father and his estate from all claims except child support, and father's will evidenced recognition of his continuing child support obligation during child's minority as provided in decree, even after his death. Hornung v. Estate of Lagerquist, 155 M 412, 473 P2d 541 (1970).

STATUTORY FACTORS

Parent-Child Relationship Thwarted — Equitable Estoppel Precluding Payment of Child Support: When Stiles and his wife separated, he was given responsibility for the care of his newborn son. Because Stiles was in the military at the time, he asked his sister, Cynthia, if she would care for the child for a short time while he fulfilled his duties in the Navy. Cynthia agreed, but immediately sought legal custody of the child, and physical custody of the child was ultimately granted to her by a California court. She often did not comply with court orders resulting from her custody efforts, including orders to allow Stiles visitation with the child. Stiles initially offered to pay for the child's care, but Cynthia refused any money, saying it was not needed. Nevertheless, Stiles did provide ongoing health insurance for the child. Over a decade later, Cynthia applied for and was granted public assistance, assigning any right to child support to the state. The Child Support Enforcement Division established Stiles's support obligation at $511 a month. Stiles asked Cynthia to sign a waiver of this obligation, but she refused. Stiles petitioned for judicial review, and the District Court remanded to an administrative law judge to make findings regarding Stiles's claim that Cynthia had waived her right to receive child support or that she was equitably estopped from asserting or assigning those rights. The administrative law judge found that the requisite elements of waiver and estoppel were present, and the District Court upheld the findings, holding that because Cynthia had no right to child support, she could not convey to the state rights greater than those to which she was entitled. The state appealed, asserting that the court erred when it held that estoppel and waiver applied to relieve Stiles of the obligation to provide support. The Supreme Court concluded that all six elements of equitable estoppel were met and that Cynthia had no right to receive child support from Stiles either retroactively or prospectively. Cynthia waived her right to support through her language and conduct. Nothing in the record indicated that the child's needs were not being met, and the court declined to order additional support. Although a parent is still responsible for support even in cases of voluntary relinquishment of parental rights, Stiles's relinquishment was involuntary. The court declined to hold Stiles to normal parental responsibilities under these unique circumstances, given that the child's best interests were being served, Stiles provided health insurance for the child at all times, and Stiles was thwarted by Cynthia in his attempts to have a parent-child relationship and was not attempting to exploit narrow legal technicalities to avoid undisputed court-ordered support obligations awarded at the time of dissolution. Stiles v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2000 MT 257, 301 M 482, 10 P3d 819, 57 St. Rep. 1054 (2000), distinguishing Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 190 M 66, 618 P2d 867 (1980), In re Marriage of Neiss, 228 M 479, 743 P2d 1022 (1987), and In re Support of Krug, 231 M 78, 751 P2d 171 (1988).

District Court Required to Apply Guidelines or to Present Reasons for Deviation: The District Court did not order the father to pay any child support because he was only seasonally employed. The Supreme Court remanded the case, directing the lower court to apply the guidelines as required by law or to establish by clear and convincing evidence any justification for deviating from the guidelines. In re Marriage of DeWitt, 273 M 513, 905 P2d 1084, 52 St. Rep. 1089 (1995).

Judicial Oversight in Failure to Provide for Health Insurance for Children — Remand: The record and father's respondent's brief clearly indicated that the parties intended that father continue to carry the minor children on his employee health insurance policy. It was judicial oversight, warranting remand, for the District Court to fail to include in the decree a provision regarding the children's health insurance. (See 1995 amendment.) In re Marriage of Corey, 266 M 304, 880 P2d 824, 51 St. Rep. 859 (1994).

Support Obligations to Be Set Based on Guidelines in Effect at Time Court Makes Decision: The lower court ordered the husband to pay a weekly sum for day care as a supplement to child support. The District Court relied on rules in effect when it first ordered support in 1991. In 1992, child support guidelines were amended to combine child care costs with child support. The Supreme Court held that the lower court must use the law in effect at the time that it modified the support rather than the law in effect when it entered its original order. In re Marriage of Anderson, 260 M 246, 859 P2d 451, 50 St. Rep. 1028 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Craib & Rhodes, 266 M 483, 880 P2d 1379, 51 St. Rep. 937 (1994).

Lack of Findings That Court Considered Guidelines or Had Evidentiary Basis for Support Award — Remand: The District Court abused its discretion by establishing a child support award without setting forth an evidentiary basis demonstrating that the statutory criteria were properly considered. The case was remanded with instructions that the trial court consider the guidelines and factors listed in this section and enter findings of fact that support the award. In re Marriage of Griffin, 260 M 124, 860 P2d 78, 50 St. Rep. 945 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Cowan, 279 M 491 928 P2d 214, 53 St. Rep. 1250 (1996). On remand, the District Court referred the determination and calculation of child support to a support guidelines specialist, who neglected to include amounts that were listed on the business's financial statement as shareholder loans in husband's income calculations. The Supreme Court remanded again for a determination of child support due when all of husband's income, including the shareholder loans and materials taken from the business by the husband, was included in the support calculations. In re Marriage of Griffin, 275 M 37, 909 P2d 707, 53 St. Rep. 28 (1996).

Health Insurance Obligation Not Discharged by Unemployment: Father appealed from a District Court decision requiring him to provide health insurance for his minor child while unemployed. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court decision, holding that a parent can be required to provide health insurance coverage even if the coverage is not available or paid for partially or totally by an employer. (See 1995 amendment.) In re Marriage of Isaak, 257 M 176, 848 P2d 1014, 50 St. Rep. 219 (1993).

Personal Injury Award to Be Considered by Court in Determining Parent's Financial Resources — Uniform Child Support Guidelines Found Inappropriate Under Statutory Exception: When the parties were divorced, the District Court awarded joint custody, awarded primary physical custody to the mother, awarded the mother and father one tax deduction apiece for the children, and required the father to pay the mother child support of $150 per month per child. Later the same year, the father lost his eyesight in a work-related accident and eventually received a lump-sum settlement of $373,557, monthly payments of $3,788 for 30 years, disability insurance payments, and social security benefits. When the mother began receiving social security benefits of $174 per month per child as a result of the accident, the father stopped paying child support. The District Court denied both parties' motions for modification of the child support decree, holding that the money received by the father was compensation for his blindness and could not be used to determine his income for calculating his child support obligation. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that while it would be inappropriate to consider all of the personal injury award as income under the uniform child support guidelines, the District Court should have considered part of the award as income, after subtracting the father's medical expenses. In re Marriage of Durbin, 251 M 51, 823 P2d 243, 48 St. Rep. 1142 (1991), overruled, inasmuch as a credit may be granted to a parent for Social Security benefits received prior to a motion to modify as a credit against the noncustodial parent's child support obligation without constituting a retroactive modification of the original support order, in In re Marriage of Cowan, 279 M 491, 928 P2d 214, 53 St. Rep. 1250 (1996). For a discussion of the correct standard of review, see In re Marriage of Kovash, 270 M 517, 893 P2d 860, 52 St. Rep. 280 (1995).

Effective Date of 1989 Automatic Withholding Statute: The enabling legislation of the 1989 amendments to 40-4-204 provided that the implementation of the automatic withholding of child support payments with regard to modifications of existing child support agreements applied to child support orders and modifications of child support orders issued after September 30, 1989. Therefore, the effective date of the 1989 amendments to this section, which is specifically excluded under 40-5-411(1)(a), is October 1, 1989. In re Marriage of Hall, 244 M 428, 798 P2d 117, 47 St. Rep. 1705 (1990).

Split Custody — Support Paid for One Child But Not Another: Father argued that the District Court abused its discretion in ordering him to pay $300 a month support for the child in the mother's physical custody but not requiring the mother to pay any support for the child in his physical custody. The Supreme Court affirmed the award after finding the lower court considered the parties' abilities to pay and the needs of the children, satisfying the statutory requirements of this section. In re Marriage of Arbuckle, 243 M 10, 792 P2d 1123, 47 St. Rep. 1150 (1990).

Factual Determinations Imperative:

In a dispositional hearing held by the Youth Court under 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438) in which the court removed the child from her abusive mother's care and placed her in the care of her natural father, the court erroneously awarded child support to the father because there was insufficient evidence to support a finding of child support. The court failed to consider the factors in this section and the Carlson formula, except to note that the father had just started a new business and the mother was employed as a receptionist. In re C.C., 237 M 246, 772 P2d 857, 46 St. Rep. 773 (1989).

In a divorce proceeding, the court heard no evidence on the financial resources of the parties' children, their standard of living, or wife's standard of living, yet decreed a sum for child support, half to be paid by each spouse and wife's half to come from her share of the marital estate. The court's failure to consider the necessary factors resulted in a child support decision not supported by the evidence and constituting an abuse of discretion. On remand the matter was to be reconsidered with proper testimony and an equitable solution. Hill v. Hill, 197 M 451, 643 P2d 582, 39 St. Rep. 723 (1982).

The pertinent factors in 40-4-203 and 40-4-204, with findings of fact to support them, should be set out in the District Court's decision. Otherwise the appellate court has nothing upon which to base its review. Moreover, under 40-4-208 the District Court can grant modification or termination of maintenance and support only if there is a showing of circumstances making the payments unconscionable, which compels proper findings and conclusions. Capener v. Capener, 177 M 437, 582 P2d 326 (1978). See also In re Marriage of Benjamin, 189 M 158, 615 P2d 218, 37 St. Rep. 1412 (1980), Park v. Child Support as Restitution and Condition of Probation: Child support violations were noted in the presentence investigation. Defendant should have known that they might be considered by the court, so there was no due process violation. The District Court properly ordered payment of child support as a form of restitution and rehabilitation and as a legitimate condition of parole. St. v. Shaver, 233 M 438, 760 P2d 1230, 45 St. Rep. 1617 (1988).

Failure to State Reasons for Not Ordering Child Support — No Inclusion of Applicable Terms of Original Decree — Remand: Although respondent claimed that child support provisions were covered by an original decree and remained in effect, the Supreme Court had vacated the original decree and remanded the case; therefore, 40-4-204(2) was applicable at the time of the second decree. Failure by the District Court to include reasons for not ordering child support and to include applicable terms from the original decree in the final decree was error warranting remand. In re Marriage of Kuzara, 224 M 124, 728 P2d 786, 43 St. Rep. 2068 (1986).

Prohibiting Sale of Residence Past Majority Age of Child — Abuse of Discretion: A 1971 dissolution decree apportioned only the personal property of the parties. In 1981, in a proceeding for modification of the decree, the District Court abused its discretion by ordering that the parties' residence not be sold until the youngest child finished college at the age of 22. This in effect amounted to child support past the age of majority when no express agreement or decree provision provided for such support. Torma v. Torma, 198 M 161, 645 P2d 395, 39 St. Rep. 839 (1982).

Net Worth of Marital Estate to Be Determined: The true net worth of the marital estate must be accurately determined in accordance with the requirements of 40-4-202 before the issues of equitable apportionment, maintenance, and child support can be resolved. Peterson v. Peterson, 195 M 157, 636 P2d 821, 38 St. Rep. 1723 (1981).

Child's Social Security Payments Considered in Determining Child Support Payments: In modifying a decree of dissolution, the District Court allowed the father to apply social security benefits received by him on behalf of a minor child toward his support obligation for her. Citing the factors to be considered in determining child support in 40-4-204, including the financial resources and need of the child and the noncustodial parent's ability to pay, the Supreme Court could not say that the District Court abused its discretion. The order of support was affirmed. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981).

Factors Considered in Maintenance and Support Awards: When a District Court is required to make an award of maintenance and support in a dissolution proceeding, it must consider the items and factors set out in 40-4-203 and 40-4-204. Grenfell v. Grenfell, 182 M 229, 596 P2d 205 (1979). See also In re Marriage of Smith, 242 M 495, 791 P2d 1373, 47 St. Rep. 925 (1990); Slayton v. Slayton, 195 M 249, 635 P2d 1303, 38 St. Rep. 1824 (1981); Tomaskie v. Tomaskie, 191 M 508, 625 P2d 536, 38 St. Rep. 416 (1981).

Evidence of Ability to Pay: Imposing an obligation to pay child support without any evidence of an ability to pay is unwarranted. Olson v. Olson, 175 M 444, 574 P2d 1004 (1978).

Discretion of Trial Court to Adjust Property Rights in Favor of Wife: Trial court did not abuse its discretion by awarding wife proportionately larger share of marital property to offset her increased obligations where husband was unable to contribute to support of minor children. Perkins v. Perkins, 168 M 78, 540 P2d 957 (1975).

COMPUTATION OF CHILD SUPPORT AMOUNT

Consideration of Health Insurance Premiums in Calculation of Child Support — Failure to Object at Trial Level: On appeal, the wife objected to the District Court's calculations of child support, arguing that the calculation included a credit for health insurance premiums paid by the husband. At a posttrial hearing, the husband requested this credit, and the wife did not object as long as documentation was provided to confirm what portions of the insurance were for the children. That documentation was provided and taken into account in the child support calculations. The wife waived her right to appeal the issue when she did not object in District Court, and the Supreme Court declined to address the theory raised for the first time on appeal. Siefke v. Siefke, 2000 MT 281, 302 M 167, 13 P3d 937, 57 St. Rep. 1175 (2000).

Variance From Guidelines to Account for Costs Related to Long-Distance Visitation: A court is allowed to grant a variance from child support guidelines to account for the financial condition of a parent and the costs related to long-distance visitation. Here, father presented evidence of the long-distance visitation expenses and his present debt, but the court failed to take those factors into consideration when calculating child support. The Supreme Court directed the District Court to consider the factors as part of its recalculation of child support after remand. In re Marriage of Stufft, 286 M 239, 950 P2d 1373, 54 St. Rep. 1391 (1997).

College Student Grant Considered — Inclusion of Gross Income From Part-Time Construction Self-Employment: On appeal of the District Court's child support order, Michael argued that a Pell grant made to his ex-wife for her college tuition should have been included in the computation of her income, that his ex-wife did not fall within the "protection" of an administrative rule excluding the grant from the computation because the rule required a "plan of economic self-improvement", and that an average income from his part-time self-employment at construction jobs should not have been included in the computation. The Supreme Court held that ARM 46.30.1513(2)(e) required inclusion of a grant in the calculation of income only if it was made for the purpose of "living expenses" and because the grant was for tuition, it was properly excluded. As to the "plan" of self-improvement, the Supreme Court held that the rule did not require that Kimberly have a blueprint or actual written plan governing her college education and that whatever "plan" the rule required was fulfilled because the District Court found that Kimberly did not go to college to avoid her child support obligations. Citing In re Pedersen, 261 M 284, 862 P2d 411 (1993), and ARM 46. 30.1508, the Supreme Court also held that the District Court properly included the gross income rather than an average income from Michael's part-time self-employment as a contractor. In re Marriage of Syverson, 281 M 1, 931 P2d 691, 54 St. Rep. 32 (1997).

Determination by Lower Court of Imputed Income Based on Potential Earnings Upheld: The District Court imputed wages of $12,000 a year to the mother on the basis that she testified that there was nothing preventing her from working a 40-hour week as a waitress. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had correctly applied the guideline in ARM 46.30.1513 when it imputed the mother's wages based on her employment potential, work history, and the earnings level in the community. In re Paternity & Custody of T.J.H., 278 M 74, 923 P2d 1070, 53 St. Rep. 789 (1996).

Husband's Bonus Included in Calculation of Child Support: The father argued that the lower court had correctly applied the guideline in ARM 46.30.1508 by not adding his bonus to his gross income when determining child support. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court on the basis that the bonus was not overtime or from a second job and therefore could not be presumed to be for the support of his second family. In re Paternity & Custody of T.J.H., 278 M 74, 923 P2d 1070, 53 St. Rep. 789 (1996).

Lower Court Correct in Considering Children of Second Marriage in Determining Child Support: The mother argued that the lower court should not have considered her ex-husband's children from his second marriage in determining his support obligation because her petition was not for an increase in support but rather that the District Court redetermine support. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had correctly applied the guideline in ARM 46.30.1520 because although the petition was not labeled a petition to increase support, in reality the mother was seeking a child support increase from an existing order. In re Paternity & Custody of T.J.H., 278 M 74, 923 P2d 1070, 53 St. Rep. 789 (1996).

Visitation Travel Expense Child Support Variance Based Solely on Claim for It and Judicial Notice of Distance to Be Traveled: In Carrie's child support modification proceeding, it was an abuse of discretion to grant a $73 a month Las Vegas to Sidney, Montana, travel expense variance from the child support guidelines for visitation based solely on Trevor's claim of an entitlement to a variance and the court's judicial notice of the distance between the two places. Trevor presented no factual details to support his request, he did not appear at the hearing, and his attorney presented no evidence as to visitation costs or of how often visitation would occur. In re Marriage of Dishon, 277 M 501, 922 P2d 1186, 53 St. Rep. 816 (1996).

Child Support Payment Credit for Cost of Child's Health Insurance — Failure to Purchase Insurance: The District Court properly refused to give the husband a credit against his monthly child support payment for the cost of premiums for health insurance that the court ordered the husband to maintain on the child. The husband had failed to insure the child, and the wife insured the child at her own expense. In re Marriage of Hogstad, 275 M 489, 914 P2d 584, 53 St. Rep. 257 (1996).

Deviation From Support Guidelines to Be Supported by Findings of Trial Court: The father appealed a child support order on the basis that the District Court had not used Uniform Child Support Guidelines and had given no reason for the deviation. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had abused its discretion because its order did not consider the guidelines or state its reasons for not applying the guidelines. In re Marriage of Schnell, 273 M 466, 905 P2d 144, 52 St. Rep. 1059 (1995), following In re Marriage of Griffin, 260 M 124, 860 P2d 78 (1993), and In re Marriage of Brandon, 271 M 149, 894 P2d 951, 52 St. Rep. 381 (1995).

Child Support of $539 a Month Reversed When Other Expenses Were Over $1,347 a Month and Income Was $1,200 a Month: A monthly $539 child support payment was reversed and remanded for recalculation because husband (who was unemployed, was partially paralyzed, had a learning disability, and was qualified only for labor jobs) had expenses of $1,347 a month, not counting child support and court-ordered counseling, had a truck in need of $2,400 in repairs, and had an income of $1,200 a month from an annuity. In re Marriage of Bradshaw, 270 M 222, 891 P2d 506, 52 St. Rep. 154 (1995).

Reimbursed Employment Expenses Not Deducted From Gross Income for Child Support Calculation Purposes: In calculating child support using child support guidelines, the District Court properly refused to deduct reimbursed employment expenses from gross income of payor, which an administrative rule stated could not be deducted. In re Marriage of Murphy, 268 M 1, 885 P2d 440, 51 St. Rep. 1198 (1994).

Reduction in Support Amount Proper When Children in Custody of Nonprimary Custodian: It was not error for the District Court, after setting the level of support based on the applicable statutory factors and guidelines, to reduce father's child support payments by one-half during months that father had custody of the children for at least 25 days. In re Marriage of Corey, 266 M 304, 880 P2d 824, 51 St. Rep. 859 (1994).

Stipulation to Three-Year Income Average — Administrative Guideline Inapplicable: During a prehearing conference with the presiding judge, the parties stipulated to respective child support obligations calculated in accordance with the support guidelines, using an agreed-upon 3-year income average. When the stipulation was reduced to writing, wife refused to sign it, contending that the 3-year average was incorrect and a violation of ARM 46.30.1507(5), which does not allow a court to base a support determination on a stipulation that varies from the guidelines. However, the stipulation involved in this case was not the type encompassed in the rule because the parties' stipulation was not an agreement to vary from the guidelines, thus the rule did not apply. Once the parties entered into the stipulation in good faith, it was proper for the trial court to refuse to allow wife to unilaterally change facts upon which the stipulation was based because the hearing had proceeded in reliance on that agreement. In re Marriage of Hill, 265 M 52, 874 P2d 705, 51 St. Rep. 396 (1994).

Improper Deduction of Retirement Contribution: Under ARM 46.30.1516, contributions toward Internal Revenue Service-approved retirement plans, whether voluntary or mandatory, are deductible from gross income up to the actual amount contributed or 6.5% of gross income, whichever is less. However, in this case, the court erred in allowing a reduction of $1,800 for wife's retirement contribution because there was no evidence that the money was placed in an approved retirement plan. In re Marriage of Hunt, 264 M 159, 870 P2d 720, 51 St. Rep. 209 (1994).

Use of Husband's Business Receipts Minus Business Expenses to Decide Earning Capacity When Neither Party Can Adequately Testify as to His Income: Child support of $252 a month based on a $20,000-a-year earning capacity was properly computed when the court could not accurately determine husband's income from his or his wife's testimony and therefore based his earning capacity on business receipts of $78,000 and business expenses of $58,000 during the prior year. In re Marriage of Rager, 263 M 361, 868 P2d 625, 51 St. Rep. 91 (1994).

Amount of Child Support for Child Care Costs for Unborn Twins Proper: Pedersen initiated a suit against Nordahl to establish that he was the father of her unborn twins and to obtain child support. Nordahl argued that the lower court's valuation of child care costs was speculative. The Supreme Court ruled that ARM 46.30.1525 allowed the lower court to estimate the cost of child care when receipted expenses were not available, as was the case with unborn children. In re Paternity of Pedersen v. Nordahl, 261 M 284, 862 P2d 411, 50 St. Rep. 1338 (1993).

Income Based on Lump-Sum Workers' Compensation Settlement Not Properly Calculated: Gordon and Annette dissolved their marriage in 1985 and, in 1989, stipulated that Gordon's child support obligations would become an attachment on any lump-sum workers' compensation settlement for a previous injury. In 1989, Gordon received a $14,900 impairment award, and in 1990, Gordon received a $50,000 lump-sum settlement. The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) calculated Gordon's child support payments at $72 per month, based upon a 2-year average income of $32,450. The Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in setting payments based upon the 2-year average, as there was no basis for presuming that Gordon's income would be $32,450 per year after 1990. The Supreme Court held that the support payment should be based upon the amount actually received in 1990 and that a second calculation would be necessary for child support due beginning in 1991. In re Marriage of Sullivan, 258 M 531, 853 P2d 1194, 50 St. Rep. 648 (1993).

Not Error to Determine Support Amount Based Upon Preincarceration Income: The father argued that the lower court should have averaged his salary from the year before he was incarcerated with his income the first year of his incarceration to determine the amount of child support he should pay. The Supreme Court expanded its decision in Mooney v. Brennan, 257 M 197, 848 P2d 1020, 50 St. Rep. 229 (1993), to include the original setting of child support amounts. The Supreme Court held that it was not error to use only preincarceration income to determine the original award of child support. In re Marriage of Olsen, 257 M 208, 848 P2d 1026, 50 St. Rep. 234 (1993), followed, with regard to the court's ability to impute income based on the parent's capacity or ability to earn income, in In re Marriage of Hunt, 264 M 159, 870 P2d 720, 51 St. Rep. 209 (1994).

Discretion to Deviate From Support Guidelines: The District Court has considerable discretion to deviate from the SRS (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) child support guidelines if it finds by clear and convincing evidence that application of the standards and guidelines is unjust to the child or any of the parties or is inappropriate to a particular case. If the court decides to apply an older version of the guidelines, it must state its reasons for finding that the amended SRS (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) guidelines are not applicable. In re Marriage of Johnston & Turrin, 255 M 421, 843 P2d 760, 49 St. Rep. 1047 (1992), followed in In re Paternity of W.L., 259 M 187, 855 P2d 521, 50 St. Rep. 751 (1993). For the decision on remand, see In re Paternity of W.L., 270 M 484, 893 P2d 332, 52 St. Rep. 301 (1995).

Award of Retroactive Child Support Affirmed Based on Substantial Evidence: The District Court did not err in awarding child support retroactive to the date of separation when the award was based on substantial evidence, despite father's contention that a retroactive award was prejudicial because the court did not consider: (1) the high cost of living in Alaska where the father lived; (2) the father's alleged inability to meet his financial needs; (3) the disparity in the property settlement; and (4) the fact that the father must also pay health insurance, visitation costs, and child support. In re Marriage of Nash, 254 M 231, 836 P2d 598, 49 St. Rep. 747 (1992).

Failure to Impute Yearly Minimum Wage as Abuse of Discretion: When both parties were unemployed but capable of minimum wage employment, it was an abuse of discretion for the trial court to impute a minimum wage income to one party but not to the other in calculating child support. In re Marriage of Weed, 254 M 162, 836 P2d 591, 49 St. Rep. 681 (1992).

Failure to Prorate Child's Medical Expenses as Abuse of Discretion: The District Court did not make any finding regarding a child's medical condition or probable future extraordinary medical expenses when it directed the parties to share equally in the child's health expenses. Under the child support guidelines, extraordinary medical expenses should be prorated between the parties and added to supplement the support obligation. Determining the amount to be paid can be accomplished by adding a monthly average of past expenses if future costs are comparable. Failure to consider future extraordinary medical expenses constituted an abuse of discretion. (See 1995 amendment.) In re Marriage of Weed, 254 M 162, 836 P2d 591, 49 St. Rep. 681 (1992).

Use of 26.1 Percentage for Income Over $39,500 — No Abuse of Discretion: It was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to apply the 26.1 percentage of parental income, as stated in the child support guideline tables, to an income over $39,500 when the court properly considered the financial situation of the parties and the needs of the children. In re Marriage of Sacry, 253 M 378, 833 P2d 1035, 49 St. Rep. 452 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Wackler, 258 M 12, 850 P2d 963, 50 St. Rep. 406 (1993), wherein it was clarified that the Uniform Child Support Guidelines do not establish a cap on child support on incomes exceeding $39,500, but instead provide the District Court with greater flexibility in setting support payments when parental income exceeds that amount.

Personal Injury Award to Be Considered by Court in Determining Parent's Financial Resources — Uniform Child Support Guidelines Found Inappropriate Under Statutory Exception: When the parties were divorced, the District Court awarded joint custody, awarded primary physical custody to the mother, awarded the mother and father one tax deduction apiece for the children, and required the father to pay the mother child support of $150 per month per child. Later the same year, the father lost his eyesight in a work-related accident and eventually received a lump-sum settlement of $373,557, monthly payments of $3,788 for 30 years, disability insurance payments, and social security benefits. When the mother began receiving social security benefits of $174 per month per child as a result of the accident, the father stopped paying child support. The District Court denied both parties' motions for modification of the child support decree, holding that the money received by the father was compensation for his blindness and could not be used to determine his income for calculating his child support obligation. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that while it would be inappropriate to consider all of the personal injury award as income under the uniform child support guidelines, the District Court should have considered part of the award as income, after subtracting the father's medical expenses. In re Marriage of Durbin, 251 M 51, 823 P2d 243, 48 St. Rep. 1142 (1991). For a discussion of the correct standard of review, see In re Marriage of Kovash, 270 M 517, 893 P2d 860, 52 St. Rep. 280 (1995).

Adjustment in Support Based on Disparity Between Dollar Values in Different Locales: Wife contended District Court error in permitting husband an excessive deduction for the cost of living in Alaska. While the child support guidelines do not address cost-of-living adjustments, when there is substantial disparity between the value of the dollar in different locales, the court may in equity need to make appropriate adjustments; therefore consideration of that factor is not in itself an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Fronk v. Wilson, 250 M 291, 819 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 936 (1991). See also In re Marriage of Mitchell, 229 M 242, 746 P2d 598 (1987).

Admissibility of ACCRA Index in Child Support Calculations: The American Chamber of Commerce Researchers Association (ACCRA) Cost of Living Index is a public record admissible under Rule 803(8), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), for use in calculating cost-of-living differences that affect the amount of a child support obligation. Use of the ACCRA index by the District Court in adjusting for the cost of living in Alaska did not constitute reversible error. In re Marriage of Fronk v. Wilson, 250 M 291, 819 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 936 (1991).

Court Discretion in Use of Tax Returns or Payroll Checks in Calculating Disposable Income: Child support guidelines require income to be calculated on the basis of disposable income. It is within the discretion of the trial court to determine whether tax returns or payroll checks most accurately reflect disposable income. In re Marriage of Fronk v. Wilson, 250 M 291, 819 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 936 (1991).

Available Income Properly Imputed for Track Coach Fees: Appellant contended it was error to impute $1,186 to him for track coaching fees, arguing that the fees should not have been added to his income at all because he was trying to get out of his contractual coaching obligation with his employer. However, it was a proper exercise of the court's discretion to impute the track coach income to appellant because it was available to him. In re Marriage of Chiovaro, 247 M 185, 805 P2d 575, 48 St. Rep. 156 (1991), followed in In re Marriage of Stufft, 276 M 454, 916 P2d 767, 53 St. Rep. 467 (1996).

Deduction of Business Expenses — Court Discretion: It is within the discretion of the trial court to determine whether business expense deductions are reasonable for purposes of calculating child support. In re Marriage of Chiovaro, 247 M 185, 805 P2d 575, 48 St. Rep. 156 (1991).

Failure to Deduct Retirement Payments Not Abuse of Discretion: Although the trial court could have deducted $1,868 that went into appellant's mandatory retirement plan, in light of the fact that appellant did not provide income tax returns in a timely manner as ordered prior to the hearing, failure to deduct the retirement payments was not an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Chiovaro, 247 M 185, 805 P2d 575, 48 St. Rep. 156 (1991).

Insurance Value Properly Included in Gross Income: Appellant received health and dental insurance as a job benefit and did not have to pay extra for the benefit. The District Court valued the insurance at $100 a month and included the value as part of appellant's income. Appellant contended that this was error because the benefit did not add to his disposable income and because the value was not established by expert testimony. Under terms of the dissolution decree, appellant was required to provide insurance for the children. Because this was a benefit appellant would otherwise have had to provide, it constitutes gross income and was properly included as such in the child support calculations. Failure to object at trial to the imputed value of the insurance negated the argument on appeal that expert valuation was required. In re Marriage of Chiovaro, 247 M 185, 805 P2d 575, 48 St. Rep. 156 (1991).

Request for Retroactive Increase in Support — Subsequent Children Properly Considered: Mother contended the District Court abused its discretion in considering father's two children by remarriage when it did not apply Part 13 of the support guidelines, which states that a parent's prior support obligations have absolute precedence over the needs of a new family, when determining the amount of increase in support based on a petition for a retroactive increase. However, the court properly found that common sense and equity demanded the consideration of two subsequent children whom father must also support. A court is not bound to apply the guidelines if the application would have an unjust result to the parties or siblings. In re Marriage of Hall, 244 M 428, 798 P2d 117, 47 St. Rep. 1705 (1990).

Cost-of-Living Increase Properly Denied: Wife contended the District Court erred in failing to consider her request for an annual $50-a-month increase in child support based on increases in the cost of living. The record clearly showed that the court did consider the request but rejected it. Denial of the cost-of-living increase was not an abuse of discretion, considering wife's potential earning capacity, her substantial equity in the family home, the award to her of $9,209 in escrow payments in each of 5 years, and an increase from $400 to $726.55 a month in child support. In re Marriage of Smith, 242 M 495, 791 P2d 1373, 47 St. Rep. 925 (1990).

Deduction of Business Expenses — Appellant's Acquiescence in Expert Testimony Regarding Deductibility: Wife contended that in calculating child support, the District Court incorrectly allowed deductions for husband's dues and publications, auto expenses, attorney fees, accounting fees, and deductions for business investments, even though these items were not listed as allowable deductions under the child support guidelines. However, wife's own expert testified under cross-examination that the deductions were legitimate business expenses when applying the guidelines. In affirming the lower court, the Supreme Court restated the rule that on appeal, the District Court will not be put in error for a ruling or procedure in which appellant acquiesced or participated or to which appellant made no objection. In re Marriage of Smith, 242 M 495, 791 P2d 1373, 47 St. Rep. 925 (1990), followed in In re Marriage of Fesolowitz/Dechaine, 258 M 380, 852 P2d 658, 50 St. Rep. 575 (1993).

Housing Provided by Employer as Constituting Income: The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court erred in failing to consider housing provided to the respondent by his employer as income for purposes of calculating support as required by the Uniform District Court Rule on Child Support Guidelines. In re Marriage of Gray, 242 M 69, 788 P2d 909, 47 St. Rep. 552 (1990).

Unsold Wheat Not Excluded From Support Calculations: The appellant argued that the lower court erred in excluding unsold wheat owned by the respondent in calculating the parties' support obligations. The Supreme Court agreed, holding that under the Uniform District Court Rule on Child Support Guidelines, the wheat was not an income-producing asset but was the fruit of the respondent's labor and therefore income. In re Marriage of Gray, 242 M 69, 788 P2d 909, 47 St. Rep. 552 (1990).

Guidelines Not Followed — Abuse of Discretion: In its findings, the lower court indicated that the $400 a month child support was adequate under the guidelines. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that the lower court abused its discretion because the guidelines called for support in excess of $700 a month. In re Marriage of McFarland, 240 M 209, 783 P2d 409, 46 St. Rep. 2060 (1989).

Support Amount to Realistically Reflect What Parents Capable of Earning: The trial court set the child support amount based on statements of the father that if he had stayed in California, his salary probably would have doubled in the years before the divorce and on the fact that the wife's earnings as an x-ray technician 19 years previously had not exceeded $3,000 a year. The Supreme Court set aside the award and remanded the case to the lower court with instructions that the court had to look at what each party could realistically earn in light of conditions in the local economy. In re Marriage of Gebhardt, 240 M 165, 783 P2d 400, 46 St. Rep. 2026 (1989).

Failure to Consider Child's Standard of Living if No Divorce — Support Modified: In a divorce proceeding, the husband had received $1,750,000 in inheritance installments with another installment likely. The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court had abused its discretion in awarding only $1,200 a month child support because it had not considered the lifestyle the child would have had if there had been no divorce and the child had continued to live with his father. The statutory guidelines called for $4,500 a month, and the wife had asked for $3,357. The Supreme Court remanded the case with instructions that the child support be set at $3,357 a month. In re Marriage of Hoffmaster, 239 M 84, 780 P2d 177, 46 St. Rep. 1531 (1989).

Failure of Court to Apply Child Support Guidelines Not Grounds for Appeal: In a divorce proceeding, the husband appealed the award of child support on the basis that the lower court had not followed the Child Support Guidelines. The Supreme Court affirmed the decision, stating that when it adopted the guidelines, it specifically provided that the guidelines were not binding on the courts and did so in order to prevent appeals based upon a failure to follow them. In re Marriage of Grecian, 238 M 125, 777 P2d 283, 46 St. Rep. 1142 (1989).

Computation of Legitimate Business Expenses — No Abuse of Discretion: Husband claimed that the trial court erred in calculating child support by: (1) reducing from $12.50 to $5 an hour the amount deductible as employment expenses paid to husband's close friend for performing semiskilled labor; (2) including workers' compensation benefits as income in determining his ability to make support payments; and (3) misapplying the child support guidelines by failing to subtract the proper amount of his business expenses from his gross income to arrive at his net income. The Supreme Court noted that the guidelines mandate that only legitimate business expenses are deductible and that there was some controversy over the proper amount of legitimate expenses. Given the nonbinding nature of the guidelines on a judge's calculations, there was no reversible error based on improper use of the guidelines in determining deductible business expenses. In re Marriage of Penning, 238 M 75, 776 P2d 1214, 46 St. Rep. 1103 (1989).

Guidelines Clarified — Minimum Support Per Child Per Month: While the child support guidelines suggest that no support can be set at less than $50 per month, the Supreme Court clarified that the amount should be $50 per month per child. In re Marriage of Callahan, 233 M 465, 762 P2d 205, 45 St. Rep. 1639 (1988).

Failure to Consider Children's Standard of Living and Parent's Financial Resources and Needs — Support Modified: Wife was awarded $700 a month child support rather than the $900 a month she requested. The lower court failed to consider both the standard of living enjoyed by the children prior to dissolution and the noncustodial parent's financial resources. The $700 award was less than required under the Carlson formula. The Supreme Court remanded with instructions to grant $900 a month support. In re Marriage of Anderson, 230 M 89, 748 P2d 469, 45 St. Rep. 40 (1988).

Income Tax Amounts Alone Improper to Determine Child Support Award: Following dissolution of marriage, husband appealed, arguing that the trial court miscalculated wife's income and improperly applied the Uniform District Court Rule on Child Support Guidelines (44 St. Rep. 828). In remanding to the trial court for a redetermination of husband's and wife's income and a more equitable application of the Guidelines, the Supreme Court held that, in analyzing income, the disposable income of the parents rather than the amounts stated on income tax returns alone is to be considered in calculating child support. In re Marriage of Mitchell, 229 M 242, 746 P2d 598, 44 St. Rep. 1936 (1987), followed in In re Marriage of Wersland, 249 M 169, 814 P2d 991, 48 St. Rep. 626 (1991). See also In re Marriage of Graveley, 244 M 137, 796 P2d 585, 47 St. Rep. 1497 (1990). However, see In re Marriage of Nash, 254 M 231, 836 P2d 598, 49 St. Rep. 747 (1992), in which case the calculation of child support based on tax returns was found not to be an abuse of discretion when the calculation was found to be reasonable and supported by substantial credible evidence.

Amount of Award:

Award of $250 per month child support for each of two children was proper where court found: (1) husband had salary in excess of $38,000 a year; (2) the expenses of the husband and his girlfriend were less than $1,000 a month; (3) mother worked part-time as a waitress at $3.50 an hour and had no other suitable employment as a result of her physical and emotional conditions requiring medical care; and (4) mother had expenses in excess of $1,704 a month. In re Marriage of Manus, 225 M 457, 733 P2d 1275, 44 St. Rep. 398 (1987).

In a marriage dissolution proceeding, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in awarding $890-a-month child support and $300 toward the child's education fund as the award was clearly supported by the evidence. The father who was required to pay the amounts earned in excess of $100,000 a year; the child had special needs as he experiences neurological difficulties, learning disabilities, and motor control problems. In re Marriage of Swanson, 220 M 490, 716 P2d 219, 43 St. Rep. 551 (1986).

In dissolution of marriage proceeding, there was substantial credible evidence to support trial judge's award of child support in sum of $175 per month for each of two minor children, plus their medical, dental, and hospital costs and expenses, and alimony in the sum of $150 per month for 5 months, with one-half of house payments made by husband to be counted as alimony. In re Marriage of Barron, 177 M 161, 580 P2d 936 (1978).

In marriage dissolution proceeding, award of only $100 per month for support of child, whose custody was awarded to wife, was not against the clear preponderance of the evidence. In re Marriage of Reilly, 176 M 239, 577 P2d 840 (1978).

Public Assistance Amount Not Requirement: In determining the amount of child support, there is no requirement that children's needs be set at the total of AFDC (now FAIM financial assistance), food stamps, and Medicaid amounts. Isaacs v. Isaacs, 224 M 218, 728 P2d 1345, 43 St. Rep. 2145 (1986).

Formula for Computing Child Support: The algebraic formula suggested by the Supreme Court in Carlson v. Carlson, 214 M 209, 693 P2d 496, 41 St. Rep. 2419 (1984), in the computation of a child support award is only a suggested guideline. (See 1989 amendment notes.) In re Marriage of Di Pasquale, 220 M 467, 716 P2d 223, 43 St. Rep. 557 (1986). See also Isaacs v. Isaacs, 224 M 218, 728 P2d 1345, 43 St. Rep. 2145 (1986), In re Marriage of Ensign, 227 M 357, 739 P2d 479, 44 St. Rep. 1146 (1987), and In re Marriage of Roullier, 229 M 348, 746 P2d 1081, 44 St. Rep. 2035 (1987).

Algebraic Formula to Compute Child Support: After dissolution of his marriage, husband sought and received a reduction in his child support amount based primarily on the fact he was unemployed at the time he petitioned for a reduction. The Supreme Court held that the trial court erred in not considering all the requisite factors in child support modification, including whether the husband is capable of working. As a guideline to computing support, the Supreme Court offered an algebraic formula. The theory of the formula is that the financial needs of the child should be paid by both parents in proportion to their earning capacity. (In 1987 the Supreme Court adopted the Uniform District Court Rule on Child Support Guidelines, 44 St. Rep. 828. The Guidelines were a suggested procedure for the determination of child support. See 1989 amendment that provides the court shall apply the Guidelines in determining the child support obligation.) In re Marriage of Carlson, 214 M 209, 693 P2d 496, 41 St. Rep. 2419 (1984). See also In re Marriage of Mitchell, 229 M 242, 746 P2d 598, 44 St. Rep. 1936 (1987).

REVIEW OF AWARD

Incarceration Not Sufficient Grounds to Retroactively Modify Maintenance Award: The husband argued that the lower court should have retroactively modified its maintenance award because his incarceration changed his circumstances. The Supreme Court held that the amount of the award was based on the wife's needs and that the husband had sufficient liquid assets to cover the maintenance payments regardless of the fact that he was incarcerated. In re Marriage of Olsen, 257 M 208, 848 P2d 1026, 50 St. Rep. 234 (1993).

"Law of the Case" Doctrine: Once a decision has been rendered by the Supreme Court on a particular issue between the parties, the decision is binding upon the courts and those parties and cannot be relitigated in a subsequent appeal. Implicit in this court's holding in a prior appeal in this case, that the District Court had sufficient grounds to modify the distribution of marital assets to allow the husband what he would have received if he had been paid child support payments, is agreement with the District Court's child support grant and valuation of the marital personal property. Therefore, the doctrine of the law of the case applies, and the wife could not have those matters addressed again in the present (second) appeal following remand after the first appeal. In re Marriage of Becker, 255 M 357, 842 P2d 332, 49 St. Rep. 983 (1992).

Standard of Review:

If there is no clear abuse of discretion resulting in substantial injustice, the award made by the District Court will not be disturbed. In re Marriage of Jacobson, 251 M 394, 825 P2d 561, 49 St. Rep. 92 (1992); In re Marriage of Alt, 218 M 327, 708 P2d 258, 42 St. Rep. 1621 (1985); Grenfell v. Grenfell, 182 M 229, 596 P2d 205 (1979), following Brown v. Brown, 179 M 417, 587 P2d 361 (1978); followed in In re Marriage of Gallinger & Weissman, 221 M 463, 719 P2d 777, 43 St. Rep. 976 (1986), In re Marriage of Tonne, 226 M 1, 733 P2d 1280, 44 St. Rep. 411 (1987), In re Marriage of Dunn, 226 M 394, 735 P2d 1117, 44 St. Rep. 749 (1987), and In re Marriage of Houtchens, 233 M 266, 760 P2d 71, 45 St. Rep. 1476 (1988).

In reviewing a District Court's determination, the Supreme Court generally gives deference to the District Court's discretion and will reverse only if the findings are clearly erroneous in light of the evidence in the record. A presumption exists in favor of the judgment, and the lower court will be reversed only if appellant demonstrates that there was a clear abuse of discretion or an error in the findings. The standard of review for abuse of discretion is whether the lower court acted arbitrarily without conscientious judgment or exceeded the bounds of reason resulting in substantial injustice. In re Marriage of Johnson, 225 M 404, 732 P2d 1345, 44 St. Rep. 353 (1987). See also In re Marriage of Clingingsmith, 254 M 399, 838 P2d 417, 49 St. Rep. 794 (1992).

A child support amount cannot be set or reviewed without a determination of the needs of the children. Isaacs v. Isaacs, 224 M 218, 728 P2d 1345, 43 St. Rep. 2145 (1986).

The court did not abuse its discretion in the award of support and maintenance to appellant or in the property disposition since the record failed to disclose an arbitrary exercise of discretion without employment of conscientious judgment. Jerome v. Jerome, 175 M 429, 574 P2d 997 (1978).

The task of the reviewing court is to examine the final child support award to determine whether an abuse of discretion has occurred, thus requiring reversal. Brown v. Brown, 179 M 417, 587 P2d 361 (1978), followed in In re Marriage of Benner, 219 M 188, 711 P2d 802, 42 St. Rep. 1943 (1985), and In re Marriage of Larson, 234 M 400, 763 P2d 1109, 45 St. Rep. 2003 (1988).

Child Support Award for Disabled Child Sufficient: The wife argued that the Special Master erred in awarding only $570 a month for child support of the couple's learning disabled child. She also contended that she should have been awarded an additional $200 a month custodial fee. The Supreme Court held that there was sufficient evidence to support the amount set by the Special Master, which evidence had also been reviewed by the lower court. In re Marriage of Herman, 245 M 451, 802 P2d 623, 47 St. Rep. 2196 (1990).

Deduction of Business Expenses — Appellant's Acquiescence in Expert Testimony Regarding Deductibility: Wife contended that in calculating child support, the District Court incorrectly allowed deductions for husband's dues and publications, auto expenses, attorney fees, accounting fees, and deductions for business investments, even though these items were not listed as allowable deductions under the child support guidelines. However, wife's own expert testified under cross-examination that the deductions were legitimate business expenses when applying the guidelines. In affirming the lower court, the Supreme Court restated the rule that on appeal, the District Court will not be put in error for a ruling or procedure in which appellant acquiesced or participated or to which appellant made no objection. In re Marriage of Smith, 242 M 495, 791 P2d 1373, 47 St. Rep. 925 (1990), followed, with regard to appellant's failure to request that a hearing be vacated, in In re Marriage of Miller, 260 M 15, 858 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 912 (1993), and in In re Marriage of Nordberg, 265 M 352, 877 P2d 987, 51 St. Rep. 531 (1994).

Issues Not Objected to at Trial: The respondent did not object to the lower court's failure to value certain personal property of the petitioner in dividing the parties' marital estate and determining support. The Supreme Court held that it would not review issues raised for the first time on appeal. In re Marriage of Mager, 241 M 78, 785 P2d 198, 47 St. Rep. 97 (1990).

Failure to Consider Factors Involved in Carlson Calculations: The District Court held that it was precluded from applying the Carlson formula because neither party offered evidence of the child's total needs. Although the Carlson formula has been termed a "guideline", the factors it involves must be considered, and failure to do so constituted reversible error. In re Marriage of Saylor, 232 M 294, 756 P2d 1149, 45 St. Rep. 1062 (1988).

Maintenance and Child Support Order Remanded — Insufficient Evidence of Ability to Meet Personal and Spouse's Needs: The Supreme Court remanded an order requiring husband to pay $200 a month support for each of three children, to pay all medical, optical, dental, and drug bills incurred by the children but not covered by insurance, and to pay $300 a month maintenance to wife. The court found no evidence that: (1) the trial court applied the formula set out in In re

Marriage of Carlson, 214 M 209, 693 P2d 496, 41 St. Rep. 2419 (1984), in awarding child support; and (2) the wife's age or physical or emotional condition prevented her from seeking employment to meet her needs independently. The court further noted that father's financial obligations very nearly exceeded his financial resources and that after meeting his marriage-related debts, support, and maintenance obligations, he was not left with enough to meet his own personal needs. In re Marriage of Keel, 223 M 305, 726 P2d 812, 43 St. Rep. 1742 (1986).

Providing Support Out of Marital Assets — Findings Not to Be Arbitrary: In a dissolution proceeding, the District Court awarded the husband $9,576 equity in the family home and ordered that such amount be credited against his child support obligation at the rate of $200 a month until the equity was exhausted. The court did not credit the husband's equity with an interest rate or consider giving the husband consideration in the event the property appreciates in value before his equity is satisfied. On appeal the Supreme Court found this plan to be arbitrary, reversed this holding, and remanded the case for specific findings under 40-4-204, concerning the husband's ability to contribute to the children's support and to equitably deal with the husband's interest in his equity in the home. In re Marriage of Vinner, 201 M 344, 654 P2d 526, 39 St. Rep. 2154 (1982).

Support Deducted From Noncustodial Parent's Share of Marital Estate — Retroactive to Separation: The noncustodial parent was directed to pay $125 a month for each child from the time of the separation until the two children reached the age of 18. Because the noncustodial parent's income exceeded her expenses by only $50 a month, the total child support award was deducted from her share of the marital assets. This was a permissible method of payment, and it was permissible to award support retroactively. In re Marriage of Crabtree, 200 M 178, 651 P2d 29, 39 St. Rep. 1668 (1982).

Support Arrearages: In applying for a contempt citation, a mother filed an affidavit alleging the father's failure to provide the beef required by the decree. The father's attorney countered by asking for custody of two of the children. No affidavit was filed by the father. For that reason the order granting modification of custody was set aside even though the issue was not raised on appeal. The trial court was also ordered to enter an order compelling the father to comply with the accrued beef support obligations. The trial court had no right to excuse support arrearages. In addition, due to errors of counsel, they were urged not to charge their clients for future services rendered in proceedings relating to these matters. Knowlton v. Knowlton, 193 M 448, 632 P2d 336, 38 St. Rep. 1304 (1981).

Speculative Conditions Not to Be Basis for Support Modification: The trial court based its order increasing the amount of child support on the fact that the husband's social security disability benefits had increased 14% and that the benefits were sure to increase in the future. The trial court cannot base child support upon such speculative conditions. Duffey v. Duffey, 193 M 241, 631 P2d 697, 38 St. Rep. 1105 (1981).

Husband's Income Poorly Documented — Reversible Error — Admonition to Attorneys: The District Court's findings were clearly erroneous in a child support determination based upon sketchy and unsubstantiated income information on husband and upon erroneous allocations of debt otherwise handled in the decree. The Supreme Court, in noting that hasty work by the attorneys contributed to this error, reiterated that it is the duty of counsel to be complete and careful in dissolution actions; pretrial conferences, cooperation between attorneys, and availability of underlying documents are important in achieving the fairest possible results in each case. In re Marriage of Benjamin, 189 M 158, 615 P2d 218, 37 St. Rep. 1412 (1980).

Reduction of Award: In order to defray substantial debts incurred after separation by a party who later had received a maintenance and support award, the District Court apparently had considered the debt and reduced the award accordingly. This action was upheld as being within the court's discretion, but a property settlement which was computed considering the same debt again could not stand because it effectively penalized the debtor a second time. Grenfell v. Grenfell, 182 M 229, 596 P2d 205 (1979).

PAYMENTS OUTSIDE DECREE

Reimbursement to Grandparent Who Paid Insurance and Health Costs: Father was obligated by decree to provide health insurance for his children but did not do so. It was not error for the District Court to order reimbursement to a grandparent who purchased insurance and paid medical bills on behalf of the children during the time of father's obligation. In re Marriage of Barber, 252 M 458, 830 P2d 97, 49 St. Rep. 367 (1992).

Consistent Monthly Payments Not Good Cause to Preclude Automatic Withholding: Father asserted that his consistent payment of monthly child support payments following oral modification constituted good cause not to require automatic withholding. However, automatic withholding was found appropriate when the amount of payments was disputed by the parties and was not determined by the trial court. In re Marriage of Hall, 244 M 428, 798 P2d 117, 47 St. Rep. 1705 (1990).

Parent With Residential Custody Pursuant to Mutual Modification — Child Support: As a corollary to the holding in In re Marriage of Sabo, 224 M 252, 730 P2d 1112, 43 St. Rep. 2175 (1986), that wife was not entitled to child support after she gave residential custody of the children to husband, the parent who takes residential custody of children pursuant to a mutual modification of custody provision is entitled to child support. Parents are responsible for the support of their offspring. In re Marriage of Ryan, 239 M 100, 778 P2d 1389, 46 St. Rep. 1543 (1989).

Providing Articles of Clothing or In-Kind Payments — Support Obligation Not Satisfied: A parent's obligation to contribute to the financial support of a child is not satisfied by provision of articles of clothing or other in-kind payments. In re Adoption of K.L.J.K., 224 M 418, 730 P2d 1135, 43 St. Rep. 2297 (1986), affirming In re Adoption of S.L.R., 196 M 411, 640 P2d 886 (1982).

Payments Made Directly to Children: The obligation to pay child support is not discharged by payment to the children themselves when the support order directs that payment be made to the children's mother. State of Oregon ex rel. Worden v. Drinkwalter, 216 M 9, 700 P2d 150, 42 St. Rep. 599 (1985), followed in Willoughby v. Loomis, 264 M 44, 869 P2d 271, 51 St. Rep. 138 (1994).

Credit Against Support Arrearage — Oral Promise by Custodial Parent: Father and custodial mother agreed between themselves that the father would pay certain of the children's medical and dental bills and that in return the mother would give him credit against his child support obligation. The father made the payments. The mother contended the dissolution decree could not be modified by agreement to reduce or cancel past due and unpaid child support. On appeal, the court found no violation of the spirit and purpose of the support order by allowing the father credit for medical payments, particularly where the mother asked him to make them. The court found no modification of the decree, only a streamlining of the process, whereby the father paid the bills directly rather than going through the wife as an intermediary. In re Marriage of Good, 213 M 269, 691 P2d 1337, 41 St. Rep. 2109 (1984).

Gift to Children — No Effect on Duty to Support Wife: There is nothing in the law that transmutes a spouse's generosity toward the support of children past the age of minority into an obligation which relieves the spouse of a potential duty to provide maintenance to the other spouse upon dissolution of the marriage. In re Marriage of D.C. v. M.C., 195 M 505, 636 P2d 857, 38 St. Rep. 2027 (1981).

Payments in Excess of Decree — Gifts: The marriage of the parties was dissolved in 1973. The wife brought suit to collect $15,000 in satisfaction of delinquent payments for support and maintenance for the years 1976, 1977, and 1978. The husband contended that certain sums paid in excess of the decree, amounting to $15,546.11, should be offset against the payments. The husband voluntarily increased support payments and paid for the wife's psychiatric care under an oral agreement. Letters from the husband and his attorney stated that the payments were voluntary and intended as gifts to the children. The trial court held that the excess payments were gifts and that the husband was liable for the back payments. The husband contended that the payments were not gifts because they were not voluntary. He claimed that constant harassing, phone calls, and threats to withhold visitation rights were responsible for the extra payments. The Supreme Court held that while these factors no doubt had an effect, they did not overcome the substantial evidence that the payments were intended as gifts, and the husband was not entitled to offset them against the amount owed under the decree. Delaney v. Delaney, 195 M 259, 635 P2d 1306, 38 St. Rep. 1832 (1981).

Offset Against Child Support Obligation: Hadford argued that $1,000 given to his daughter on her 18th birthday, allowing his son to keep the proceeds of the sale of a snowmobile, and overpayments of maintenance to his spouse should be used to offset his obligation to pay child support. The court rejected this argument, saying that the $1,000 was surely intended as a gift and the overpayment to his spouse was a dispute between him and his spouse and did not relieve him of his obligation to pay child support. Failure to tell his son that the proceeds of the sale of the snowmobile were to be used for support precludes him from claiming the proceeds as offset. Hadford v. Hadford, 194 M 518, 633 P2d 1181, 38 St. Rep. 1308 (1981).

Payments Made Directly on Behalf of Children Not Substantial Compliance With Support Order: The District Court erred in crediting money spent directly on behalf of the children against delinquent child support payments. The manner in which child support is to be used is left to the discretion of the custodial parent. Crediting money spent directly on behalf of the children would allow the noncustodial parent to substitute his judgment for that of the custodial parent and is not in substantial compliance with a support order. Williams v. Budke, 186 M 70, 606 P2d 515 (1980), followed in Willoughby v. Loomis, 264 M 44, 869 P2d 271, 51 St. Rep. 138 (1994).

Restitution of Child Support Overpayments: There can be no restitution where it was just that the payment should have been made and where, as between the parties, it would be inequitable to require any repayment. Here, however, restitution of overpayments of child support cannot be considered inequitable as between the parties, since the defendant has apparently received more child support money than the divorce decree considered adequate, there is no allegation that the amounts decreed were inadequate, and the defendant has never attempted to modify the decree to increase the child support payments. Hereford v. Hereford, 183 M 104, 598 P2d 600 (1979).

Delinquency in Support Payments: Contributions of a father by way of clothing, supplies, and home repairs enhance the welfare of the children but are in addition to the amount to be paid for support. Weber v. Weber, 176 M 144, 576 P2d 1102 (1978).

Mortgage Payments as Substitute for Child Support Payments: Where husband had made regular mortgage payments of $183 per month instead of decreed child support payments of $200 per month for 5 years it was not error for trial court to grant husband's petition for order establishing satisfaction of divorce decree as decree ordered immediate sale of homestead, and to obligate husband to pay both child support and house payments would read into the divorce decree an onerous burden plainly never contemplated. Stripping away form to get at substance, the main purpose of the divorce decree, financial protection of the wife and children, has been satisfied. Haaby v. Haaby, 165 M 475, 529 P2d 1387 (1974).

Attorney General's Opinions

Fee for Filing Petition for Contested Amendment of Parenting Plan Not Applicable to Petition to Modify Child Support: Modification of child support pursuant to 40-4-208 is a separate procedure that does not necessarily entail amendment of a parenting plan pursuant to 40-4-219. Therefore, for filing purposes, a petition to modify child support is not considered a petition for amendment of a parenting plan, and it is inappropriate for a Clerk of Court to collect the $120 statutory fee for filing a petition for a contested amendment of a parenting plan under 25-1-201(1)(a) upon the filing of a petition to modify child support in an existing cause. 47 A.G. Op. 14 (1998).

40-4-205. Guardian ad litem.

Commissioners' Note

This section authorizes the court to appoint an attorney to represent a minor or dependent child in a proceeding for the dissolution of marriage, legal separation, or any other proceeding which involves the child's support, custody, or visitation. The attorney is not a guardian ad litem for the child, but an advocate whose role is to represent the child's interests. The section intentionally does not authorize the child or his attorney to be heard on the issue of whether the marriage of his parent or parents has broken down irretrievably. The appointment may be made by the court on motion of either parent or by the court on its own motion. It is expected that the authority given the court by this section will be exercised primarily in contested cases, but rare or unusual circumstances may make the appointment appropriate in formally uncontested matters.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 343 in (1), at end of first sentence, and at end of (2)(a), (2)(c), and (2)(d) substituted "parenting, and parental contact" for "custody, and visitation"; and at end of (3) substituted "caretakers" for "custodians".

Saving Clause: Section 41, Ch. 343, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 42, Ch. 343, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 43, Ch. 343, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] applies to proceedings begun after October 1, 1997, including proceedings regarding modification of orders or decrees existing on October 1, 1997."

1995 Amendments: Chapter 394 in (1), in first sentence, substituted "guardian ad litem" for "attorney" and inserted second sentence that read: "The guardian ad litem may be an attorney"; inserted (2) concerning the general duties of a guardian ad litem; inserted (3) concerning a guardian ad litem's access to various records; in (4), after "child's", substituted "guardian ad litem" for "attorney"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 12, 1995.

Chapter 546 substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of family services". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Saving Clause: Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 434 in second sentence inserted "or the department of family services or any of its staff"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 21, 1993.

Montana Changes: The Montana act provides for a waiver of costs while the Uniform Act provides for costs to be borne by an appropriate agency. Montana also does not authorize payment of "disbursements" on behalf of the child by the attorney, but only costs and fees. By omitting the word "or" between "minor" and "dependent child", all Montana language seems to mean representation only for those persons under the age of majority who are not emancipated.

Case Notes

Failure to Appoint Guardian Ad Litem in Light of Parent's Abusive Behavior Within Trial Court's Discretion: The trial court revised a parenting plan in a manner that significantly restricted the father's parenting rights. The father contended that it was error for the court to fail to appoint a guardian ad litem for the child because of the importance of the decision and because both parents requested one. The Supreme Court noted that appointment of a guardian ad litem is not mandatory and lies within the discretion of the trial court. Here, the trial court properly exercised its discretion after considering the request but stating that it was unwilling to place anyone else in danger of the father's threatening and abusive behavior. In re Custody of Arneson-Nelson, 2001 MT 242, 307 M 60, 36 P3d 874 (2001).

Lay Person May Be Guardian Ad Litem in Child Custody Proceeding: Generally, in a child custody proceeding, the court may appoint as a guardian ad litem for the child any person who does not have interests adverse to those of the child. The Supreme Court rejected the father's claim that the lower court should not have appointed a lay person, who the father likened to an expert witness and claimed was unqualified and had no known or disclosed experience or qualifications. In re Custody of Krause, 2001 MT 37, 304 M 202, 19 P3d 811 (2001).

Prior Hearing on Guardian Ad Litem Appointment Not Shown to Be Required by Due Process: The father did not provide an argument, authority, or any showing that the court's appointment of a guardian ad litem in a child custody proceeding without providing the father a prior hearing on the appointment in some way deprived him of a fundamental liberty interest in the custody of his child. The Supreme Court rejected his claim that the lack of a hearing violated his due process rights. In re Custody of Krause, 2001 MT 37, 304 M 202, 19 P3d 811 (2001).

Appointment of Attorney for Children Not Necessary — Children's Position Adequately Developed: In a change of custody proceeding, mother's motion that the court appoint an attorney for the children was not ruled on and the court did not state why an appointment was not made. The Supreme Court carefully reviewed the record to determine if an attorney was required for the children. The court found substantial expert and other evidence, largely uncontradicted, that stepfather subjected the children to ritual satanic sexual abuse, that the boy had expressed suicidal wishes, that the father and his subsequent wife were better suited to have custody, that the children were progressing well in the father's custody and had not progressed well in the mother's custody, and that the mother behaved erratically toward the children and sometimes acted contrary to the children's best interests. The Supreme Court found that the lower court did not err in failing to appoint an attorney for the children because the issues as to their best interests were well-developed. The court also expressly overruled the holding in In re Gullette, 173 M 132, 566 P2d 396 (1977), that in a contested guardianship proceeding in which custody is in serious dispute, the court must appoint independent counsel for the child or make a finding stating why the appointment was not necessary. (See 1995 amendment.) McDowell v. McDowell, 263 M 252, 868 P2d 1250, 51 St. Rep. 42 (1994).

Grandparents Not Liable for Son's Share of Attorney Fees: In a dissolution action, the lower court appointed an attorney to represent the interests of the children. Subsequently, the children's grandparents attempted to intervene in the action and obtain custody. The lower court denied their motion. In its final order, the court ordered the grandparents to pay their son's share of the children's attorney fees on the basis that the son had "no intention of doing so". The Supreme Court held that there is no legal basis in 40-4-110, which was relied on by the lower court, to require the grandparents to pay their son's share. However, the Supreme Court refused to address whether the lower court could have required payment under this section because the order was not based on that statute. In re Custody of R.R.K., R.D.K., & L.M.K., 260 M 191, 859 P2d 998, 50 St. Rep. 1002 (1993).

Appointment of Attorney for Children Not Mandatory: This section provides that appointment of an attorney to represent the interests of minor children is permissive rather than mandatory. (See 1995 amendment.) In re Marriage of Merriman, 247 M 491, 807 P2d 1351, 48 St. Rep. 275 (1991), followed in In re Marriage of Johnston & Turrin, 255 M 421, 843 P2d 760, 49 St. Rep. 1047 (1992).

Custody Proceedings — Court-Appointed Attorney for Child — Service Required: While the appointment of an attorney to represent children in custody matters is discretionary with the court under this section, once an attorney has been appointed, it is required that he or she be served with all orders, pleadings, motions, notices, and other papers pertinent to the action. Further, the attorney must actively represent the children and be given an opportunity to present all evidence concerning the best interests of the children. (See 1995 amendment.) In re Marriage of Hammill, 225 M 263, 732 P2d 403, 44 St. Rep. 220 (1987).

Appointment of Attorney Not Required: When the sole concern of the trial court was whether jurisdiction in this custody proceeding should be in this state or another, the court committed no error in not appointing an attorney for the children. Section 40-4-205 applies to substantive issues, not to the question of jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Brown, 218 M 14, 706 P2d 116, 42 St. Rep. 1360 (1985).

No Conflict of Interest: There was no conflict of interest for an attorney appointed to represent the child in a proceeding for modification of custody when the attorney occupied an office that had formerly been shared by the attorney representing the father and the judge presiding over the case (before he became a judge). In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729, 42 St. Rep. 856 (1985).

Role of Attorney Appointed to Represent Child in Custody Dispute: An attorney appointed to represent a child in a custody dispute is bound to represent the child's best interests, not the child's wishes. Although the child's wishes deserve the serious attention of the attorney, the attorney's role is to advocate what is in the best interests of the child. In re Marriage of Rolfe, 216 M 39, 699 P2d 79, 42 St. Rep. 623 (1985), followed in In re Custody of J.M.D., 259 M 468, 857 P2d 708, 50 St. Rep. 884 (1993).

When Attorney Must Be Appointed: The appointment of counsel is only necessary when the child needs an advocate to represent his position as to the issues in dispute or to ensure the development of an adequately complete record concerning the best interests of the child. (See 1995 amendment.) Milanovich v. Milanovich, 200 M 83, 655 P2d 959, 39 St. Rep. 1554 (1982).

Abuse of Discretion in Awarding Custody: The court abused its discretion in awarding custody of children to the mother by ignoring the desires of the children, excluding a report of investigation by the welfare department, and in hearing the child custody issue without the presence of the children's attorney. The court should make a specific finding, stating the wishes of the children as to their custodian, and, if the court determines that the children's wishes are not being followed, the court should state in its findings the reason it has chosen not to follow their wishes. Kramer v. Kramer, 177 M 61, 580 P2d 439 (1978).

When Finding on Appointment of Counsel Required: Only in cases heard and decided after Gullette, 173 M 132, 566 P2d 396 (1977) (overruled in McDowell v. McDowell, 263 M 252, 868 P2d 1250, 51 St. Rep. 42 (1994)), is a finding on the appointment of counsel for a minor child required. Further, appointment of counsel is only necessary when the child needs an advocate to represent his position as to the issues in dispute or to ensure the development of an adequately complete record concerning his best interests. (See 1995 amendment.) In re Inquiry into J.J.S., Youth in Need of Care, 176 M 202, 577 P2d 378 (1978). See also Bartmess v. Bartmess, 193 M 200, 631 P2d 299, 38 St. Rep. 1097 (1981).

Objections First Raised on Appeal: The issue of failure to appoint counsel for a dependent minor child lacked merit because it was not raised at trial. Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978), followed in In re Marriage of Ulland, 251 M 160, 823 P2d 864, 48 St. Rep. 1159 (1991).

Court Instructed to Appoint Counsel: To protect the interests of the minor children upon rehearing of a change of custody petition, the District Court was instructed to appoint independent counsel for the minor children. Schiele v. Sager, 174 M 533, 571 P2d 1142 (1977).

Commissioners' Note

This section establishes a procedure for payment of support or maintenance orders through a court officer and for enforcement by the appropriate prosecuting attorney. The section is modeled on similar provisions in North Dakota, Wisconsin, and other states and is intended to make use of the state's remedy of civil contempt as an effective device for the enforcement of support and maintenance.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 552 in (1), at beginning, inserted exception clause; in (2), in first sentence, inserted "of payments received by the clerk"; inserted (4) providing that when the Department is providing Title IV-D services or when income withholding is in effect for an order issued or modified after October 1, 1998, support must be paid through the Department; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Commissioners' Note

This section is modeled on similar provisions in Wisconsin and California and provides an additional method of assuring that obligations for support and maintenance will be met when due. The Section goes beyond existing law in authorizing an assignment of trust income as well as periodic earnings. In states which permit spendthrift trusts, for purposes of support and maintenance, to be attacked, this section will also apply to spendthrift trusts. Each state should insert in the bracket the sum it deems sufficient to meet the cost to the payor of deducting the sums due from each payment. The validity of the obligation imposed on the payor of funds is clearly supported by analogy to garnishment, and to cases such as Day-Brite Lighting, Inc. v. Missouri, 72 S.Ct. 405, 342 U.S. 421, 96 L.Ed. 469 (1952).

Case Notes

Wage Assignment Order Withdrawn — Agreement to Pay College Expenses Unenforceable Support Obligation: In a divorce settlement agreement, the husband and wife agreed to share equally the cost of their children's education. However, the final decree, which incorporated the settlement agreement, placed responsibility of child support solely with the husband. When the wife failed to contribute any educational expenses, the husband sought and received from the District Court an order assigning the wife's wages to satisfy the husband's judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that despite any other agreement, the final decree placed all child support responsibilities with the husband. The wife's agreement to pay college expenses created nothing more than a contractual obligation enforceable in the same manner as other contractual obligations. 40-4-208. Modification and termination of provisions for maintenance, support, and property disposition.

Commissioners' Note

Subsection (a) [(1)] makes each installment under an order for periodic support or maintenance final and non-modifiable when it falls due. The accrued installments cannot be modified retroactively, and future installments can be modified only as to those falling due after a motion for modification has been filed. The purpose of thus making each installment final and non-modifiable when it becomes due is to give each past due installment the status of a final judgment entitled to full faith and credit in other states pursuant to the decisions of the Supreme Court in Lynde v. Lynde, 21 S.Ct. 555, 181 U.S. 183, 45 L.Ed. 810 (1901); Sistare v. Sistare, 30 S.Ct. 682, 218 U.S. 1, 54 L.Ed. 905, 28 LRANS 1068, 20 Ann.Cas. 261 (1910); Barber v. Barber, 65 S.Ct. 137, 323 U.S. 77, 89 L.Ed. 82, 157 A.L.R. 163 (1944); and Griffin v. Griffin, 66 S.Ct. 556, 327 U.S. 220, 90 L.Ed. 635 (1945). The Supreme Court has not yet held that future installments are entitled to full faith and credit, but at least one state court has done so [Light v. Light, 147 N.E.2d 34, 12 Ill.2d 502 (1958)] and another state has extended voluntary recognition to future installments [Worthley v. Worthley, 283 P.2d 19, 44 Cal.2d 465 (1955)]. See the comment to Section 306(d) [40-4-201(4)] with respect to international enforcement.

Except where the decree, incorporating the agreement of the parties, provides to the contrary [see Section 306(f) [40-4-201(6)]], future installments may be modified, but the person seeking modification must show that circumstances have changed since the date of the original order so that the order is unconscionable at the time the motion is made and will continue to be unconscionable unless modified. This strict standard is intended to discourage repeated or insubstantial motions for modification. In accordance with presently existing law, the provisions of the decree respecting property disposition may not be altered unless the judgment itself can be reopened for fraud or otherwise under the laws of the state. There is no intention to change this law. If the judgment was rendered by another state, normal full faith and credit law would allow it to be reopened in the forum state if it can be reopened under the laws of the rendering state.

Subsection (b) authorizes the parties to agree in writing or the court to provide in the decree that maintenance will continue beyond the death of the obligor or the remarriage of the obligee. In the absence of such an agreement or provision in the decree, this section sets the termination date for the obligation to pay future maintenance.

Subsection (c) [(3)] is designed to permit the parties to agree in writing or the court to provide in the decree that the obligation of each parent to support the child will extend beyond the child's emancipation and to permit parents, on occasion of a legal separation or dissolution of marriage, to agree that the child support provisions of the decree will terminate upon the death of a parent who has provided for the child in his will. In the absence of such an agreement or provision in the decree, this section terminates the obligation of a parent to support a child, only upon the child's emancipation. The parent's death does not terminate the child's right to support, and the court may make an appropriate order establishing the obligation of the deceased parent's estate to the child. Section 316(c) [40-4-208(3)], read in connection with Section 309 [40-4-204], authorizes a support order against the estate of a parent who had received property for the child's support if that property was not actually used for the child's support or did not accrue to the child's benefit by [virtue] of the parent's death.

To avoid indefinite delay in the settlement of estates, there may be modification or commutation to a lump sum payment "to the extent just and appropriate in the circumstances." Any person interested, including a creditor or an attorney for the child (Section 310 [40-4-205]), may move the court for the appropriate order.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 326 at beginning of (2)(a), (2)(b), and last sentence of (2)(b)(iii) inserted exception clause; and inserted (6) concerning modification for nondisclosure.

Applicability: Section 12, Ch. 326, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] applies to proceedings commenced on or after October 1, 1997."

1995 Amendments: Chapter 504 inserted (2)(c) concerning modification of a child support order due to nonexistence or violation of a medical support order. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 in (2)(b)(iii), in two places, substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of social and rehabilitation services". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 504, L. 1995, provided: "WHEREAS, it is appropriate to draft a bill specifically to present proposed program improvements for medical support enforcement in a single, comprehensive bill that promotes the needs of legislative energy, efficiency, and economy by limiting the number of possible bills and by reducing the need for hearings and readings on those bills; and

WHEREAS, parents should be held responsible for providing medical care for their children, whether or not the parents voluntarily do so."

1995 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 504, L. 1995, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it grants rulemaking authority to the department of social and rehabilitation services to adopt rules for expedited procedures."

Severability: Section 33, Ch. 504, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Saving Clause: Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1991 Amendment: In (5), at beginning, deleted "Unless otherwise agreed in writing or expressly provided in the decree" and in first sentence, after "emancipation of the child", inserted language concerning emancipation upon graduating from high school or reaching 19 years of age; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 4, 1991.

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 342, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent is not required for this bill because it does not grant rulemaking authority. However, a committee may by a two-thirds vote agree to attach a statement of intent to a bill not requiring one. The legislature finds that it would be unconscionable to have child support terminate prior to the graduation of a child from high school if the child is still living at home with the other parent, is still in need of support, and there has been no change in living circumstances prior to high school graduation."

Applicability: Section 2, Ch. 342, L. 1991, provided: "[Section 1] [40-4-208] applies to all decrees containing provisions for child support issued on or after [the effective date of this act] [effective April 4, 1991]."

1989 Amendments: Chapter 549 inserted (2)(b)(iii) relating to Department of Revenue applications and support modifications.

Chapter 702 in (2)(b)(iii) substituted "department of social and rehabilitation services" for "department of revenue". Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

1987 Amendment: Near end of (1), after "subsequent to", inserted "actual notice to the parties of".

Source: Section 316, Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act.

Montana Changes: The Montana version adds subsection (2)(b) and (3)(b), providing for modification upon written consent of the parties, and changes the language of subsection (1) without affecting the substance. See also 1987 and 1989 amendment notes.

MAINTENANCE

Failure to Meet Unconscionability Test — Request to Terminate Maintenance Properly Denied: Husband requested termination of $300-a-month maintenance payments because wife had become employed full time and could afford to care for herself. However, nothing husband presented to the court showed that circumstances had changed so substantially from the time of the original decree as to make the terms of the original agreement unconscionable. Denial of the motion to terminate maintenance was proper. In re Marriage of Brandon, 271 M 149, 894 P2d 951, 52 St. Rep. 381 (1995).

Order Terminating Maintenance Based on Cohabitation Vacated: The lower court issued an order containing a provision that maintenance paid by the husband would terminate upon the wife cohabiting with another individual for a period of more than 6 months. The Supreme Court held that maintenance will not terminate automatically upon the cohabitation of one of the parties absent a showing of changed circumstances. In re Marriage of Chew, 269 M 331, 888 P2d 428, 52 St. Rep. 13 (1995).

Social Security Payment to Daughter Not Credited to Medical Bill Arrearages — Only Prospective Credit to Be Given: After Dale and Sandy's marriage was dissolved, their minor child Sara received a lump-sum Social Security payment because of Dale's disability. Dale then moved for modification of the dissolution decree, asking that he be relieved of his obligation, resulting from the original decree, to pay Sara's medical bills. The District Court relieved Dale of one-half of his responsibility incurred after notice of his motion and did not credit the Social Security payment toward arrearages. Citing In re Marriage of Durbin, 251 M 51, 823 P2d 243 (1991), the Supreme Court held that under subsection (1) of this section, Dale's obligation could be modified only prospectively from the date that Dale gave notice of his motion to modify; therefore, the Social Security payments could not be credited toward arrearages. (See 1995 amendment.) In re Marriage of Malquist, 266 M 447, 880 P2d 1357, 51 St. Rep. 914 (1994).

Payment of Lump-Sum Maintenance Award Required Despite Remarriage of Recipient: When presented with the question of whether payment of a lump-sum maintenance award in gross or in installments is required upon remarriage of the recipient, absent any provision for defeasance in the decree, the Supreme Court cited Kishner v. Kishner, 562 P2d 493 (Nev. 1977), in holding that the recipient's right to receive the entire lump-sum maintenance award vested on entry of the decree and that it must be paid in accordance with the terms of the decree regardless of the recipient's remarriage. In re Marriage of Schara, 266 M 76, 878 P2d 908, 51 St. Rep. 676 (1994).

Maintenance Payments That Divorce Agreement States Are a Property Settlement — No Termination by Remarriage: Wife's remarriage did not allow husband to stop payment of maintenance to her because the written settlement agreement stated that the payments were in the nature of a property settlement. In re Marriage of Hahn, 263 M 315, 868 P2d 599, 51 St. Rep. 73 (1994).

Property Settlement Payments Improperly Characterized as Maintenance: After the parties' divorce, the husband, Arthur, was given an opportunity to retire early from the railroad. He contacted his ex-wife, Shirley, and the parties modified the divorce settlement to allow him to take early retirement. On appeal, she argued that the lower court had characterized the modified property settlements as maintenance that would be taxable to her, as opposed to property settlement payments that would not be taxable. Shirley also argued that since the lower court had wrongly characterized the payments as maintenance, it had incorrectly ruled on her request for permanent maintenance. The Supreme Court held that the agreement modified support payments and the lower court had mischaracterized the payments but also held that there was sufficient evidence to support a finding that Shirley's circumstances had not changed since the original decree and therefore no grounds existed to award permanent maintenance. In re Marriage of Brownell, 263 M 78, 865 P2d 307, 50 St. Rep. 1714 (1993).

Continuance of $250 a Month Maintenance Awarded in 1974 Upheld: The District Court properly ruled that $250 a month maintenance originally awarded in 1974 should be continued. Wife was in bad health, was of advanced age, was unemployed, had $13,000 in savings and a 1975 Chevrolet, was owed $17,000 by her sons, and was in essentially the same position as she was in 1974 when the divorce occurred. Husband received a retirement check in the amount of $1,400 a month, which would have been higher had he not withdrawn $17,000 from his retirement account; owned real property worth $135,000; received a federal conservation reserve program payment of $7,800 on one piece of property in 1989 and $469 a month from trailer rental in 1989; and had $4,500 in a credit union, about $15,000 in stocks, a $5,158 IRA, and a $3,352 interest in a corporation. In re Marriage of Burris, 258 M 265, 852 P2d 616, 50 St. Rep. 525 (1993).

Terms of Separation Agreement Precluding Modification of Maintenance: A separation agreement provided that maintenance payments were intended to be temporary and that wife would receive maintenance for 24 months or until her death or remarriage, whichever occurred first. Following satisfaction of the maintenance obligation in full, wife struggled financially and sought a modification based on changed circumstances that rendered the prior agreement unconscionable. By law, parties are free to preclude or limit any future modification of maintenance by the terms of the separation agreement. The District Court found that the limiting language in the agreement expressly prohibited any attempt to modify maintenance provisions in the original decree. Summary dismissal of the motion for modification was not improper. In re Marriage of Johnson, 252 M 258, 828 P2d 388, 49 St. Rep. 240 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Pearson, 1998 MT 236, 291 M 101, 965 P2d 268, 55 St. Rep. 992 (1998).

Evidence of Quasi-Marital Relationship — Maintenance Due: Husband presented evidence that wife lived with another man in a "quasi-marital" relationship. However, both the parties' support agreement and the guidelines of this section provided that maintenance would cease upon remarriage, which had not occurred. Therefore, the trial court was correct in retaining support obligations. In re Marriage of Bourque, 241 M 38, 785 P2d 699, 47 St. Rep. 64 (1990), followed in In re Marriage of Bross, 256 M 174, 845 P2d 728, 50 St. Rep. 13 (1993), and In re Marriage of Brown, 283 M 269, 940 P2d 122, 54 St. Rep. 594 (1997), but ruling that cohabitation may be a factor in determining if a change in circumstances has occurred.

Agreement Stating It Could Not Be Modified Incorporated in Decree — Modification of Maintenance for Subsequent Unconscionability Denied: An agreed upon property settlement incorporated into a divorce decree provided that for 4 ½ years, while she was attending college and obtaining employment thereafter, husband would pay wife $250 a month maintenance and $2,000 a year to help pay for tuition and books. The agreement provided that it could not be modified by subsequent court order except for child custody, support, and visitation modifications or upon express written consent of the parties. It mutually released the parties from all claims and rights that either had against the other. The maintenance was an inseverable part of the property settlement agreement. Wife had given up rights to property in exchange for it. The court erred in modifying the agreement to deprive wife of the maintenance and tuition and books payments. Because the decree could not be modified, the issue of whether, as the lower court found, there was a change in circumstances so substantial and continuing as to make the maintenance provisions agreement unconscionable was moot. In re Marriage of Robertson, 237 M 406, 773 P2d 1213, 46 St. Rep. 904 (1989), followed in King v. King, 276 M 500, 917 P2d 434, 53 St. Rep. 489 (1996).

Consent to Modification by Court: The parties executed a separation agreement containing a maintenance clause calling for monthly payments from husband to wife. The agreement was incorporated in the dissolution decree. In a subsequent action to enforce the clause, the District Court concluded that the parties intended the monthly payments to be a property division and ordered respondent husband to draft a promissory note secured by a mortgage lien payable to his wife. The Supreme Court held that the District Court could not, in its own discretion, remove the maintenance provision and recalculate the parties' property distribution. However, by reason of the consent of the parties, the court was given power to make a modification in the terms of the agreement, but under these circumstances, it was not appropriate to use a real estate mortgage. In re Marriage of Nelson, 235 M 227, 766 P2d 873, 45 St. Rep. 2340 (1988).

Petition Entered Three Years After Prior Modification — Timeliness: Wife petitioned the District Court to enter a new modification of a property settlement agreement more than 3 years after a prior modification. Husband contended that the petition was not timely. The Supreme Court found this argument unpersuasive because both the original and modified agreements spoke to maintenance and both explicitly provided for certain levels of child support. Thus, they were not subject to the 2-year limitation of subsection (2)(a), but rather were subject to modification at any time upon a showing of substantial and continuing change of circumstances. In re Marriage of Hagemo, 230 M 255, 749 P2d 1079, 45 St. Rep. 183 (1988).

Failure to Modify Maintenance Obligation: Prior to a show cause hearing, parties stipulated that husband would pay $600 a month maintenance until the marital property was divided and distributed. About 6 months later, parties entered into a farm partnership agreement wherein they agreed to equally divide farm profits and losses and to provide husband with wages of $500 a month. The agreement did not mention the previous stipulation or address the maintenance issue. Subsequent to entering the partnership agreement, husband discontinued maintenance payments. Husband was later found to be bound by the stipulation upon failing to provide evidence of the parties' intent to terminate maintenance and by failing to modify his maintenance obligation pursuant to this section. In re Marriage of Halverson, 230 M 226, 749 P2d 518, 45 St. Rep. 162 (1988).

Continuing Court Jurisdiction Regarding Maintenance, Support, Property Disposition, and Child Custody — New Judge: Since under Montana law a court has continuing jurisdiction in matters of maintenance, support, property disposition, and child custody, a newly appointed judge may make findings in a case he or she has not heard, may need to hear new evidence, and is entitled to rely on the record established in the case. In re Marriage of Ensign, 227 M 357, 739 P2d 479, 44 St. Rep. 1146 (1987).

No Maintenance Provision in Decree — No Modification After Two Years: A petition for modification with respect to maintenance must be considered by the District Court if it is filed within 2 years of the date the decree is rendered, regardless of whether the decree contains provisions for maintenance or whether maintenance payments currently are being paid. If 2 years have expired since the dissolution decree was rendered, modification is still possible when the decree contains a provision relating to maintenance. When maintenance payments currently are mandated under the decree, a modification petition must be considered by the District Court. In the present case, the decree proposed for modification did not contain a provision for maintenance and cannot be modified because nearly 6 years have elapsed since entry of the decree. In re Marriage of Cooper, 216 M 34, 699 P2d 1044, 42 St. Rep. 619 (1985), distinguished in In re Marriage of Hagemo, 230 M 255, 749 P2d 1079, 45 St. Rep. 183 (1988), and In re Marriage of Eickmeyer, 271 M 272, 895 P2d 623, 52 St. Rep. 437 (1995), and followed, with regard to a District Court's obligation to entertain a motion to modify its prior decision regarding maintenance as being defined by statute and not by the decree for which modification is sought, in In re Marriage of DeCosse, 282 M 212, 936 P2d 821, 54 St. Rep. 318 (1997). See also In re Marriage of Smith, 260 M 533, 861 P2d 189, 50 St. Rep. 1307 (1993).

No Increase — Former Spouse Capable of Higher Payments — No Showing of Substantial Change in Circumstances: The fact that appellant's former husband was capable of paying more maintenance than had been awarded in the original dissolution decree was not sufficient to justify modification of the decree under this section in the absence of any evidence of a substantial change in circumstances. In re Marriage of Rush, 215 M 498, 699 P2d 65, 42 St. Rep. 581 (1985), distinguished in In re Marriage of Eickmeyer, 271 M 272, 895 P2d 623, 52 St. Rep. 437 (1995).

Modification of Maintenance Permissible When No Clear Relationship Between Maintenance Provisions and Property Distribution Provisions: Absent a clear and undisputed interrelationship between a dissolution decree's property distribution and "maintenance" provisions, modification of such provisions is permissible upon a proper showing of changed circumstances and unconscionability. Shultz v. Shultz, 205 M 212, 666 P2d 1242, 40 St. Rep. 1223 (1983).

Failure to Properly Adduce Financial Condition at Time of Original Decree: The District Court failed to adduce substantial credible evidence in support of its finding that maintenance payments owed by defendant husband pursuant to a divorce decree should be modified due to a material change in his economic circumstances since the entry of petitioner's and respondent's divorce decree. No evidence was presented regarding defendant's financial position at the time of the original decree, thus it was impossible to determine whether the defendant's ability to pay substantially changed from the time of dissolution to the time of petition for modification. Furthermore, no evidence was presented that the changed economic circumstances would continue. Nyquist v. Nyquist, 193 M 288, 631 P2d 721, 38 St. Rep. 1198 (1981).

FELA Settlement Funds Properly Considered in Amendment of Award of Permanent Maintenance: Where, following the injury of the defendant in a railroad accident, the District Court eliminated an award of permanent maintenance, the court did not abuse its discretion in reinstating the award based upon the defendant's receipt of money in settlement of a Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) claim for his injuries. The fact that the FELA funds cannot be awarded as a property settlement under federal law does not mean that the same money cannot be considered by the District Court in reevaluating its previous denial of permanent maintenance for the plaintiff. Heintzelman v. Heintzelman, 193 M 183, 631 P2d 290, 38 St. Rep. 1074 (1981).

Maintenance Modification Under Agreement Referring to Statute — Appropriateness of Employment Properly Determined: Where the parties to a previous dissolution action agreed that the wife would not have to seek employment as a condition of maintenance in order that she be able to care for their handicapped child and agreed to modification of maintenance upon a showing of those factors set out in 40-4-203, the District Court did not err in denying the husband's petition for modification where the husband proved only that his former wife was capable of working. The statute requires only that the District Court determine whether it is appropriate under the circumstances that she work. Based upon evidence that the child of the parties still needed special care at home, the District Court determined it was not appropriate. Tidball v. Tidball, 192 M 1, 625 P2d 1147, 38 St. Rep. 482 (1981).

Failure to Consider Pending Federal Employers' Liability Act Claim — Appeal Moot: When husband had petitioned District Court for modification eliminating maintenance provision based on changed circumstances, wife's appeal from the modification on the grounds that the District Court should have considered the husband's pending Federal Employers' Liability Act claim was rendered moot by settlement of the claim after the appeal had been filed. Heintzelman v. Heintzelman, 187 M 220, 609 P2d 295 (1980).

Maintenance Versus Property Settlement — Termination on Remarriage — Intent of Court Decree: In a divorce decree, the language of the decree provided that payments to the wife were to be in lieu of a division of property and were to be for her support and maintenance. This language showed that the intent of the court was clearly that the payments were for support and maintenance, not a division of property, and could therefore be terminated upon the wife's remarriage. Bertagnolli v. Bertagnolli, 185 M 1, 604 P2d 299 (1979).

Reduction of Award: In order to defray substantial debts incurred after separation by a party who later had received a maintenance and support award, the District Court apparently had considered the debt and reduced the award accordingly. This action was upheld as being within the court's discretion, but a property settlement which was computed considering the same debt again could not stand because it effectively penalized the debtor a second time. Grenfell v. Grenfell, 182 M 229, 596 P2d 205 (1979).

Current Accrual of Payments Unnecessary: This statute does not require that there be maintenance or support payments accruing at the time of or after the motion for modification. The fact that a person is not currently receiving payments under the original decision does not necessarily preclude him from ever receiving an additional award of maintenance. Fraunhofer v. Price, 182 M 7, 594 P2d 324 (1979), followed in In re Marriage of Hagemo, 230 M 255, 749 P2d 1079, 45 St. Rep. 183 (1988).

Findings of Fact Required:

A District Court must make findings of fact whenever it modifies a prior award of maintenance on the basis of "changed circumstances so substantial and continuing as to make the terms unconscionable". Kronovich v. Kronovich, 179 M 335, 588 P2d 510 (1978).

The pertinent factors in 40-4-203 and 40-4-204, with findings of fact to support them, should be set out in the District Court's decision. Otherwise the appellate court has nothing upon which to base its review. Moreover, under 40-4-208 the District Court can grant modification or termination of maintenance and support only if there is a showing of circumstances making the payments unconscionable, which compels proper findings and conclusions. Capener v. Capener, 177 M 437, 582 P2d 326 (1978).

Postjudgment Powers of Court: A District Court has power to award necessary maintenance, child support, and suit money after judgment in a marital dissolution case during the pendency of appeal. To hold otherwise would leave a hiatus in the remedial power of the court that could cause unmeasured hardship and distress. State ex rel. Kaasa v. District Court, 177 M 547, 582 P2d 772 (1978).

Estoppel to Challenge Decree: Where husband had taken affirmative action to enforce the provisions of the divorce decree, he was estopped to challenge the validity of the award of "alimony" to his former wife. Englund v. Englund, 169 M 418, 547 P2d 841 (1976).

Change in Income Supports Reduction of Award: Although there was no abuse of discretion in original award of $500 per month alimony and child support, where husband's later earnings made it impossible for him to pay such amount, court properly reduced award to $250 per month. Grant v. Grant, 166 M 229, 531 P2d 1007 (1975).

Retroactive Modification of Alimony Payments: Section 21-139, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), was sufficiently broad to permit court to order modification of alimony payments effective as of date of application therefor as opposed to date of order. Movius v. Movius, 163 M 463, 517 P2d 884 (1974).

Only Future Alimony Payments to Be Modified: Trial court acted properly in ordering husband, who had stopped paying alimony because of alleged changes in financial standing, to pay back alimony in full, as modification of alimony applies only to future installments. Porter v. Porter, 155 M 451, 473 P2d 538 (1970).

SUPPORT

General

Increase of Maintenance Upon Cessation of Child Support Obligation Not Considered Modification: The District Court concluded that the wife was entitled to maintenance of $750 a month until the husband's child support obligation ceased, at which time the maintenance would increase to $1,250 a month for a total maintenance period of 8 years. The husband asserted that it was error to connect the maintenance award to child support and provide an automatic increase because the future increase was a modification of the maintenance award that required notice and findings of changed circumstances pursuant to this section. However, the husband did not offer a single case in which a maintenance award was reversed because the trial court considered child support in reaching its conclusion. Further, the award of increasing maintenance payments was one of the terms of the dissolution decree, not a subsequent modification of the terms of the decree that required notice and a showing of changed circumstances, so the award was affirmed. In re Marriage of Harkin, 2000 MT 105, 299 M 298, 999 P2d 969, 57 St. Rep. 422 (2000).

Equitable Action — Type of Fraud for Which Relief May Be Granted: A father was assessed back child support but claimed that he was entitled to a new trial on the issue because at the hearing, the mother had represented that the children had lived with her the entire time, when in fact, the children lived with their father for a period, which he claimed was fraud upon the court, entitling him to relief. Citing Brown v. Jensen, 231 M 340, 753 P2d 870, 45 St. Rep. 665 (1988), the Supreme Court noted that the type of fraud for which relief may be granted in an independent equitable action is extrinsic or collateral, rather than intrinsic fraud. Extrinsic fraud is an intentional act by the prevailing party that prevents the unsuccessful party from having a fair submission of the controversy. False or fraudulent representations, concealments, and perjured testimony by a party during court proceedings constitute only intrinsic fraud and do not rise to the level of fraud upon the court. In this case, the father presented testimony at the hearing rebutting the mother's representation of the living arrangements. Thus, the court was aware of the father's contention, so it could not be claimed that the mother acted fraudulently or that her representations were misleading or relied upon by the father to his prejudice. The father failed to demonstrate that the mother committed extrinsic or intrinsic fraud upon the court, and his motion for relief was properly denied. In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 295 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999). See also In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Failure to Pursue Retroactive Child Support Motion — Retroactive Application Within Discretion of District Court: The District Court retroactively increased child support payments to January 1997 based on an agreement between the parties, but the wife contended that the increase should have been retroactive to November 1995 when she filed the motion to modify. However, the wife neglected to prosecute the motion until December 1996, even though it was within her power to pursue the motion diligently. The fact that she failed to do so, even in light of purportedly dire financial straits, could not be blamed on the court or constitute a basis for determining an abuse of court discretion, nor was the husband's ability to pay increased support retroactive to an earlier date considered relevant. The District Court's retroactive increase to 1997 was within its discretion. In re Marriage of Pfennigs, 1999 MT 250, 296 M 242, 989 P2d 327, 56 St. Rep. 981 (1999).

Social Security Benefits as Credit Toward Child Support Obligation — Not Considered Retroactive Modification — Durbin Overruled: A credit may be granted to a parent for Social Security benefits received prior to a motion to modify as a credit against the noncustodial parent's child support obligation, but the credit does not constitute a retroactive modification of the original support order. The credit merely changes the source of the support payments. In re Marriage of Cowan, 279 M 491, 928 P2d 214, 53 St. Rep. 1250 (1996), overruling contrary holdings in In re Marriage of Durbin, 251 M 51, 823 P2d 243 (1991), and In re Marriage of Malquist, 266 M 447, 880 P2d 1357 (1994).

Modification of Child Support Installments Accruing After Actual Notice — Statute to Be Strictly Construed — No Basis for Application of Exception: When Kitty and Bernard divorced in 1983, they entered into a property settlement agreement that provided that neither would make child support payments to the other, although the three children of the parties were to live with Bernard. In 1987, the parties' oldest daughter went to live with Kitty, and in 1990, Bernard moved the District Court to modify the divorce decree and determine the child support obligations of both parties. The District Court found that Kitty had an obligation to make child support payments beginning in 1986. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred because this section provides only for prospective and not retroactive modification of the previous District Court order. Citing In re Marriage of Jensen, 223 M 434, 727 P2d 512 (1986), the Supreme Court noted that it has carved out an equitable exception for modifications by oral agreement of the parties, but that that exception did not apply in this case, and that the District Court gave no rationale for its determination of a retroactive child support obligation. In re Marriage of Widhalm/Miller, 279 M 97, 926 P2d 748, 53 St. Rep. 1067 (1996).

Modification of Support — Stipulation Between Parties Not Binding on Court — Credit for Children's Health Insurance Premiums — Effective Date of Modification — Calculation of Gross Income: In a case for modification of child support obligations, the father appealed a District Court order allowing assessed arrearages, including uncovered medical expenses, to be collected by the CSED. The court was not bound by a stipulation of the parties as to the amount of arrearages. The court should include the amount expended on the children's insurance coverage in the determination of the parties' child support obligations. A court may modify a decree regarding child support only as to installments accruing after the parties have been provided actual notice of the motion for modification. The court did not err in determining the mother's gross income when it held that the mother did not leave a federal job to escape support responsibilities. (See 1995 amendment.) In re Marriage of Kovash, 270 M 517, 893 P2d 860, 52 St. Rep. 280 (1995).

Reimbursed Employment Expenses Not Deducted From Gross Income for Child Support Calculation Purposes: In calculating child support using child support guidelines, the District Court properly refused to deduct reimbursed employment expenses from gross income of payor, which an administrative rule stated could not be deducted. In re Marriage of Murphy, 268 M 1, 885 P2d 440, 51 St. Rep. 1198 (1994).

Finding of Changed Circumstances Prerequisite to Determining Unconscionability: Clyatt argued that the lower court erred when it made a finding as to the lack of changed circumstances but did not make a finding as to the unconscionability of requiring him to continue unmodified support payments when he had voluntarily decreased his earnings. The Supreme Court held that a finding of changed circumstances must be made before a court may examine the issue of unconscionability. In re Marriage of Clyatt, 267 M 119, 882 P2d 503, 51 St. Rep. 997 (1994), following In re Marriage of Barnard, 264 M 103, 870 P2d 91, 51 St. Rep. 173 (1994), and followed in In re Marriage of Pearson, 1998 MT 236, 291 M 101, 965 P2d 268, 55 St. Rep. 992 (1998). See also In re Marriage of Brown, 283 M 269, 940 P2d 122, 54 St. Rep. 594 (1997), and In re Marriage of Jarussi, 1998 MT 272, 291 M 371, 968 P2d 720, 55 St. Rep. 1124 (1998).

Evidence Necessary to Support Variance in Living Expenses: George and Laurel were divorced in 1979. In 1989, George was ordered to increase his child support payments from $100 to $375 a month. In 1992, Laurel petitioned the District Court to increase George's child support payments to $683.48, and after two hearings, the District Court increased the payments to $616.62 a month. George contends that the District Court erred in ignoring claims he made for variances allowed by ARM 46.30.1543. Citing Marriage of Mitchell, 229 M 242, 746 P2d 598 (1987), the Supreme Court held that a party alleging that a variance in living expenses is due must submit competent evidence to prove that the amount of support should be reduced. Here, notwithstanding that two hearings were held, there was nothing in the file to support a change except the affidavits from George and Laurel. The District Court relied upon the information in George's affidavit to set the amount of support. There was therefore no abuse of discretion by the District Court. In re Marriage of Platt, 267 M 38, 881 P2d 634, 51 St. Rep. 926 (1994).

Social Security Payment to Daughter Not Credited to Medical Bill Arrearages — Only Prospective Credit to Be Given: After Dale and Sandy's marriage was dissolved, their minor child Sara received a lump-sum Social Security payment because of Dale's disability. Dale then moved for modification of the dissolution decree, asking that he be relieved of his obligation, resulting from the original decree, to pay Sara's medical bills. The District Court relieved Dale of one-half of his responsibility incurred after notice of his motion and did not credit the Social Security payment toward arrearages. Citing In re Marriage of Durbin, 251 M 51, 823 P2d 243 (1991), the Supreme Court held that under subsection (1) of this section, Dale's obligation could be modified only prospectively from the date that Dale gave notice of his motion to modify; therefore, the Social Security payments could not be credited toward arrearages. (See 1995 amendment.) In re Marriage of Malquist, 266 M 447, 880 P2d 1357, 51 St. Rep. 914 (1994), overruled, inasmuch as a credit may be granted to a parent for Social Security benefits received prior to a motion to modify as a credit against the noncustodial parent's child support obligation without constituting a retroactive modification of the original support order, in In re Marriage of Cowan, 279 M 491, 928 P2d 214, 53 St. Rep. 1250 (1996).

Refusal to Grant Retroactive Support Based on Inapplicable Stipulation — Remand: It was an abuse of District Court discretion to refuse to modify child support retroactive to the date the petition for modification was filed when the decision was based on a prior stipulation between the parties that did not cover payments possibly owing during a period of time not addressed by the stipulation. The case was remanded for a finding of whether support was owing based on the custodial arrangements that existed at the various times subsequent to the petition. In re Marriage of Hill, 265 M 52, 874 P2d 705, 51 St. Rep. 396 (1994).

Application of Wrong Support Guidelines Irrelevant When Court Finds No Grounds for Modification: Janet Barnard sought an increase in child support on the basis that her ex-husband's income had greatly increased. The District Court stated that it would use the support guidelines in effect when the motion was filed. The lower court subsequently ruled that there was no showing that the current amount of support was insufficient and that increased income alone was not grounds for modification. The Supreme Court held that the lower court should have used the guidelines in effect at the time that it rendered its decision, but the error was harmless since the District Court had properly found that no grounds existed for modifying the amount of support. In re Marriage of Barnard, 264 M 103, 870 P2d 91, 51 St. Rep. 173 (1994). For a discussion of the correct standard of review, see In re Marriage of Kovash, 270 M 517, 893 P2d 860, 52 St. Rep. 280 (1995).

Failure to Provide Child Support for College Education — Continuing Jurisdiction Under Uniform Parentage Act: Mother contended that the District Court erred in failing to order father to pay child support for the child's college education, maintaining that the court could not later modify support to extend beyond the child's emancipation because it was not provided in an original decree. However, the case was brought under the Uniform Parentage Act; therefore, 40-6-118 rather than this section applies. Under 40-6-118, the court retains jurisdiction to modify its initial support order to provide for the child's educational needs, and failure to do so as part of the initial order was not error. In re Paternity of W.L., 259 M 187, 855 P2d 521, 50 St. Rep. 751 (1993), distinguishing Torma v. Torma, 198 M 161, 645 P2d 395 (1982). For the decision on remand, see In re Paternity of W.L., 270 M 263, 893 P2d 332, 52 St. Rep. 301 (1995).

No Evidence of Modification of Original Decree — No Modification of Support Obligation: Absent evidence that either party ever sought modification of the original divorce decree by motion under this section or that the original order was ever modified by court order, the original support obligation was considered unmodified and enforceable. In re Marriage of Petranek, 255 M 458, 843 P2d 784, 49 St. Rep. 1107 (1992).

Failure to Apportion Support Upon Emancipation of Child — No Abuse of Discretion: Parent maintained District Court error in failing to apportion support between two minor children when one of them reached the age of majority and in not allowing termination of support without having to go through the expense of a motion, but cited no authority for that proposition. Absent a provision in the decree as to when support terminates, this section sets out the proper procedure for petitioning for modification of support. The court did not abuse its discretion in failing to apportion child support. In re Marriage of Sacry, 253 M 378, 833 P2d 1035, 49 St. Rep. 452 (1992).

Social Security Payment to Children to Be Credited Toward Child Support Obligation Accruing After Notice for Modification: When the parties were divorced, the District Court awarded joint custody, awarded primary physical custody to the mother, awarded the mother and father one tax deduction apiece for the children, and required the father to pay child support of $150 per month per child. Later the same year, the father lost his eyesight in a work-related accident and eventually received a lump-sum settlement of $373,557, monthly payments of $3,788 for 30 years, disability insurance payments, and social security benefits. When the mother began receiving social security benefits of $174 per month per child as a result of the accident, the father stopped paying child support. The District Court denied both parties' motions for modification of the child support decree. The Supreme Court held that the social security payments were to be credited toward the father's child support obligation only from the time the mother received notice of the motion for modification of the child support decree. To this extent, the Supreme Court overruled Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094 (1981), and In re Marriage of Gallant, 241 M 363, 786 P2d 1193 (1990). In re Marriage of Durbin, 251 M 51, 823 P2d 243, 48 St. Rep. 1142 (1991), followed in In re Marriage of Malquist, 266 M 447, 880 P2d 1357, 51 St. Rep. 914 (1994), and overruled, inasmuch as a credit may be granted to a parent for Social Security benefits received prior to a motion to modify as a credit against the noncustodial parent's child support obligation without constituting a retroactive modification of the original support order, in In re Marriage of Cowan, 279 M 491, 928 P2d 214, 53 St. Rep. 1250 (1996). For a discussion of the correct standard of review, see In re Marriage of Kovash, 270 M 517, 893 P2d 860, 52 St. Rep. 280 (1995).

Support After Graduation or Emancipation as Exception: Any provision for child support following the child's emancipation or graduation from high school is the exception, not the norm. In re Marriage of Fronk v. Wilson, 250 M 291, 819 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 936 (1991).

No Mutual Agreement to Modify Support: The husband argued that the lower court should have reduced his support obligation retroactively. He stated that it was his impression that if he stayed away from the children, he would owe no support. The Supreme Court held that there was insufficient evidence to show that the parties had mutually agreed to reduce the support obligation. In re Marriage of Crittendon, 247 M 322, 806 P2d 541, 48 St. Rep. 218 (1991).

Statute of Limitations to Run From Date Each Support Payment Due: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court adopted the rule that each monthly support obligation constitutes a judgment and that the 10-year statute of limitations for judgments begins to run the month the payment becomes due. In re Marriage of Crittendon, 247 M 322, 806 P2d 541, 48 St. Rep. 218 (1991), followed in Willoughby v. Loomis, 264 M 44, 869 P2d 271, 51 St. Rep. 138 (1994), and Emery v. St., 286 M 376, 950 P2d 764, 54 St. Rep. 1454 (1997).

Applicability of Uniform Guidelines to Support Payable "Monthly": A modified support order provided that payments be made "for each full month that the children are in the custody of the Respondent". Petitioner argued that the "full month" restriction was unworkable and unsupported by the Uniform Child Support Guidelines because the children could stay with one parent for 29 days but not receive support because that would not constitute a full month. The Supreme Court found literal interpretation of the order unnecessary because under the guidelines, payments are determined monthly or "per month". No guidelines exist for prorating payments when a child lives with one parent for less than a full month. In re Marriage of Ferguson, 246 M 344, 805 P2d 1334, 47 St. Rep. 2142 (1990).

Support Continuing Past Emancipation: The mother obtained a default divorce decree ordering the father to pay child support until the child reached age 22 if the child was enrolled full time in education following high school. The father argued that the support obligation ended upon his daughter's marriage. The Supreme Court held that the decree specified that the obligation extended past the age of majority if the child was enrolled in school and that without express language, the obligation was not terminated by the child's emancipation. In re Marriage of Hewitt, 242 M 389, 791 P2d 444, 47 St. Rep. 822 (1990).

Obtaining Social Security Benefits Not Compliance With Support Obligation: The father argued that his obtaining social security benefits for the parties' child constituted substantial compliance with his support obligation. The Supreme Court held that obtaining the benefits required no expenditure by the father that constituted substantial compliance with the spirit and intent of the decree. In re Marriage of Gallant, 241 M 363, 786 P2d 1193, 47 St. Rep. 354 (1990), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Durbin, 251 M 51, 823 P2d 243, 48 St. Rep. 1142 (1991).

Father's Parental Rights Terminated Despite Financial Difficulties: The natural father contended that his parental rights should not be terminated against his will for failure to pay support during a 1-year period. He argued that for 4 months of that time, he was unable to earn any money because he had to close his business in Washington and return to the state to defend against the nonsupport criminal action initiated by the State of Montana. The Supreme Court affirmed the termination, holding that the father had made no attempt to earn enough to meet his obligations and did not move to have the support amount modified. In re Adoption of R.M., 241 M 111, 785 P2d 709, 47 St. Rep. 124 (1990).

Father Not Required to Pay Support Due to Equity Considerations: The mother sought 118 months of back child support. After the parties divorced, they resumed living together and remained together for approximately 6 years and had two additional children. The parties modified the original decree in writing, and the Supreme Court found that the children had lived with their father for one-half of the time and were supported by him during that period. The court ruled that when the parties had altered the original custody arrangements, equity functions to reconcile reasonable child support with actual residential custody. The father was not obligated to pay any back child support. In re Marriage of Guckeen, 240 M 136, 782 P2d 1284, 46 St. Rep. 2002 (1989).

Mutual Failure to File Support Brief and Response Pleading — Technical Errors Cured by Oral Argument: Husband pointed out that wife filed no pleading in response to his motion to void her divorce decree and no brief in support of her motion for modification of child support and that thus the Montana Uniform District Court Rules dictated his motion should be deemed "well-taken" and hers deemed "without merit". However, wife did file an affidavit in support of her motion, and that is all husband filed in support of his motion. Neither party responded to the other's motion. The lower court held oral argument on both motions, thus giving each party a chance to argue in support of its motion and against the other's. This was a wise course, and the Supreme Court would not overturn the decision on technical grounds. In re Marriage of Appleton, 234 M 345, 763 P2d 658, 45 St. Rep. 1959 (1988).

Retroactive Support Improper When Not Requested in Pleadings: In a proceeding for an increase in child support, the lower court could not award wife retroactive child support when she did not seek it in her pleadings. In re Marriage of Appleton, 234 M 345, 763 P2d 658, 45 St. Rep. 1959 (1988).

Factors in Noncustodial Parent's Ability to Pay Support: Factors to be considered when deciding whether a noncustodial parent is able to contribute to the support of a minor child include: (1) the parent's ability to earn an income; (2) the parent's willingness to earn an income and support his child; (3) availability of jobs; and (4) the parent's use of his funds to provide himself only with the bare necessities of life prior to providing support for his child. The factors apply as well to consideration of a modification of support. In re Marriage of Callahan, 233 M 465, 762 P2d 205, 45 St. Rep. 1639 (1988), following In re Adoption of K.L.J.K., 224 M 418, 730 P2d 1135, 43 St. Rep. 2297 (1986).

Guidelines Clarified — Minimum Support Per Child Per Month: While the child support guidelines suggest that no support can be set at less than $50 per month, the Supreme Court clarified that the amount should be $50 per month per child. In re Marriage of Callahan, 233 M 465, 762 P2d 205, 45 St. Rep. 1639 (1988).

Children's Petition for Future Support Not Barred by Equitable Estoppel: Parents entered a stipulation relieving father of any future duty to support his children. Later, the children petitioned for support. The children were not parties to the parents' stipulation. Children are the beneficiaries of child support. It was undisputed that the requested support was necessary and that the father had the ability to contribute what the mother could not. The lower court granted the petition for future support. Under these circumstances, the petition was not barred by equitable estoppel. In re Support of Krug, 231 M 78, 751 P2d 171, 45 St. Rep. 446 (1988), distinguishing State of Wash. ex rel. Blakeslee v. Horton, 222 M 351, 722 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 1321 (1986), In re Marriage of Cook, 223 M 293, 725 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 1732 (1986), and In re Marriage of Jensen, 223 M 434, 727 P2d 512, 43 St. Rep. 1891 (1986). However, see In re Marriage of Shorten, 1998 MT 267, 291 M 317, 967 P2d 797, 55 St. Rep. 1108 (1998), distinguishing Cook and Jensen regarding application of the elements of equitable estoppel in an action for back-due child support.

Failure to Order Past Support — Absence of Past Contact: The District Court did not err in failing to award support not paid for 7 years in light of a complete absence of contact between the parent and children during that period. The court could have restored the monetary support that should have been paid but could not restore missed visitation. Additionally, there was no evidence the children required payment of past support. In re Support of Krug, 231 M 78, 751 P2d 171, 45 St. Rep. 446 (1988).

Modification of Future Support Payments — Not Barred by Collateral Estoppel: Collateral estoppel bars relitigation of issues on which a final judgment has been entered in a different cause of action. Under this section, future support installments may be modified; therefore, they are not final judgments for purposes of collateral estoppel. In re Support of Krug, 231 M 78, 751 P2d 171, 45 St. Rep. 446 (1988).

Use of Net Rather Than Gross Income in Applying Carlson Formula: The District Court used gross rather than net income as a factor in the Carlson formula for figuring child support. The Supreme Court held that the amounts used should be net amounts; however, since the figures finally established were substantially less than what the formula could have obliged the parties to pay, there was no error. In re Marriage of Revious, 226 M 304, 735 P2d 301, 44 St. Rep. 674 (1987).

Child Support for Emancipated Child: This section clearly empowers the trial court to provide that support of a child may be extended beyond the age of emancipation. In re Marriage of Bowman, 226 M 99, 734 P2d 197, 44 St. Rep. 488 (1987), distinguished in In re Marriage of McFate, 239 M 492, 781 P2d 759, 46 St. Rep. 1858 (1989).

Retroactive Award of Child Support Payments Proper: While modification of child support applies to existing support payments, the court has jurisdiction to award child support payments retroactive to the time of the separation of the parties. In re Marriage of Shirilla, 225 M 106, 732 P2d 397, 44 St. Rep. 75 (1987).

No Evidence of Actual Earning Capability — Error in Application of Formula: In remanding, the Supreme Court ruled that the District Court erred in applying the algebraic formula set out in In re Marriage of Carlson, 214 M 209, 693 P2d 496, 41 St. Rep. 2419 (1984), in determining the respective contributions of each party to child support because there was no evidence of wife's actual earning capability. Absent substantial credible evidence of actual earning, the capability formula could not be applied. In re Marriage of Goodman, 222 M 446, 723 P2d 219, 43 St. Rep. 1410 (1986).

Marital Assets Not Considered Child Support — Modification of Payments: Property that was clearly denominated personal property in a division of marital assets may not later be claimed for inclusion as child support simply because it is used primarily for a child. Modification of payments that are part of a property settlement agreement is governed by Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), rather than the rules for modification of support in 40-4-208. In re Marriage of Conklin/Clark, 220 M 130, 716 P2d 629, 43 St. Rep. 611 (1986).

Deferred Payment Plan for Delinquent Payments — Court Error — Attorney Fees: The District Court erred by adopting a deferred payment plan for the payment of unpaid and delinquent child support without reference to contempt. Modification of a judgment for accrued payments could not be done without the court finding husband in contempt. To hold otherwise would be to take away wife's right to levy execution for accrued payments if property could be found in possession of husband that could be applied to the arrearages. The lower court also erred in denying wife's costs and attorney fees incurred in enforcing judgments for accrued child support obligation. In re Marriage of Bordner, 220 M 339, 715 P2d 436, 43 St. Rep. 417 (1986).

Parent Not to Unilaterally Declare Emancipation of Child — Terminate Support: Husband petitioned District Court to excuse support arrearages on grounds minor child was emancipated. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court's finding that petitioner's child support obligation was terminated. The court noted that the obligated parent may not unilaterally declare the child emancipated and terminate support. The question of whether a child is emancipated is a question of fact to be determined by the court. If emancipation can be established, a parent generally has no further duty to support the child. Prior to the age of 18, however, there is a presumption against the emancipation of a child, and the burden of establishing emancipation is on the party asserting it. The child in this case was adjudicated a youth in need of care. Parents have a continuing duty of support for a youth in need of care which runs contrary to the concept of emancipation. A decree may be modified to terminate support because of the emancipation of a child only as to installments accruing after the motion. In re Marriage of Bordner, 220 M 339, 715 P2d 436, 43 St. Rep. 417 (1986).

Ordering Review of Child Support After Four Years: It was not an abuse of discretion to make the child support order subject to review after 4 years. In re Marriage of Williams, 220 M 232, 714 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 319 (1986).

Interpretation of Decree Provision on Termination of Support Obligation: In the decree of dissolution, the paragraph immediately following the paragraph concerning payment of child support provided that "Upon termination of the child support obligation" the appellant must pay the respondent maintenance until her death or remarriage. A dispute arose over the meaning of "termination of the child support obligation". The Supreme Court held that the District Court's ruling that the obligation terminated when the appellant stopped making monthly child support payments, rather than when the youngest child turned 18, was not clearly erroneous. In re Marriage of Jones, 218 M 441, 709 P2d 158, 42 St. Rep. 1722 (1985).

Written Consent to Modification of Support Decree — When Not Relevant: The absence of written consent to modification of a support decree, as required under this section, is not relevant in determining whether support in any form has been validly paid and consequently whether parental consent for adoption is required under 40-8-111 (now repealed). In re Adoption of E.S.R., 218 M 118, 706 P2d 132, 42 St. Rep. 1448 (1985).

Effective Date of Modification: Section 40-4-208 leaves the effective date for a modification with the discretion of the court, and the District Court did not err in making the modification effective later than the date on which the father filed his motion for modification. In re Support of Rockman, 217 M 498, 705 P2d 590, 42 St. Rep. 1323 (1985), followed in In re Support of Krug, 231 M 78, 751 P2d 171, 45 St. Rep. 446 (1988).

Retroactive Modification of Child Support Not Allowed: Father and mother filed a stipulation with the court that the father would pay monthly child support. Several months later, the father applied for and was allowed to have the children live with him during the summer months. On their return to the mother at the end of the summer, the father sought to modify the stipulation retroactively so as not to have to pay back support for the time he had the children with him. A decree may be modified as to support only as to installments accruing subsequent to the motion for modification. In re Marriage of Rolfe, 216 M 39, 699 P2d 79, 42 St. Rep. 623 (1985).

Notice of Trial Issues — Notice Through Interrogatories: Father petitioning for change of child custody had notice that mother would raise an issue as to increased child support where his interrogatories to her involved questions as to the income and expenses of mother and her new husband. Her failure to follow District Court's rule as to financial affidavits for support cases would not be considered on appeal because it was being raised for the first time, particularly when the issue involved adherence to the District Court's own rule. In re Custody of Holm, 215 M 413, 698 P2d 414, 42 St. Rep. 504 (1985).

Cost-of-Living Increases Attributable to Support Increase — Date of Amended Award Is Base Month: Wife was granted a modification of child support, but husband used the date of modification as the base month for calculating the cost-of-living increase, rather than the original date the support commenced. A cost-of-living escalation clause contained in a dissolution decree is a provision "relating to maintenance or support" and, as such, is subject to modification under the terms of this section. However, to the extent that cost-of-living increases are attributable to the court-ordered increase in support payments, the date of the amended award must be used as the base month of calculation. The use of the amended amount of support in the original calculation of the trial court, which used the date of the initial decree, would create an impermissible retroactive modification of support. In re Marriage of Richardson, 214 M 353, 693 P2d 524, 42 St. Rep. 16 (1985).

Algebraic Formula to Compute Child Support: After dissolution of his marriage, husband sought and received a reduction in his child support amount based primarily on the fact that he was unemployed at the time he petitioned for a reduction. The Supreme Court held that the trial court erred in not considering all the requisite factors in child support modification, including whether the husband is capable of working. As a guideline to computing support, the Supreme Court offered an algebraic formula. The theory of the formula is that the financial needs of the child should be paid by both parents in proportion to their earning capacity. (See 1989 amendment notes for 40-4-204.) In re Marriage of Carlson, 214 M 209, 693 P2d 496, 41 St. Rep. 2419 (1984). See also Hansen v. Jurgens, 222 M 345, 722 P2d 1151, 43 St. Rep. 1316 (1986).

Diligent Effort to Comply With Decree — No Contempt: The parties were divorced in 1976. A continuous visitation-support battle was waged afterward. The husband fell 16 months behind in his child-support payments. The wife filed an affidavit and application for an order requiring payment of the arrearage. Both parties testified. The court found that because of the husband's physical and mental condition he was unable to make all support payments required. He had made 13 monthly payments in the prior 2 years. The court found that the husband was not in contempt as he had made a diligent effort to comply with the support order. On appeal, the Supreme Court found there was substantial evidence to support the District Court's decision. In re Marriage of Smith, 214 M 66, 692 P2d 1221, 41 St. Rep. 2325 (1984).

Requirement of Additional Findings for Enforcement of Arrearages as Constituting Unlawful Modification of Prior Award: Where the State brought an action to enforce child support payments and the District Court found the defendant to be in arrears but held that the defendant was unable to make the payments and that "until such time no further action will be taken" and where this language was subsequently determined by another District Court to require a hearing to determine arrearages, the Supreme Court held that the action by the second District Court interpreting the order of the first District Court was an unlawful modification of the first court's judgment. The practical effect of the second order was to defer the State's right to levy upon the bank account of the defendant for accrued child support payments. This constituted a retroactive modification of the original order. Dept. of Revenue v. Dawson, 207 M 417, 674 P2d 1091, 41 St. Rep. 46 (1984).

No Basis for Review:

Where the District Court denied the wife's petition for modification of a child support decree without making findings on any of the factors set forth in 40-4-208 but merely adopted the father's proposed findings and conclusions verbatim that he could not pay more, there was no basis for review. The Supreme Court remanded for proper findings. In re Marriage of West, 203 M 469, 661 P2d 1289, 40 St. Rep. 573 (1983).

On remand, neither the parties in their evidence nor the court in its findings and conclusions properly focused on the financial needs of the children. When the parties failed to enter sufficient evidence on the needs of the children, the trial court should have inquired further into that issue. A determination of the financial needs of the children is essential when considering a petition for modification of child support. The Supreme Court remanded the case for the second time for proper findings. In re Marriage of West, 212 M 374, 692 P2d 1213, 41 St. Rep. 1803 (1984).

Inflation Factor: In a petition to increase child support payments, the District Court used inflation as a factor to find an increased need for support. On appeal, the husband contended that this was error and that no evidence of inflation's effects on him had been presented. On appeal, the Supreme Court found no merit in the argument, saying, "Today inflation is not open to reasonable dispute." Reynolds v. Reynolds, 203 M 97, 660 P2d 90, 40 St. Rep. 321 (1983).

Present Spouse's Income — Not Factor in Ability to Pay: The parties were married in 1961, and the marriage was dissolved in 1979. In 1982, the wife petitioned for an increase in support payments. The District Court considered many factors and granted the increase. One of the factors considered was the income of the husband's present spouse. The husband contended that Duffey v. Duffey, 193 M 241, 631 P2d 697, 38 St. Rep. 1105 (1981), precluded the consideration of the husband's present spouse in determining the husband's increased ability to pay child support. The Supreme Court agreed but distinguished Duffey, which relied solely on the income of the husband's spouse, from this case where it was only one factor considered and was mentioned simply to indicate remarriage was not materially affecting the husband's ability to pay increased support. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 203 M 97, 660 P2d 90, 40 St. Rep. 321 (1983).

Exact Words of Statute Not Required in Findings and Conclusions: In a proceeding to modify the child support provisions of a divorce decree, the fact that the exact words of subsection (2)(b) do not appear in the trial court's findings and conclusions is of no consequence. Rather, the findings must not be clearly erroneous and must be based on the standards of subsection (2)(b). In re Marriage of Baer, 199 M 21, 647 P2d 835, 39 St. Rep. 1178 (1982), distinguished in In re Marriage of Jarussi, 1998 MT 272, 291 M 371, 968 P2d 720, 55 St. Rep. 1124 (1998).

Interest on Child Support Arrearage: A noncustodial father decreased his child support payments by one-half when one of his two children joined the Navy at the age of 17. The District Court properly required the continuation of the entire monthly payment until the second child attained majority but improperly failed to order interest on the child support arrearage. Interest is automatically collectible by the judgment creditor spouse on past due support payments, absent contrary provision in a dissolution decree. Torma v. Torma, 198 M 161, 645 P2d 395, 39 St. Rep. 839 (1982), followed in In re Marriage of Callahan, 233 M 465, 762 P2d 205, 45 St. Rep. 1639 (1988), and In re Marriage of Gingerich/Stroop, 269 M 161, 887 P2d 714, 51 St. Rep. 1417 (1994).

Termination of Support to Adult Children:
A noncustodial father decreased his child support payments by one-half when one of his two children joined the Navy at the age of 17. In a contempt proceeding instituted by the custodial mother 2 years later, the District Court improperly directed the father to pay the balance of payments owing, and to continue the payments until the second child was 22 years of age if she attended college. Child support payments need not be made for adult or emancipated children unless the parents agree in writing or the dissolution decree expressly so provides. Torma v. Torma, 198 M 161, 645 P2d 395, 39 St. Rep. 839 (1982).

In appealing an order amending a decree on dissolution of her marriage, the wife contended that the termination of support for two adult daughters was error. A parent's legal obligation terminates when the child becomes an adult. Parties could agree in writing or expressly provide in a decree of dissolution for termination of child support at an agreed-upon age or time. Because there was no such agreement here and the daughters were 18 and 19 at the time of the original decree, the District Court was merely conforming its original decree to the law cited above. That part of the modifying order was affirmed. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981), following Chrestenson v. Chrestenson, 180 M 96, 589 P2d 148 (1979). See also In re Marriage of McFate, 239 M 492, 781 P2d 759, 46 St. Rep. 1858 (1989).

Undivided Monthly Sum for Two Children — Effect of Emancipation of One Child: Pursuant to a dissolution decree, a noncustodial father was "ordered to pay for the support of the two minor children in the sum of $125.00 per month . . .". Upon the emancipation of one of the children, the father was not entitled to unilaterally reduce the payments by one-half. It became his burden to make such a showing as would entitle him to be relieved of all or a part of such obligation. Torma v. Torma, 198 M 161, 645 P2d 395, 39 St. Rep. 839 (1982).

Motion to Dismiss — Appeal of Denial of Motion: After the plaintiff had rested her case in an action to increase the amount of child support, the defendant made a motion under Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P., for dismissal upon the ground that the plaintiff failed to make a showing of changed circumstances so substantial and continuing as to make the terms of the child support previously granted unconscionable. The motion was denied, and the defendant then presented his case. By proceeding to offer evidence, the defendant waived any right of appeal as to the denial of his motion to dismiss. If the defendant wished to challenge the decision, his avenue for doing so was to refuse to offer evidence, accept a judgment for plaintiff, and appeal it on the ground that plaintiff's evidence was insufficient. Nicolai v. Nicolai, 193 M 203, 631 P2d 300, 38 St. Rep. 1100 (1981).

Voluntary Change in Circumstances — Petition to Modify Support: Although a reduction in ability of a supporting parent to pay support brought about through a voluntary change in circumstances is not, in itself, sufficient to mandate a modification of support, neither are self-imposed changes reasons never to modify support provisions in a dissolution decree. Courts, in considering whether to modify a support provision, must consider the nature and extent of the changes experienced by the petitioning party and the reasons for the changes. Where respondent changed his job and remarried, he did not show that these changes substantially altered his ability to pay, and thus the prior support order may not be considered unconscionable. Rome v. Rome, 190 M 495, 621 P2d 1090, 38 St. Rep. 50 (1981), followed in In re Marriage of Jacobson, 228 M 458, 743 P2d 1025, 44 St. Rep. 1678 (1987), and In re Marriage of Clyatt, 267 M 119, 882 P2d 503, 51 St. Rep. 997 (1994).

Findings Showing Changed Circumstances Required: Since this section allows modification of child support payments only on a showing of changed circumstances so substantial and continuing as to make the terms unconscionable, it is essential that the District Court issue findings to that effect so that the decision is reviewable upon appeal. The changed circumstances may not be speculative, future, or possible conditions. Gall v. Gall, 187 M 17, 608 P2d 496 (1980), followed in In re Marriage of Stroop, 269 M 161, 887 P2d 714, 51 St. Rep. 1417 (1994), and distinguished, with regard to a lack of specific evidence of changed economic circumstances or actual increased need, in In re Marriage of Gingerich/Stroop, 269 M 161, 887 P2d 714, 51 St. Rep. 1417 (1994). See also Nicolai v. Nicolai, 193 M 203, 631 P2d 300, 38 St. Rep. 1100 (1981), and In re Marriage of Cox, 266 M 67, 878 P2d 903, 51 St. Rep. 672 (1994).

Deferred Payment Plan for Delinquent Support Payments as Modification of Judgment for Accrued Payments: The District Court has jurisdiction in contempt proceedings for the purpose of enforcing a support money decree, to find the defaulting party in contempt and to stay execution of punishment upon the condition that the defaulting party purge himself by making payments according to a schedule established by the court. However, the adoption of a deferred schedule, without reference to contempt, constitutes a modification of judgment for accrued payments, which is not permitted under 40-4-208. Williams v. Budke, 186 M 70, 606 P2d 515 (1980). See also In re Marriage of Uphus, 221 M 347, 720 P2d 231, 43 St. Rep. 882 (1986).

Terms Concerning Home as Child Support — Modification: A property settlement provided that the family home be sold after the second youngest child graduated from high school. The trial court modified this to allow the wife and the youngest child to remain in the home until that child graduated from high school. The home was an integral part of the child support provisions so long as the second child was still in high school. There is no reason why the availability of the home to the wife and third child should become any less important as a term of child support once the second child has graduated from high school. Consequently, the terms concerning the home were part of the child support provision and as such may be modified by further order. Phennicie v. Phennicie, 185 M 120, 604 P2d 787 (1979).

Effect of Not Following Procedure Strictly: Even though procedure requirements were not strictly followed, this alone did not outweigh the "best interest of the child" standard. Lehman v. Billman, 178 M 367, 584 P2d 662 (1978).

Survival of Child Support Obligation: District Court may make child support obligation a continuing one that survives the father's death and is enforceable against his estate. Hornung v. Estate of Lagerquist, 155 M 412, 473 P2d 541 (1970).

Doctrine of "Collateral Estoppel" Barring Wife's Suit on Prior Contractual Child Support Provision: Where District Court had twice reduced child support payments requested by husband with wife appearing by counsel, she was estopped to contend at subsequent litigation that a greater amount was due under separation agreement recognized by divorce decree as collateral estoppel bars the same parties from relitigating issues which were decided with respect to a different cause of action. Gessell v. Jones, 149 M 418, 427 P2d 295 (1967).

Modification Proper

Order Dismissing Case Without Prejudice Not Considered Modification of Original Child Support Order — Laches and Equitable Estoppel Inapplicable to Child Support Enforcement Proceeding: The parties' Canadian divorce decree provided that the husband was not liable to pay child support. Because of changed financial circumstances not contemplated by the parties at the time of divorce, the mother later petitioned for modification of the decree to include child support. Relying on Willick v. Willick, 173 N.R. 321 (1984), a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, the divorce court noted that separation agreements and divorce judgments are not absolute bars to an order of support when there is a material change in circumstances. The Canadian court reassessed the needs of the children and ordered the father to pay $250 a month for each child. The mother sought enforcement of the order in Hawaii, where the father resided. A Hawaiian hearings officer dismissed the case without prejudice and with little comment. The mother later sought enforcement in Montana, where an administrative law judge held that the Hawaiian order did not modify the Canadian support order and ordered payment of back child support. The District Court subsequently reversed the order of the administrative law judge and held that because the Hawaiian order had nullified the Canadian support order, no current, back, or future support was owed. On appeal, the Montana Supreme Court held that the effect of the Hawaiian dismissal order was not a complete modification of the original support order, did not constitute any final decision on the part of the State of Hawaii, and was void. Dismissal of the case without prejudice did not act as a bar to a further suit on the same action, and the parties were free to refile an action at any time. Further, the doctrines of laches and equitable estoppel do not apply to recovery of child support arrears. If the court or custodian do not promptly proceed to seek compliance with a child support order, the person who chooses not to make support payments is not to profit or benefit thereby, and the rights of the children, as interested and affected parties, are to be served and protected. In re Support Obligation of Schmitz v. Engstrom, 2000 MT 275, 302 M 121, 13 P3d 38, 57 St. Rep. 1152 (2000). See also Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 190 M 66, 618 P2d 867 (1980).

Retroactive Revision of Temporary Child Support Order: When the parties separated, the District Court entered a temporary child support order directing the husband to pay $300 a month in spousal maintenance and $200 a month for each child in support. That temporary order was later modified to require the husband to pay a total of $800 a month in temporary maintenance and support. The final decree directed the husband to pay child support of $190 a month for each child, retroactive to the time of separation, and did not award any spousal maintenance. The wife alleged error in the retroactive modification of support, arguing that there was no change in circumstances that would allow a downward modification. The Supreme Court affirmed the modification, noting that the District Court was revising a temporary order, not modifying a final decree as specified in subsection (1) of this section. It is clearly within the District Court's authority to make the maintenance and support awards retroactive (see In re Marriage of Wersland, 249 M 169, 814 P2d 991 (1991)), and the revision of the order did not constitute an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Stoneman, 2000 MT 274, 302 M 107, 14 P3d 12, 57 St. Rep. 1145 (2000).

Failure to Submit Available Evidence Precluding Setting Aside of Judgment: At a 1995 hearing on child support, a father was defiantly uncooperative in providing documentation of any kind regarding his finances, assets, the provision of insurance for the children, or past child support payments. At a 1998 hearing on suspension of his driver's, hunting and fishing, and electrician's licenses, he claimed that he should be allowed to present the evidence that he refused to provide earlier. The District Court declined to reopen the 1995 hearing, and the Supreme Court affirmed. If there was anything that prevented the father from a fair submission of the controversy, it was his own defiance of the justice system. His failure to avail himself of the opportunity to present the appropriate information in 1995 and his desire to retroactively argue a factual issue in the case were not sufficient reasons to justify setting aside the judgment. His motion for a new trial was properly denied, and in the interests of finality of litigation, the Supreme Court declined to upset the judgment. In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999). See also Karlen v. Evans, 276 M 181, 915 P2d 232, 53 St. Rep. 337 (1996).

Failure to Demonstrate Changed Circumstances — Modification of Support Properly Denied: The mother identified four factors that she claimed evidenced changed circumstances warranting modification of child support: (1) the father significantly decreased visitation so that the mother had sole financial responsibility for the children's care; (2) the mother was forced to liquidate the bulk of her assets received in the marital property dissolution, resulting in insufficient funds to care for the children; (3) the father earned more income than he reported; and (4) because of the mother's financial situation and the father's increased annual income, the children's health insurance premiums, deductibles, and uncovered sums should be allocated proportionately based on a ratio of the parties' annual incomes. The District Court examined each factor supporting the mother's claim of changed circumstances and dismissed each claim as not credible. Giving due regard to the District Court's opportunity to judge the credibility of witnesses, the Supreme Court affirmed the decision that the mother failed to meet the burden of demonstrating substantial and continuing changed circumstances. In re Marriage of Pearson, 1998 MT 236, 291 M 101, 965 P2d 268, 55 St. Rep. 992 (1998).

Failure to Include Life Insurance Allegation in Initial Pleading — Failure to Address Issue Not Error: The mother testified at trial that the father failed to maintain or provide proof of life insurance coverage for the benefit of the children, although the decree did not require the father to maintain life insurance but only to name the children as beneficiaries to any life insurance policy that he might have. However, the mother failed to include any findings or conclusions pertaining to life insurance in her proposed findings and conclusions submitted to the court. It is fundamentally unfair to fault the trial court for failing to rule correctly on an issue that it was never given an opportunity to consider, so the trial court was entitled to treat the life insurance allegation as a nonissue. In re Marriage of Pearson, 1998 MT 236, 291 M 101, 965 P2d 268, 55 St. Rep. 992 (1998). See also Day v. Payne, 280 M 273, 929 P2d 864 (1996).

Increased Child Support Not Substitute for Debt Barred by Bankruptcy Discharge: After Debra and Kenneth were divorced, Kenneth filed a bankruptcy petition, and certain debts for which he was responsible were discharged. Debra later moved for increased child support and maintenance. The District Court increased the child support award but denied the request for maintenance. Kenneth argued that the increased support was ordered in place of his payment of a debt on a second mortgage discharged in bankruptcy that Debra was then required to pay. The Supreme Court held that although there was substantial credible evidence supporting the increased support award, the District Court did not abrogate the benefit received by Kenneth from his discharge in bankruptcy by increasing the amount of child support that he was required to pay. In re Marriage of Craib & Rhodes, 266 M 483, 880 P2d 1379, 51 St. Rep. 937 (1994).

Child Support Obligation Accrues During Incarceration — Denial of Modification Not Unconscionable: After signing an agreement obligating payment of $500 a month in child support, the father was subsequently incarcerated after pleading guilty to criminal charges. The District Court, citing the father's lack of assets and reduced income while in prison, modified the support amount by ordering the father to pay $50 a month in support while incarcerated. Payments were subject to modification upon release from prison and return to employment. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that it is not unconscionable to deny a temporary termination or reduction in child support payments because of incarceration even though the incarcerated parent has no income and has no assets to pay the support. Mooney v. Brennan, 257 M 197, 848 P2d 1020, 50 St. Rep. 229 (1993).

Modification of Support Obligation Retroactive to Date Before Motion Filed Improper: In December 1990, when both parties were residing in Washington, mother sent a letter to father requesting child support modification. A subsequent petition filed in a Washington superior court was dismissed on jurisdictional grounds. Mother subsequently filed a motion in Montana on August 15, 1991, seeking modification of support from $300 a month to $1,172.50 a month. The modification was granted, retroactive to December 1990, the date father allegedly became aware of the legal proceeding. Under this section, the right to modified child support accrues on the date actual notice was given in the Montana proceedings. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred in ordering increased support retroactive to December 1990, holding the modification retroactive only to August 15, 1991. In re Marriage of Howard, 255 M 64, 840 P2d 1217, 49 St. Rep. 894 (1992).

Payments in Support of Nonindigent Parent Not Considered in Modification of Child Support: Parent claimed that the District Court should have deducted, for child support purposes, annual payments of $15,148.58 for a residence, vehicle, and insurance and $225 a month made to his mother for her support, citing his legal obligation under 40-6-301 to support his mother. However, absent proof that his mother was indigent, the trial court was not bound to consider the support of his mother as a legal duty when calculating expenses applicable to child support. In re Marriage of Howard, 255 M 64, 840 P2d 1217, 49 St. Rep. 894 (1992).

Support Increase From $300 to $1,172.50 a Month Not Per Se Unconscionable: Father contended that an increase in his child support obligation from $300 to $1,172.50 a month was so enormous as to be per se unconscionable, but he cited no authority for his argument, nor could he specify any error in the District Court's extensive and particular findings regarding the parties' incomes and respective child support obligations. Absent a clear abuse of court discretion, the increase was affirmed. In re Marriage of Howard, 255 M 64, 840 P2d 1217, 49 St. Rep. 894 (1992).

Prospective Modification of Child Support Not Abuse of Discretion: This section does not mandate that modifications of child support must be made retroactive to the date of notice of the motion for modification; rather, it sets a limit as of that date. A prospective modification of child support does not necessarily constitute an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Fronk v. Wilson, 250 M 291, 819 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 936 (1991).

Accelerated Depreciation Deduction Not Factor in Determining Disposable Income: The husband appealed the lower court's decision to increase his support obligation. The Supreme Court ruled that it was not error to determine a parent's net income without taking into consideration the accelerated depreciation deductions listed on the parent's tax return. The court held that the purpose of depreciation is to enable a person to regain business expenditures and therefore cannot be considered an expense. In re Marriage of Stewart, 243 M 180, 793 P2d 813, 47 St. Rep. 1116 (1990).

Joint Care and Support — Support Proportional to Ability to Pay: The parties will be required to contribute to the support of their children in proportion to their ability to make such contributions, determined on a case-by-case basis. When the wife's income was less than half of the husband's, it was unconscionable that the wife should bear one-half of the cost of supporting the children. The District Court did not err in modifying the child support decree to require contribution from the husband. In re Marriage of Thane, 238 M 349, 777 P2d 881, 46 St. Rep. 1325 (1989).

Jurisdiction to Modify — Joint Custody — Medical and Dental Insurance: Even though the joint marital dissolution decree contained no provisions for child support, the District Court in effect required child support from the husband by providing directly for health insurance for the children and by providing for their joint care and support. The court had jurisdiction to modify the child support provisions after the lapse of 2 years. (See 1995 amendment.) In re Marriage of Thane, 238 M 349, 777 P2d 881, 46 St. Rep. 1325 (1989).

Child's Need for Ski Activity Funding Not Substantial Change in Circumstances: Wife's contention that a child needed a four-wheel drive vehicle and traveling expenses while skiing did not show a change in circumstances so substantial and continuing as to render the original child support provisions unconscionable. In re Marriage of Lyman, 233 M 283, 762 P2d 203, 45 St. Rep. 1491 (1988).

Assumption of Permanent Custody by Noncustodial Parent — No Child Support Obligation: A noncustodial parent who assumed permanent custody and support of the children, with the consent of the custodial parent, was relieved of the obligation to pay child support accruing after and during the consensual assumption of custody. In re Marriage of Sabo, 224 M 252, 730 P2d 1112, 43 St. Rep. 2175 (1986), overruling Dahl v. Dahl, 176 M 307, 577 P2d 1230 (1978).

Equitable Grounds for Modification — Oral Agreement: Knowing her former husband would be working fewer hours because of layoffs and strikes at his workplace, wife orally agreed to a reduction of child support on a monthly basis during the times of layoff and strike. She also orally agreed that when husband took the children for an extended visit his payment would be reduced proportionately with the number of days he had the children. A decree for child support may be modified on equitable grounds by a court if there is clear and compelling evidence of the terms of an oral agreement of modification. The modification may be applied only to maintenance and support payments to be made subsequent to the oral agreement for modification and may not impair the rights of any assignee of support payments based on public assistance paid a party. In re Marriage of Jensen, 223 M 434, 727 P2d 512, 43 St. Rep. 1891 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Glanville, 272 M 22, 899 P2d 527, 52 St. Rep. 563 (1995), and In re Marriage of Jarussi, 1998 MT 272, 291 M 371, 968 P2d 720, 55 St. Rep. 1124 (1998).

Unconscionable Child Support Payment:

Change in couple's circumstances was so substantial and continuing as to make an earlier support agreement unconscionable. Husband's wages had been reduced and his employment was subject to strikes and layoffs. His living conditions were significantly more modest than wife's. Wife had remarried and her new husband had a steady job. She owned rental property and had no day-care expenses. Therefore, court properly reduced father's support amount. In re Marriage of Jensen, 223 M 434, 727 P2d 512, 43 St. Rep. 1891 (1986).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in modifying a divorce decree to increase child support payments. The underlying evidence was sufficient to support the decision to increase a payment of $120 a month for a 15-year-old boy, which in the circumstances revealed was unconscionable. Green v. Green, 176 M 532, 579 P2d 1235 (1978).

Reduction in Child Support Payments — Changed Circumstances Rendering Original Decree Unconscionable: Since the entry of the original decree of dissolution: both parties remarried; the mother moved with the children to a permanent residence in northern Idaho; the move had substantial consequences on the father's ability to see the children due to increased costs; and the father apparently earned approximately $150 a month less than at the time of the decree. The District Court found these to be changed circumstances so substantial and continuing as to make the original decree unconscionable and granted a reduction in child support payments. In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court found that the mother had not overcome the presumption that the modification was correct and that the District Court had not abused its discretion. In re Marriage of Uphus, 221 M 347, 720 P2d 231, 43 St. Rep. 882 (1986).

Cost of Living Increase Factor — Vagueness — Modification: Where a 1980 dissolution decree provided for 10% annual increase in support payments, with vague provisions for limitation in case of economic depression or lower rate of economic inflation, the Supreme Court held that modification was proper when the rate of inflation had declined significantly and when the modification decree tied the change in support obligation directly to the U.S. Department of Labor Consumer Price Index. In re Marriage of Gies, 218 M 433, 709 P2d 635, 42 St. Rep. 1715 (1985).

Change of Circumstances — Inheritance — Offset: When, after dissolution, the mother inherited a substantial sum of money, received periodic income from the family corporation, and became owner of a debt-free home, and the father's income decreased by one-third, the findings of the District Court reducing the father's child support obligation from $330 to $175 a month per child were not clearly erroneous. The court need not limit calculation of child support to a percentage of out-of-pocket expenses. When the record contains substantial credible evidence to support the findings, the Supreme Court will not reverse on the issue of modification. Absent an agreement between the parties to the contrary, the father was not entitled to an offset for voluntary supplementary house payments made to help sell the home he was ordered to sell by dissolution decree. In re Support of Rockman, 217 M 498, 705 P2d 590, 42 St. Rep. 1323 (1985).

Same Support When One of Two Children Dies: Father was paying $150 a month child support for each of two children. One child died. In light of the discrepancy between the incomes of the father and mother, it was not an abuse of discretion to raise the support for the remaining child to $300 a month. There was no evidence that the father was less capable of paying $300 than he was at the time of the original decree. In re Custody of Holm, 215 M 413, 698 P2d 414, 42 St. Rep. 504 (1985).

Loss of Job by Person With Custody — Sufficient Cause for Raise in Support: Where neither parent was financially well-situated and divorce decree had granted mother the relatively small amount of $100 a month child support for each child, mother's loss of her job was sufficient to justify raising the child support to $175 a month for each child. McNeff v. McNeff, 207 M 297, 673 P2d 473, 40 St. Rep. 2050 (1983), followed in In re Marriage of Purkett, 222 M 225, 721 P2d 349, 43 St. Rep. 1217 (1986).

Child Support Modification Based on Inflation and Increased Age of Child Upheld: Five years after entry of the parties' original divorce decree, the District Court, on motion of the mother, ordered that the father's monthly child support payments be increased from $125 to $200. On appeal, the Supreme Court, noting that it will reverse the District Court only if its findings are clearly erroneous, declined to overrule the District Court. The Supreme Court stated that the factors relied upon by the District Court, i.e., the increase in the child's age and needs, inflation, and the fact that the wife's expenses exceed her income, rendered the terms of the original decree unconscionable within the meaning of this section. Johnson v. Johnson, 205 M 259, 667 P2d 438, 40 St. Rep. 1255 (1983), followed in In re Marriage of Barber, 252 M 458, 830 P2d 97, 49 St. Rep. 367 (1992), and distinguished, with regard to a lack of specific evidence of changed economic circumstances or actual increased need, in In re Marriage of Gingerich/Stroop, 269 M 161, 887 P2d 714, 51 St. Rep. 1417 (1994).

Ability to Meet Current Needs: The parties were married in 1961, and the marriage was dissolved in 1979. The husband was required to pay $100 per month child support for each of the four children. Two children had reached majority. The wife petitioned to increase support payments, saying they were insufficient to meet the current needs of the children because of increased costs and greater expenses related to their age status. The District Court found that expenses for the wife exceeded her income, while the husband's income had increased due to pension increases and reduction in support payments. The court found these to be substantially changed circumstances, and the Supreme Court agreed. The findings of the District Court were not clearly erroneous, and the increase in support was upheld. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 203 M 97, 660 P2d 90, 40 St. Rep. 321 (1983), followed in In re Marriage of Barber, 252 M 458, 830 P2d 97, 49 St. Rep. 367 (1992).

Modification Improper

Failure to Demonstrate Changed Circumstances — Modification of Support Properly Denied: The mother identified four factors that she claimed evidenced changed circumstances warranting modification of child support: (1) the father significantly decreased visitation so that the mother had sole financial responsibility for the children's care; (2) the mother was forced to liquidate the bulk of her assets received in the marital property dissolution, resulting in insufficient funds to care for the children; (3) the father earned more income than he reported; and (4) because of the mother's financial situation and the father's increased annual income, the children's health insurance premiums, deductibles, and uncovered sums should be allocated proportionately based on a ratio of the parties' annual incomes. The District Court examined each factor supporting the mother's claim of changed circumstances and dismissed each claim as not credible. Giving due regard to the District Court's opportunity to judge the credibility of witnesses, the Supreme Court affirmed the decision that the mother failed to meet the burden of demonstrating substantial and continuing changed circumstances. In re Marriage of Pearson, 1998 MT 236, 291 M 101, 965 P2d 268, 55 St. Rep. 992 (1998).

Failure to Include Life Insurance Allegation in Initial Pleading — Failure to Address Issue Not Error: The mother testified at trial that the father failed to maintain or provide proof of life insurance coverage for the benefit of the children, although the decree did not require the father to maintain life insurance but only to name the children as beneficiaries to any life insurance policy that he might have. However, the mother failed to include any findings or conclusions pertaining to life insurance in her proposed findings and conclusions submitted to the court. It is fundamentally unfair to fault the trial court for failing to rule correctly on an issue that it was never given an opportunity to consider, so the trial court was entitled to treat the life insurance allegation as a nonissue. In re Marriage of Pearson, 1998 MT 236, 291 M 101, 965 P2d 268, 55 St. Rep. 992 (1998). See also Day v. Payne, 280 M 273, 929 P2d 864 (1996).

Continuing Changed Circumstances Required: Seven months after Raymond was ordered to pay child support, he petitioned to have it modified. Evidence showed, among other things, that he testified that his circumstances were essentially the same as at the time of the original support order, that, in the year of his petition, he deposited over $135,000 in the bank, that he received $62,000 that year from the sale of a house, and that he chose to pay off a $24,000 note and over $21,000 in credit card bills with the house sale money instead of paying child support, for which he was in arrears. Clearly, he failed to show a change in circumstances so substantial and continuing as to make the existing support order unconscionable, and the lower court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to modify the order. In addition, the District Court properly ordered him to pay his former wife's court costs and attorney fees and the Supreme Court ordered him to pay her costs and attorney fees for the appeal. In re Marriage of Paunovich, 270 M 200, 890 P2d 1291, 52 St. Rep. 144 (1995).

Failure to Prove That Cost-of-Living Increase Sufficient Change to Justify Modification: Relying on In re Marriage of Johnson, 205 M 259, 667 P2d 438 (1983), and In re Marriage of Barnard, 264 M 103, 870 P2d 91 (1994), wife's counsel elicited at the hearing that proposed child support modifications were based on the parties' incomes, justifying an increase in support, but the calculations gave no indication of the increase in the cost of living. The record did not contain sufficient evidence of an increase or even a degree of increase in the cost of living. Distinguishing Johnson, the Supreme Court held that the change in the parties' incomes was not a sufficient basis to warrant modification of the decree or to support a conclusion that there was a change in circumstances so substantial as to render the original decree unconscionable. In re Marriage of Gingerich/Stroop, 269 M 161, 887 P2d 714, 51 St. Rep. 1417 (1994).

Improper Modification to Lengthen Time Support to Be Paid: The date established for terminating child support payments may be extended or knowingly waived by written agreement or express provision of the decree, but absent either of those factors, a parent is obligated to provide support only until the child reaches 18 years of age or is earlier emancipated. Although the Supreme Court noted that there may be situations in which the termination date should be extended, in this case, the District Court abused its discretion by modifying the decree to include the months during which a child was not emancipated and was still enrolled in high school but not yet 19 years old and the months between a child's attaining majority and graduating from high school. In re Marriage of Gingerich/Stroop, 269 M 161, 887 P2d 714, 51 St. Rep. 1417 (1994).

Retroactive Creation of Trust for Support Payments Held to Be Error: When Carol Ann and Roland divorced, Roland was ordered to pay $125 a month in child support. Years later, Roland had paid nothing and had accumulated arrearages of $13,000. After a hearing sought by Carol Ann to collect the arrearages, the District Court ordered that $10,000 be paid by Roland and put into a trust for the education of the parties' daughter. Neither party had requested the creation of the trust. Citing Williams v. Budke, 186 M 71, 606 P2d 515 (1980), the Supreme Court held that support payments are to be paid to the custodial parent to be used for the support of the child at the discretion of that parent. The Supreme Court also noted that the District Court did not have jurisdiction to modify the original order retroactively. Willoughby v. Loomis, 264 M 44, 869 P2d 271, 51 St. Rep. 138 (1994).

Retroactive Reduction in Child Support Payments Beyond Jurisdiction of Court: Willoughby brought an action under the Revised Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (now Uniform Interstate Family Support Act) to collect arrearages of $13,000 owed to her by her ex-husband Loomis. After a hearing, the District Court ordered that a trust be established for the parties' child and that it be funded in the amount of $10,000 in lieu of the $13,000 in arrears, which Loomis admitted. Citing In re Marriage of Hooper & Crittendon, 247 M 322, 806 P2d 541 (1991), the Supreme Court held that the child support payments could not be retroactively modified, absent extraordinary circumstances that did not appear in this case. Willoughby v. Loomis, 264 M 44, 869 P2d 271, 51 St. Rep. 138 (1994).

Supreme Court's Adoption of Child Support Guidelines Not Grounds for Modification: The District Court failed to make findings of fact showing a change in husband's circumstances that supported a reduction of child support below the amount set by the original decree. The Supreme Court's adoption of child support guidelines was not in itself a sufficient change of circumstances to justify the modification. Therefore, the modification was reversed and the case was remanded. In re Marriage of Kukes, 258 M 324, 852 P2d 655, 50 St. Rep. 553 (1993).

Error in Adoption of Circumstances Mitigating Payment of Support: A noncustodial parent contended he was prevented from making support payments because of lack of income, a spinal injury that prevented employment, and lack of knowledge of the whereabouts of his children in order to make payments. The Supreme Court held the District Court erred in finding these circumstances mitigated payment of child support after noting that: (1) income was essentially unchanged and the parent had failed to pay any of a $20,000 injury settlement in support; (2) the parent turned down full-time jobs and stayed active; and (3) no support was paid even during the 1 ½ years when the children's whereabouts was known. In re Marriage of Callahan, 233 M 465, 762 P2d 205, 45 St. Rep. 1639 (1988).

Stipulation to Provide Personal Tax Returns — No Allegations of Change in Financial Circumstances to Warrant Production of Corporate Returns: To determine the amount of a lump-sum support payment due from father each year, parties stipulated the amount be based on father's income as reported on his personal tax returns. Mother instituted a series of actions to obtain returns from father's farm corporation, alleging the corporate returns were relevant to setting the support level. The District Court properly interpreted the stipulation as not inclusive of father's nontaxable corporate benefits. Absent allegations of substantial changes in the financial circumstances of either party, mother's request for production of corporate returns and for modification of support was denied. In re Support of K.F., 232 M 326, 756 P2d 460, 45 St. Rep. 1087 (1988).

Temporary Change in Circumstances Not Sufficient to Render Support Payments Unconscionable: It was reversible error for the District Court to grant a reduction in child support payments based on father's contention that his income declined by 40% when the decline was a temporary change in circumstances. By its own terms, this section precludes modification to cure a temporary change in circumstances. In re Marriage of Forsman, 229 M 411, 747 P2d 861, 44 St. Rep. 2093 (1987), followed in In re Marriage of Craib & Rhodes, 266 M 483, 880 P2d 1379, 51 St. Rep. 937 (1994).

Agreement for Modification of Child Support Void as Against Public Policy: Parents entered into an agreement to modify a child support arrangement to relieve the father of $9,000 in future payments. It was within the trial court's discretion to declare the modification agreement void as a violation of public policy since the custody and support of children are never left to contract between the parties. In re Marriage of Neiss, 228 M 479, 743 P2d 1022, 44 St. Rep. 1695 (1987). See also St. v. Shaver, 233 M 438, 760 P2d 1230, 45 St. Rep. 1617 (1988).

Support Issue Not Subject to Modification When Not Determined: A dissolution decree did not set specific child support payments but reserved the issue for a later date. As child support issue was never determined, it could not later be modified; therefore, the limitations period in this section did not apply. St. v. Hubbard, 222 M 156, 720 P2d 1177, 43 St. Rep. 1135 (1986).

Speculative Conditions Not to Be Basis for Support Modification:

In granting modification of a child support obligation, the District Court relied on findings of fact and conclusions of law based on speculative conditions, including the father's potential involvement in lawsuits in regard to the sale of his Great Falls home and recovery of his investment in a Minneapolis condominium, as well as his assertion that a "reduction in income plus the presence of anticipated debt results in making the original terms of the Decree unconscionable". The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the District Court abused its discretion by not limiting its consideration to circumstances in existence at the time of the hearing. The Supreme Court found no substantial credible evidence on the record to justify the District Court's conclusion that the change in conditions was continuing or permanent. In re Marriage of Conklin/Clark, 220 M 130, 716 P2d 629, 43 St. Rep. 611 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Platt, 267 M 38, 881 P2d 634, 51 St. Rep. 926 (1994).

The trial court based its order increasing the amount of child support on the fact that the husband's social security disability benefits had increased 14% and that the benefits were sure to increase in the future. The trial court cannot base child support upon such speculative conditions. Duffey v. Duffey, 193 M 241, 631 P2d 697, 38 St. Rep. 1105 (1981).

No Modification of Order Solely by Acts of Parties — Modification Petition Must Be Filed: The child support provisions of a dissolution decree may be modified only by filing a petition under this section, not by the actions of the parties. State of Oregon ex rel. Worden v. Drinkwalter, 216 M 9, 700 P2d 150, 42 St. Rep. 599 (1985).

Improvement in Son's Financial Circumstances — Father's Support Obligation Not Rendered Unconscionable: Pursuant to a dissolution decree, a noncustodial father was ordered to support his son until he reached 18 years of age and for 4 years thereafter if the child pursued further education. The father sought modification of the support order, based upon certain changes in his son's financial circumstances. The Supreme Court held that the facts that his son obtained majority, received an academic scholarship to attend college, worked while attending school, and financed the purchase of a vehicle were not circumstances which abrogated his father's support. His son's scholarship and other endeavors did not constitute a change in circumstances that rendered the child support obligation unconscionable, nor was the provision in the dissolution decree which required the father to pay child support beyond the age of majority unconscionable. In re Marriage of Redfern, 214 M 169, 692 P2d 468, 41 St. Rep. 2391 (1984).

Provision Ordering Child Support Past Age of Majority Not Unconscionable: A noncustodial father sought a modification of his child support obligation after his son reached the age of majority. The father challenged the conscionability of the support provision, claiming he did not fully understand language in the support provision of the joint petition for dissolution that obligated him to support his son after the age of 18 years for 4 additional years as long as the child was pursuing further education. No evidence was presented at trial to support his contention that he did not understand the support provision. The provision that required the father to support his son past the age of majority was not unconscionable, and thus his motion for modification of the prior dissolution decree was properly denied. In re Marriage of Redfern, 214 M 169, 692 P2d 468, 41 St. Rep. 2391 (1984).

Stub for Single Pay Period Insufficient Supportive Evidence: The parties' marriage was dissolved on February 25, 1983. The decree incorporated a custody and support agreement requiring husband to pay $350 a month child support for each of the parties' two children. Husband made the payments in March but wrote to the wife in March to inform her that due to a decrease in pay he would no longer be able to meet the payments. Husband, a driver for Rimrock Stages, contended that the company had switched from a salary pay plan to a wage plan. He supported his testimony at the modification hearing with his pay stub for April 1 through April 15, 1983. His net income for the period was $587. The trial court declined to modify the support payments. On appeal the Supreme Court affirmed, saying the husband had not presented sufficient evidence to show that his total financial situation warranted a modification of support or that the decrease in his income was continuing. Trimp v. Trimp, 206 M 499, 672 P2d 612, 40 St. Rep. 1806 (1983).

No Evidence of Changed Financial Circumstances of Payor: Immediately upon being terminated from his job, husband petitioned for reduction of $750 a month child support payments on grounds that he was unemployed and had no income. Evidence showed he could rebuild his prior self-employment business in 3 to 6 months and that he received from it $1,475 and $1,900 during the 2 months after filing the petition. It was clearly erroneous and reversible error to lower the payments, since no evidence was presented to prove husband's change in circumstances was continuing so as to make the original court-approved support agreement unconscionable. Hughes v. Hughes, 205 M 69, 666 P2d 739, 40 St. Rep. 1102 (1983), followed in In re Custody & Support of H.Q. & T.Q., 218 M 308, 709 P2d 154, 42 St. Rep. 1604 (1985). See also In re Marriage of Carlson, 214 M 209, 693 P2d 496, 41 St. Rep. 2419 (1984).

Modification of Judgment for Accrued Payments — Impermissible: Williams sustained a work-related injury to his foot, which resulted in a temporary total disability. This situation was brought to the attention of the District Court and a full review of Williams' child support obligation was conducted. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed that part of the District Court order which suspended payments for Williams' delinquent child support during the period of his disability. That portion of the order, in effect, modified the judgment previously entered as to accrued child support payments. As such, it conflicts with 40-4-208 and is impermissible. In re Marriage of Williams, 188 M 160, 612 P2d 212 (1980), followed in In re Marriage of Carlson, 214 M 209, 693 P2d 496, 41 St. Rep. 2419 (1984).

Contractual Obligation for Support Incorporated in Decree — Not Subject to Modification: Husband, to avoid having his divorce contested and thereby besmirching his girlfriend's name, agreed, in a property settlement agreement incorporated into the divorce decree, to pay $500 per month for 10 years for support of his children and maintenance of their home. In husband's petition for modification of this amount, the District Court was correct in identifying the property settlement agreement as a contract supported by valid consideration that, in the absence of any showing that the welfare of the children was affected, could not be modified. Winters v. Winters, 188 M 43, 610 P2d 1165 (1980).

Modification of Child Support — Absence of Required Showing: The District Court abused its discretion in increasing petitioner's child support obligation without a showing of changed circumstances so substantial and continuing as to make the original child support provision unconscionable. Furthermore, there was a complete absence of evidence concerning the need for increased child support or the petitioner's increased ability to pay. In re Marriage of Firman, 187 M 465, 610 P2d 178 (1980). See also In re Marriage of Cox, 266 M 67, 878 P2d 903, 51 St. Rep. 672 (1994); Duffey v. Duffey, 193 M 241, 631 P2d 697, 38 St. Rep. 1105 (1981); Jensen v. Jensen, 192 M 547, 629 P2d 765, 38 St. Rep. 927 (1981).

Improper Modification of Support Payments: The trial court did not enter appropriate findings and conclusions upon which to predicate a modification of child support provisions. Absent findings that substantial and continuing circumstances make the terms of child support unconscionable, the Supreme Court will not independently search the record to determine if there is nonetheless an evidentiary basis for the order modifying the child support provisions. In re Marriage of Bliss, 187 M 331, 609 P2d 1209 (1980). See also In re Marriage of Johnson, 1999 MT 254, 296 M 311, 989 P2d 356, 56 St. Rep. 1011 (1999).

Erroneous Cancellation of Child Support: The trial court erred in modifying a divorce decree to cancel past due and unpaid child support. Dahl v. Dahl, 176 M 307, 577 P2d 1230 (1978), overruled in In re Marriage of Sabo, 224 M 252, 730 P2d 1112, 43 St. Rep. 2175 (1986).

Erroneous Increase: The court abused its discretion by increasing child support payments in the absence of written consent of the parties or a showing of increased need. Gianotti v. McCracken, 174 M 209, 569 P2d 929 (1977).

PROPERTY DISPOSITION

Collateral Estoppel Applied to Preclude Reopening Settlement Agreement Regarding Disposition of Jointly Owned Marital Property — Property Interest Not Altered by Filing of Partition Action: When the husband and wife separated, they entered a property settlement agreement dividing all their real and personal property, agreeing that they would continue to jointly own their residence, with the right of survivorship. In the decree of dissolution, the District Court affirmed that the property settlement agreement was fair and equitable. Several years after the divorce, seeking to wrap up financial affairs with her former husband, the wife moved to partition the residence and obtain an equal division of the value of the property. At trial, the husband argued that the property settlement agreement was unfair and that the wife should be denied any recovery for her interest in the residence because it was purchased prior to the marriage and because she did not contribute to the marriage financially. The wife moved in limine to preclude the husband from reopening matters that should have been raised in the divorce proceedings. The court denied her motion, reasoning that the property was not divided in the divorce and that because the partition action was an action at equity, surrounding circumstances could be considered. The court found that the filing of the partition action severed the joint tenancy, and the husband was then allowed to introduce evidence regarding the marital equities. The court ultimately concluded that the wife's interest in the residence was not compensable because she had not contributed significantly to the acquisition or improvement of the property or contributed to the parties' assets during the marriage. The wife appealed. The Supreme Court found that res judicata and equitable estoppel barred relitigation of the fairness of the joint ownership issue, which was considered and approved in the decree of dissolution. Further, the mere filing of the partition action does not sever one's interest in property. Rather, the parties' respective interests remain intact until the judgment severing the tenancy is entered. The rebuttable presumption that underlies a joint tenancy in property is equal shares, and there was nothing in the evidence to rebut that presumption and no evidence of postdecree events that would justify a different result. The husband failed to carry the burden of rebutting the presumption of equal shares, and the Supreme Court remanded for a 50-50 partition of the value of the residence. Rausch v. Hogan, 2001 MT 123, 305 M 382, 28 P3d 460 (2001).

Spouse Responsible for Bankruptcy Credit Card Obligations Pursuant to Dissolution Decree: As part of the dissolution decree, the wife was ordered to return a quarterhorse and horse trailer to the husband. However, she sold both horse and trailer and used the proceeds for her own purposes, then declared bankruptcy. The District Court offset the husband's obligation to pay credit cards debts that resulted from discharge of the debts in the bankruptcy proceedings because the husband was then held solely responsible by the credit card companies for the debts that the wife had been ordered to pay under the dissolution decree. State District Courts have concurrent jurisdiction with federal bankruptcy courts in determining the dischargeability of debts, and the District Court thus had jurisdiction to determine that the wife was responsible for the credit card obligation. This determination conformed to federal bankruptcy law and was within the District Court's broad discretion to equitably apportion marital property. Lee v. Lee, 2000 MT 67, 299 M 78, 996 P2d 389, 57 St. Rep. 308 (2000). See also State ex rel. Rough v. District Court, 218 M 499, 710 P2d 47, 42 St. Rep. 1773 (1985).

No Abuse of Discretion Found in Refusal to Amend Award of Personal Property — Findings and Conclusions, Decree, and Minute Order Held Consistent — Award Based Upon Stipulation of Current Cash Value of IRA Accounts Upheld: Soon after a decree was issued dissolving her marriage, Janet moved, pursuant to Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to amend the judgment because it concerned the distribution of the parties' personal property. Janet claimed that the District Court should have awarded her the personal property listed on Exhibit "A" to her proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law. The District Court denied her motion. Janet argued before the Supreme Court that the decree of dissolution did not conform to the District Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law in that the District Court intended to award her the property listed on Exhibit "A" to her proposed findings and conclusions but that the property awarded was taken from a different exhibit and paragraph of her amended proposed findings and conclusions. The Supreme Court held that the District Court's distribution of the parties' property was clear and definite. The Supreme Court noted that the District Court had made a minute entry 10 days before Janet filed her motion to amend and that the minute order stated that certain items from Janet's Exhibit "A" were to be returned to her. The Supreme Court concluded that by using this language in the minute order, the District Court intended that certain items of Janet's property listed in her exhibit were to be returned to her and that the remainder was to remain with her ex-husband. In all material respects, the Supreme Court said, the findings and conclusions, decree, and minute order all conform with one another, and therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to amend. The Supreme Court also upheld the District Court's division of the parties' two IRA accounts, noting that the parties arrived at the value by adding the two together for a total of $64,445 and then subtracting 30% for taxes and a 10% penalty, leaving a net redemption value of $38,666, and then dividing that remainder in half. The District Court gave Janet's ex-husband the option of transferring ownership of one-half of the IRAs to Janet or paying Janet $19,333, one-half the net value of those accounts. The Supreme Court held that because Janet had stipulated to the present cash value of the IRAs, if her ex-husband chose to pay her one-half the current cash value of the accounts, she is receiving an equitable distribution. In re Marriage of Dorsey, 284 M 392, 945 P2d 430, 54 St. Rep. 934 (1997).

Fraud as Grounds for Relief From Property Disposition:

Upon the divorce of John and Andrea, John agreed to pay certain jointly held debts, and the District Court entered the agreement into its decree. Later, after John filed a Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceeding, Andrea obtained a modification of the original decree on the basis that John's representations of payment constituted extrinsic fraud. The modification was obtained by a motion made long after the expiration of the 60-day deadline provided in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). The Supreme Court reversed the District Court, holding that the representations made by John did not come within the scope of the residual clause of the rule because those representations did not constitute a fraud upon the court or serve as the basis for an independent action for extrinsic fraud. Thus, the Supreme Court held that the motion for relief was untimely made and improperly granted. In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Under subsection (1)(b)(ii), the District Court has jurisdiction to determine whether fraud has been committed upon the court and, if it has, may grant relief in accordance with Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The power of the court to set aside a judgment on the basis of fraud is inherent and independent of statute, and the 60-day time limitation in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., does not apply. However, after 60 days the issue cannot be raised by motion but must be raised in an independent action for relief. In this case, the court found that the failure of the wife to disclose her recently secured employment was properly held by the District Court not to be fraud since it was not an intentional concealment or misrepresentation and since the judgment was based on an agreement between the parties. Hopper v. Hopper, 183 M 543, 601 P2d 29 (1979).

Fraud upon the court is a species of extrinsic fraud that will afford equitable relief. Fraud upon the court and upon one of the parties to the property settlement agreement is within the scope of 40-4-208, justifying a reopening of the provisions of a divorce decree as to property disposition. Pilati v. Pilati, 181 M 182, 592 P2d 1374 (1979), followed in Best v. Best, 202 M 109, 656 P2d 201, 39 St. Rep. 2362 (1982). Pilati was overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Settlement Agreement From Parties' First Divorce Not to Be Set Aside Sua Sponte by Trial Court: The parties entered into a property settlement agreement that was incorporated into their divorce decree in 1989. Seven months later, they remarried; their marriage was again dissolved in 1993. The lower court found that the parties had not performed or complied with the terms of the prior decree and that they were estopped from asserting any rights under the previous agreement. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had no jurisdiction to declare the agreement null and void because neither party had requested that the agreement be set aside and there had been no finding that the agreement was unconscionable. In re Marriage of Nordberg, 265 M 352, 877 P2d 987, 51 St. Rep. 531 (1994).

Fraud Between Parties Not Fraud Upon Court: More than 2 years after the dissolution order, Wise brought a motion to set aside the property settlement agreement drawn up by her attorney, contending that her husband had committed fraud against her and the court in that he told her that his work pension was not a marital asset. The statute of limitations had run for appealing the order on the basis of fraud between the parties, but the lower court found that the husband's statements to his wife constituted an extrinsic fraud upon the court. The Supreme Court held that fraud upon the court includes only the most egregious conduct and that generally fraud between the parties does not rise to that level, particularly in the present case when Wise's attorney drew up the property settlement agreement. Wise v. Nirider, 261 M 310, 862 P2d 1128, 50 St. Rep. 1334 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999).

Stipulated Modification Limitation — Events Following Dissolution Not Justification for Reopening Judgment: The parties signed a property settlement agreement that included a modification limitation authorized under 40-4-201 and that required the agreement of both parties for modification. Wife contended that several events substantially altered the valuation of the marital estate, making it necessary to reopen the agreement, including: (1) the forgiveness of a substantial debt owed to husband's parents, knowledge of which was allegedly withheld from wife during settlement negotiations; (2) gifts of stock interests made to husband by his parents after dissolution; (3) the diagnosis of cancer in wife's father and his pending divorce, which precluded his financial help to her; and (4) action by her former attorney for unpaid fees. The District Court did not find any of the changed circumstances to be substantial and continuing so as to make the terms of the agreement unconscionable, nor did the Supreme Court, which noted that the parties freely stipulated to the modification limitation and that although the changed conditions resulted in a predictably better financial condition for the husband, he could not be held responsible for the events. After-acquired property did not become part of the marital estate, and there was no evidence of fraud perpetrated by husband to deny wife her rightful share of the estate. Standard of Review in Division of Marital Property: The standard of review in regard to the factual findings of the District Court relating to the division of marital property, as set out in In re Marriage of Sacry, 253 M 378, 833 P2d 1035, 49 St. Rep. 452 (1992), is whether the findings are clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court is not bound by the District Court's conclusions and is free to reach its own conclusions. The basis for simply determining whether the lower court's conclusions are correct is that there is no discretion in determining a question of law; the lower court either correctly or incorrectly applies the law. However, discretionary judgments made by the trial court are presumed to be correct and will not be disturbed absent an abuse of discretion by the trial court. Reopening of Dissolution Decree Without Finding of Unconscionability — Reversible Error: A dissolution decree found that although husband's military pension was not included in a separation agreement, it was included in the general terminology of the agreement. The District Court applied Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), in granting wife's motion for reconsideration because wife had been advised by counsel that she had a vested interest in the pension and that mention of the pension was therefore not required. The District Court found that the lack of mention of the pension was intentional and did not constitute a waiver or relinquishment of the pension by wife. After reopening the decree, the court granted wife 50% of the pension and made further modifications in property disposition. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied 40-4-201(3), which governs separation agreements, in stating that the standard that justifies reopening the judgment is unconscionability. As in Patzer v. Patzer, 243 M 34, 792 P2d 1101 (1990), absent facts or allegations by wife that the agreement was unconscionable, reopening the decree constituted reversible error. In re Marriage of Laskey, 252 M 369, 829 P2d 935, 49 St. Rep. 322 (1992).

Property Settlement Agreement Not Mentioning Military Pension: Ten years after a dissolution, the wife moved to modify the parties' separation agreement on the basis that it had not referred to the husband's military pension, thus making the pension an undivided asset. The wife argued that the dissolution was prior to McCarty v. McCarty, 453 US 210 (1981), and therefore the pension came under the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act (USFSPA), which would allow the pension to be divided as an asset not before the court at the time of the original decree. The Supreme Court ruled that although the parties' settlement agreement had been executed prior to McCarty and the USFSPA, the pension was a marital asset at that time. The court went on to hold that the property settlement did not have to itemize every asset and that the military pension was the property of the husband under the language of the settlement. Patzer v. Patzer, 243 M 34, 792 P2d 1101, 47 St. Rep. 1071 (1990).

Factors Necessary to Show Extrinsic Fraud in Property Disposition: Wife contended that husband's failure to fully inform her of family assets, his misrepresentations concerning certain debts and property, and his forging of her name on the couple's joint income tax return were sufficient factors to demonstrate extrinsic fraud. However, in order to demonstrate extrinsic fraud, it must be shown that there was a material misrepresentation or concealment of assets that prevented a party from fully trying the case and that other equities, such as laches or negligence, were not present. In re Marriage of Lyman, 233 M 283, 762 P2d 203, 45 St. Rep. 1491 (1988), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Question of Full Disclosure in Property Settlement Agreement — Fraud and Misrepresentation Not Found: Wife appealed the lower court denial of her motion to set aside a property settlement agreement, contending that the court approved the settlement without knowing of certain assets which formed part of the marital estate. However, she overlooked the fact that even after the court became aware of the disputed items, it still found nothing on the face of the agreement which made it unconscionable. Ample evidence indicated that there was no fraud or misrepresentation. Denial of the motion to set aside was affirmed. In re Marriage of Gerleman, 228 M 158, 741 P2d 426, 44 St. Rep. 1421 (1987).

Military Pension Considered Marital Asset — Retroactive Modification of Decree Allowed: Six years after husband retired from the Air Force and began receiving a military pension, the husband and wife dissolved the marriage. At the time, Montana treated military pensions as a marital asset. Before entry of the final decree, however, the U.S. Supreme Court in McCarty ruled that federal law precluded state courts from dividing military pensions. As a result, the District Court ruled that the husband's pension was not a marital asset and awarded the wife $300 a month in maintenance. Passage of the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act (USFSPA) allowed state courts to once again consider military pensions when making property distribution. Subsequently, the wife filed a petition under Rule 60(b)(5), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to modify the dissolution decree, contending that the USFSPA should be applied retroactively to allow her a share of the husband's pension. The District Court denied the husband's motion to dismiss, entering a judgment awarding the wife one-half of the pension. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, ruling that the USFSPA should be applied retroactively to modify dissolution decrees that were final after McCarty but before the USFSPA effective date. In re Marriage of Waters, 223 M 183, 724 P2d 726, 43 St. Rep. 1642 (1986). See also In re Marriage of Blair, 271 M 196, 894 P2d 958, 52 St. Rep. 401 (1995) (special separation payments received by military member are subject to division as marital property).

Unclear Language in Decree — Modification: Trial court refused wife's request to enforce property settlement decree. The problem was that the original decree failed to place specific burdens on either party within reasonable time limits. The Supreme Court remanded the case, stating that the decree must be modified but that the trial court should make such provisions as may be needed. In re Marriage of Hereford, 223 M 31, 723 P2d 960, 43 St. Rep. 1508 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Scott, 246 M 10, 803 P2d 620, 47 St. Rep. 2237 (1990).

Action to Reopen and Modify Dissolution Decree After Sixty Days — Not Timely: The husband and wife were married in 1945. In 1975, the wife vanished and her whereabouts is unknown. In 1976, the husband filed for dissolution. The wife was served by publication. The court entered its decree but made no order with respect to distribution of property. In 1983, the husband started a quiet title action to jointly held property. Three months later, the daughter commenced an action in which her mother was determined to be presumed dead. The daughter was named personal representative of the mother's estate. As personal representative, the daughter filed a motion in the dissolution action to reopen and modify the decree regarding property disposition. The District Court refused to reopen the decree. On appeal, the Supreme Court pointed out that 40-1-105 makes the Rules of Civil Procedure applicable to all proceedings relating to marital dissolutions. This section provides that the provisions of the decree relating to property disposition may not be revoked or modified by the court unless it finds conditions justifying the reopening of a judgment. The court held that even if the District Court failed in its mandatory duty to equitably apportion the property, the decree was final, and that under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the motion to reopen had to be brought within 60 days. Once the judgment was final, it was too late to raise issues of misrepresentation that could have been contested in the cause prior to entry of judgment. In re Marriage of Woolsey, 214 M 106, 692 P2d 451, 41 St. Rep. 2349 (1984).

No Basis to Reopen Dissolution Decree: The appellant did not claim the existence of unconscionability, fraud, or any other inequitable situation that would give a court a legal basis upon which to reopen a dissolution decree. She attempted to enhance enforcement of the judgment that incorporated the parties' stipulations as to the property division by making a motion to modify. She was precluded by statutory time limits and by the fact that she had no legal basis to compel a court to reopen the judgment. Since no conditions existed that would justify reopening the judgment, the District Court was not required to enter findings of fact. Keirle v. Keirle, 210 M 214, 681 P2d 703, 41 St. Rep. 1016 (1984).

Order Conditionally Setting Aside Prior Decree Found to Be Abuse of Discretion: Where the District Court entered a decree in 1981 finding the property settlement agreement of the parties not unconscionable within the meaning of 40-4-201(2) and in 1983 issued an order stating that the property settlement agreement would be set aside if not complied with by the husband by a specific date, the Supreme Court found that the District Court erred in making the 1983 order. The 1981 decree and property settlement could, under the rationale of Hadford v. Hadford, 194 M 518, 633 P2d 1181, 38 St. Rep. 1308 (1981), be modified only if the conditions specified in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., were found to exist. Because the court issued no findings of fact indicating conditions that justified the reopening of the 1981 decree, the court abused its discretion in making the 1983 order. Lorge v. Lorge, 207 M 423, 675 P2d 115, 41 St. Rep. 50 (1984).

Property Disposition Not Modified by Oral Agreement of Parties: Where the parties to a divorce action entered into a property settlement agreement, later incorporated into a dissolution decree, which provided that a final $7,500 payment was due within 6 months of the final divorce decree and the defendant did not make the payment, the District Court erred in finding an oral modification of the settlement by the parties. The requirements contained in 40-4-208 for modification of property settlement provisions were not met either by the District Court or by the parties. The finding by the District Court was a clear abuse of discretion. Gibson v. Gibson, 206 M 460, 671 P2d 629, 40 St. Rep. 1780 (1983).

Agreement Basing Payments on Taxable Income of Payor Unconscionable: Four years after entry of a decree of dissolution of marriage, wife moved the District Court to hold husband in contempt for failure to comply with the property settlement agreement that had been incorporated in the dissolution decree and to increase monthly maintenance payments. The agreement provided that husband pay wife $750 a month or 13% of his annual income. The amount of the monthly payment was to be adjusted annually, based on husband's taxable income for the previous calendar year. The District Court refused to hold husband in contempt and denied wife's modification motion, holding that the evidence presented did not indicate that circumstances had changed so much as to render the agreement unconscionable within the meaning of this section. The District Court interpreted the words "taxable income" to mean taxable income within the meaning of the Internal Revenue Code, except that husband would not be permitted to subtract the amount of his maintenance payments in calculating his taxable income. This interpretation ensured that wife would receive larger payments in the future. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court on the contempt issue but reversed on the maintenance issue, ruling that the agreement was unconscionable as a matter of law because husband could adjust his deductible expenses in such a way as to reduce the total amount of his taxable income and ultimately the amount of wife's monthly maintenance payments. In re Marriage of Rowen, 199 M 315, 649 P2d 1259, 39 St. Rep. 1423 (1982).

Negotiated Agreement — Not Required to Be Reopened by Later Court Decision: At the time of their divorce, the parties entered a property agreement which was approved by the court and entered into the decree of dissolution. Appellant failed to perform as agreed, and respondent filed a petition seeking to have him held in contempt and requiring him to perform under the agreement. The District Court ordered appellant to perform the agreement. Appellant contends the court erred in refusing to set aside the property settlement agreement on the basis of McCarty v. McCarty, 453 US 210, 69 L Ed 2d 589, 101 S Ct 2728 (1981), excluding military pensions from marital estates. Appellant contends he entered the agreement in exchange for respondent relinquishing her claim to his military retirement, and the agreement was therefore unfair. The Supreme Court distinguished McCarty, saying appellant chose to settle the property distribution by contractual relations with respondent. He was not coerced into the agreement by the District Court, so there was no basis to overrule the District Court. In re Marriage of Grace, 198 M 97, 643 P2d 1188, 39 St. Rep. 791 (1982).

Challenge of Decree and Property Settlement After Six Years — Res Judicata: A property settlement and decree entered in 1974 cannot be set aside in 1980 on the grounds of unconscionability. The failure of the spouse to appeal the court's decree in 1974 has rendered the issue res judicata. Hadford v. Hadford, 194 M 518, 633 P2d 1181, 38 St. Rep. 1308 (1981).

Award of FELA Settlement Funds Prohibited After Completion of Property Settlement: Where, following appeal and remand of the District Court's maintenance award to the plaintiff in a divorce action, the District Court awarded the plaintiff a one-quarter interest in Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) settlement funds received by the defendant, the District Court had no jurisdiction to make the award of FELA funds, in addition to maintenance, as to do so would be to amend its property settlement order. The plaintiff had not petitioned the court to reopen the property settlement, nor did the District Court make any findings of changed conditions requiring relief from judgment. The prior opinion of the Supreme Court dealt only with the maintenance award and cannot serve as a separate basis to reopen the property settlement award. Heintzelman v. Heintzelman, 193 M 183, 631 P2d 290, 38 St. Rep. 1074 (1981).

Review of Substantial Credible Evidence — Property Settlement — Accounting: The husband brought an action to enforce the property settlement. The wife sought modification. The property settlement provided that the wife was to provide an accounting for all sums paid. The trial judge found that the wife had made an adequate accounting. The wife testified that she made what she thought was an adequate accounting, and the husband testified that the accounting he received was not sufficient. On appeal, the Supreme Court said that it will not substitute its judgment for that of the trier of fact but rather will only consider whether substantial credible evidence supports the finding and conclusions. Those findings will not be overturned by the court unless there is a clear preponderance of the evidence against them. The court will view the evidence in a light most favorable to the prevailing party, recognizing that substantial evidence may be weak or conflicting with other evidence, yet still support the findings. The findings are affirmed since there is not a clear preponderance of evidence against the findings. Phennicie v. Phennicie, 185 M 120, 604 P2d 787 (1979).

Second Appeal — "Law of the Case" Rule Applied: When the Supreme Court states a principle or rule of law necessary to the decision of a case, such pronouncement becomes the "law of the case" and must be adhered to throughout its subsequent progress, both in the trial court and upon subsequent appeal. Here, a previous case involving the same parties established the "law of the case" for this appeal. The former husband was estopped, in the previous case, from challenging monthly payments to the former wife, having successfully availed himself of the benefits of the property settlement provisions of the marriage dissolution decree (the monthly payments having been held to be a part of the property settlement). Therefore, the denial of the former husband's second petition to terminate the payments is affirmed on the "law of the case" of his first petition. Englund v. Englund, 184 M 488, 603 P2d 1048, 36 St. Rep. 2211 (1979).

Distribution of Marital Property: For a proper distribution of marital property the trial court in this case must consider at least these two factors: (1) the net worth of the parties at the time of divorce; and (2) the effect on control of a family corporation upon transfer of any shares of corporation stock during a property distribution. Grenfell v. Grenfell, 182 M 229, 596 P2d 205 (1979).

Reduction in Value of Stock: If shares of stock in the company controlled by the husband become worthless or reduced in value or incapable of being sold for reasons beyond the control of the wife and within the control of the husband or the company, the District Court would be empowered by this section to reopen the judgment and modify the property disposition. In re Marriage of Jorgensen, 180 M 294, 590 P2d 606 (1979).

Monthly Payments of Property Settlement Agreement Not "Alimony" Payments Subject to Modification: Trial court erred in setting aside "alimony" of property settlement agreement incorporated in divorce decree where wife agreed to assume $10,000 of husband's liability and release her interest in all jointly held property in return for receipt of 51% of jointly held corporation and payment of $750 per month for 9 years, which payments were to continue regardless if wife remarried or if husband died before full payment was made, as monthly payments were not "alimony" but were a part of property settlement agreement which could not be modified or severed from the divorce decree without destroying the contract. Washington v. Washington, 162 M 349, 512 P2d 1300 (1973), followed in Shultz v. Shultz, 205 M 212, 666 P2d 1242, 40 St. Rep. 1223 (1983), and King v. Equitable Powers of District Court to Adjust Property Interests in Divorce Action: It was proper for divorce court, pursuant to Rules 18(a) and 54(c), M.R.Civ.P., to divest wife of her interest in joint tenancy property and provide for payment of alimony in lieu thereof. Libra v. Libra, 157 M 252, 484 P2d 748, (1971), overruling Emery v. Emery, 122 M 201, 200 P2d 251 (1948), and affirming rule of Johnson v. Johnson, 137 M 11, 349 P2d 310 (1960).

MISCELLANEOUS

Parent-Child Relationship Thwarted — Equitable Estoppel Precluding Payment of Child Support: When Stiles and his wife separated, he was given responsibility for the care of his newborn son. Because Stiles was in the military at the time, he asked his sister, Cynthia, if she would care for the child for a short time while he fulfilled his duties in the Navy. Cynthia agreed, but immediately sought legal custody of the child, and physical custody of the child was ultimately granted to her by a California court. She often did not comply with court orders resulting from her custody efforts, including orders to allow Stiles visitation with the child. Stiles initially offered to pay for the child's care, but Cynthia refused any money, saying it was not needed. Nevertheless, Stiles did provide ongoing health insurance for the child. Over a decade later, Cynthia applied for and was granted public assistance, assigning any right to child support to the state. The Child Support Enforcement Division established Stiles's support obligation at $511 a month. Stiles asked Cynthia to sign a waiver of this obligation, but she refused. Stiles petitioned for judicial review, and the District Court remanded to an administrative law judge to make findings regarding Stiles's claim that Cynthia had waived her right to receive child support or that she was equitably estopped from asserting or assigning those rights. The administrative law judge found that the requisite elements of waiver and estoppel were present, and the District Court upheld the findings, holding that because Cynthia had no right to child support, she could not convey to the state rights greater than those to which she was entitled. The state appealed, asserting that the court erred when it held that estoppel and waiver applied to relieve Stiles of the obligation to provide support. The Supreme Court concluded that all six elements of equitable estoppel were met and that Cynthia had no right to receive child support from Stiles either retroactively or prospectively. Cynthia waived her right to support through her language and conduct. Nothing in the record indicated that the child's needs were not being met, and the court declined to order additional support. Although a parent is still responsible for support even in cases of voluntary relinquishment of parental rights, Stiles's relinquishment was involuntary. The court declined to hold Stiles to normal parental responsibilities under these unique circumstances, given that the child's best interests were being served, Stiles provided health insurance for the child at all times, and Stiles was thwarted by Cynthia in his attempts to have a parent-child relationship and was not attempting to exploit narrow legal technicalities to avoid undisputed court-ordered support obligations awarded at the time of dissolution. Stiles v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2000 MT 257, 301 M 482, 10 P3d 819, 57 St. Rep. 1054 (2000), distinguishing Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 190 M 66, 618 P2d 867 (1980), In re Marriage of Neiss, 228 M 479, 743 P2d 1022 (1987), and In re Support of Krug, 231 M 78, 751 P2d 171 (1988).

Construction of Settlement Agreement Provision for Payment of Attorney Fees — Refusal to Allow Fees Upheld: When Kitty and Bernard divorced in 1983, they entered into a property settlement agreement that provided that neither would make child support payments to the other, although the three children of the parties were to live with Bernard. The agreement also provided that "Bernard agrees to pay [Kitty] all attorney's fees and costs incurred in modifying the Decree of Dissolution or the [settlement] agreement in the event there is a change of custody and a support amount required". In 1987, the parties' oldest daughter went to live with Kitty, and in 1990, Bernard moved the District Court to modify the divorce decree and determine the the child support obligations of both parties. Kitty filed a cross-motion. The Supreme Court held that the District Court made no error when it refused to grant Kitty her attorney fees. The Supreme Court noted that only the change in custody occurred when the oldest daughter moved, that Kitty incurred fees only when she elected to file a cross-motion. The Supreme Court also poited out that the parties were of approximately equal earning capacity. In re Marriage of Widhalm/Miller, 279 M 97, 926 P2d 748, 53 St. Rep. 1067 (1996).

Lack of Hearing Record on Support Modification — Vacation of District Court Decree Required: Pamela filed a motion to amend the decree dissolving her marriage, in order to increase child support payments, and a motion to hold her ex-husband, Earl, in contempt for failure to pay child support. The District Court held a hearing, which Earl did not attend. Based upon the hearing, of which no record was made, the District Court modified the decree by increasing Earl's child support payments. Earl was also ordered to pay Pamela's attorney fees and costs. In response, Earl filed a Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), motion for relief from the judgment, but that motion was denied when the District Court failed to rule. Citing Malley v. Malley, 190 M 141, 619 P2d 531 (1980), the Supreme Court held that without a record, the Supreme Court could not determine the change in circumstances justifying the amended decree and Earl was thereby denied effective appellate review. The District Court's order was vacated, and the case was remanded for a hearing on the merits of Pamela's motion. In re Marriage of Long, 268 M 187, 885 P2d 533, 51 St. Rep. 1252 (1994).

No Jurisdiction for Retroactive Modification of Order Providing Insurance for Children — Duplicative Insurance for Children Not Reimbursable: Parties stipulated that mother would continue to provide health insurance for the children until relieved of the obligation by final decree. About 4 months before the decree, father unilaterally purchased insurance, notifying mother but not the court. Mother sought reimbursement for the months of dual coverage, but father failed to pay. In an order on a separate motion, the trial court denied reimbursement, stating that mother should have suspended her policy upon learning that father had obtained insurance. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had no jurisdiction to retroactively modify its own order providing support for the children and that the modification constituted an abuse of discretion by requiring mother to act in opposition to its own order. The case was remanded for issuance of an order requiring reimbursement to mother for the money she paid for premiums following father's unilateral action of providing insurance prior to entry of the final order. (See 1995 amendment.) In re Marriage of Neal, 267 M 455, 884 P2d 789, 51 St. Rep. 1109 (1994).

Award of Attorney Fees Based Upon Property Settlement Agreement Upheld: Debra and Kenneth were divorced, settling their differences in support, maintenance, and property division by signing an agreement addressing all issues. The agreement also provided that if one of the parties had to pay a debt of the other, the paying party could recoup the payment with interest and fees. Later, Debra sought reimbursement for debts that belonged to Kenneth but that were not disclosed at the time of the divorce. The Supreme Court held that attorney fees were properly payable under the language of the agreement. The fact that there was no clear winner in the proceedings and that there was no showing by Debra that she was without resources to pay her own fees was irrelevant because the award of fees was pursuant to the agreement and not pursuant to statute. In re Marriage of Craib & Rhodes, 266 M 483, 880 P2d 1379, 51 St. Rep. 937 (1994).

Failure to Disclose Income Tax Debt in Violation of Property Settlement Agreement — Liability for Tax Debt by Nondisclosing Party Upheld: Kenneth and Debra were divorced and settled disputes over child support, maintenance, and property division by an agreement that contained language providing that each had disclosed each other's debts and that if either later became obligated for a debt of the other, the other spouse could recover the amount paid, with interest and attorney fees. After the divorce, Debra discovered that Kenneth had not paid state and federal income taxes for 3 years during their marriage and that, as a signer of a joint return, Debra was required to pay both tax debts. The Supreme Court held that there was no error in requiring Kenneth to reimburse Debra for 100% of the parties' tax liability because (1) Debra's employer withheld sufficient amounts to pay her liability; (2) Kenneth had not disclosed the debt, thus violating the parties' agreement; and (3) had Debra known that the taxes were not to be paid, she could have filed a separate return. In re Marriage of Craib & Rhodes, 266 M 483, 880 P2d 1379, 51 St. Rep. 937 (1994).

Refusal to Offset Medical Expense Arrearages by Amount of Donated Funds Upheld: Dale and Sandy were divorced in 1986. In January 1991, the District Court issued an order modifying the original decree to make Dale responsible for part of his daughter's medical costs. In March of 1991, a snowmobile club in Lincoln, Montana, held a fundraiser and donated $5,000 to Sandy, to be used for the daughter's medical expenses. However, the money was not used for the daughter's expenses. Dale argued that the amount given to Sandy should be offset against his obligation to pay medical expenses. The Supreme Court held that Dale had an independent obligation under the January order to pay medical expenses and that if he wanted that obligation modified subsequent to the fundraiser, he should have petitioned the District Court for a modification. Because he failed to petition for a modification, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to reduce Dale's medical arrearages by the $5,000 given to Sandy. (See 1995 amendment.) In re Marriage of Malquist, 266 M 447, 880 P2d 1357, 51 St. Rep. 914 (1994).

Modification Proper Despite Wife's Limited Capacity: After the parties' divorce, the husband, Arthur, was given an opportunity to retire early from the railroad. He contacted his ex-wife, Shirley, and the parties modified the divorce settlement to allow him to take early retirement. At the hearing to modify the decree, Shirley's attorney argued that the modification was inequitable and that Shirley had been diagnosed with a schizoaffective disorder so that she was unable to give an informed consent to the modification. The Supreme Court held that the evidence indicated that Shirley was better off under the new agreement and that the evidence also showed that the modification negotiations between the parties were amiable and that Shirley had consulted with her adult children and parents prior to signing the agreement. In re Marriage of Brownell, 263 M 78, 865 P2d 307, 50 St. Rep. 1714 (1993).

No Error in Clarification of Visitation Rights Without Advance Notice: At a hearing to determine proper levels of child support, the District Court granted father's oral motion to modify certain aspects of the visitation schedule to change his visitation day from Monday to Thursday, to clarify summer visitation, and to allow additional visits when his relatives visited from out of town. Mother claimed the modification was in error because she was not provided advance notice as required by this section. The Supreme Court noted that mother's counsel was able to discuss these matters at the hearing and raise mother's concerns. No prejudice resulted from the lack of notice because the modification was only a clarification of visitation resulting from some confusion over the previous schedule and was considered in the best interest of the child. In re Marriage of Wackler, 258 M 12, 850 P2d 963, 50 St. Rep. 406 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Hunt, 264 M 159, 870 P2d 720, 51 St. Rep. 209 (1994).

No Equitable Modification of Child Support Decree Upon Agreement of Parties: Wife and husband were divorced after several years of marriage, and the District Court awarded custody of the couple's two children to the wife, with visitation awarded to the husband. The wife remarried a year later and shortly thereafter moved to Nebraska. At all times, the wife kept the Missoula County Attorney's Office informed of her whereabouts and brought a URESA (replaced by UIFSA) action against her former husband for back child support. Husband made few attempts to contact his children, even though he knew where they were living. Wife's new husband later adopted the children, and wife sought back child support for those payments up until the time the children were adopted, which payments the District Court awarded. The Supreme Court distinguished the case from State ex rel. Blakeslee v. Horton, 222 M 351, 722 P2d 1148 (1986), stating that there was no implicit agreement between the parties for one parent to give up child support in exchange for the other parent giving up visitation. Wife always sought to enforce her right to child support and made no attempt to discourage her former husband from exercising his right to visitation. Husband gave up visitation on his own, but the right to visitation is legally separate and distinct from the husband's enforceable duty to provide child support pursuant to the District Court's previous decree. In re Marriage of Bronzynski, 246 M 200, 806 P2d 8, 47 St. Rep. 1853 (1990).

Failure to Allow Arguments on Inflation and Health Provisions — Reversible Error: It was reversible error to modify inflation and health provisions of an original decree without providing ample opportunity for a party to argue against the modification. In re Marriage of Forsman, 229 M 411, 747 P2d 861, 44 St. Rep. 2093 (1987).

Statutory Provisions Subject to Equitable Estoppel: The provisions of this section providing that a decree may be modified by a court as to maintenance and support only as to installments accruing subsequent to the motion for modification is subject to the doctrine of equitable estoppel upon clear and compelling evidence. Generally, the equitable principle arises when the recipient of support has expressly or impliedly consented to an arrangement other than payment of the support judgment. In applying the estoppel doctrine, the guiding principle is that while the judgment for support may be in another's name, the real beneficiaries of the judgment are the children, not the person named. In re Marriage of Cook, 223 M 293, 725 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 1732 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Neiss, 228 M 479, 743 P2d 1022, 44 St. Rep. 1695 (1987), and In re Marriage of Glanville, 272 M 22, 899 P2d 527, 52 St. Rep. 563 (1995).

Equity to Override Legally Correct Claim: The parties were divorced in 1970, and the father was ordered to pay $50 a month in child support through the Clerk of Court. No payments were ever made, and no visitation was ever sought. In 1984, the mother filed a URESA (replaced by UIFSA) action for back support. In defending the action, the father contended that the mother took the position that if he would stay out of her life and the child's life, they would stay out of his. He had no contact with either party during the ensuing 14 years. The District Court denied enforcement of the petition for child support. The Supreme Court on appeal upheld the District Court. Recognizing that the law is clear that an arrearage in child support payment cannot be modified on any retroactive basis and that child support and child visitation are separate incidents, neither being dependent or conditioned upon the other, the court found these legal principles rendered impotent when the parties mutually agreed that they be ignored and carried out the agreement in fact for 14 years. The court stated that equity could not allow the mother to participate in nullification of the purpose of the law in fact and, at the same time, allow her to claim the benefit of it in theory simply because there was a meter running which could total a dollar loss in child support but nothing to total the loss of a father-son association. The court stated that the principles of equity applied in this case did not reverse or modify any previous case law. State of Wash. ex rel. Blakeslee v. Horton, 222 M 351, 722 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 1321 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Becker, 244 M 469, 798 P2d 124, 47 St. Rep. 1729 (1990), and distinguished in In re Marriage of Bronzynski, 246 M 200, 806 P2d 8, 47 St. Rep. 1853 (1990).

Consent to Retroactive Increase in Judgment — Merits of Increase Waived: Wife obtained an increase in child support and maintenance after claiming the original amounts were not correctly determined. Husband consented to retroactively apply the increase back to the date of the original decree. This consent made it unnecessary for the Supreme Court to consider the merits of the wife's request for modification. The consent indicated the original decree was not correct. In re Marriage of Wilson, 216 M 392, 701 P2d 1372, 42 St. Rep. 894 (1985).

Modification of Incorrect Money Judgment — Interest Due on Retroactively Due Increase: If a judgment is effective from the date of entry and any changes to the judgment relate back to the entry date, it follows that interest is assessed from the date of judgment. Where a child support and maintenance decree was later modified and larger payments granted, with the increase made retroactive to the date of the original decree, interest was due on that retroactive amount, beginning on the date of the original decree. In re Marriage of Wilson, 216 M 392, 701 P2d 1372, 42 St. Rep. 894 (1985).

Custody, Support Not Left to Contract Between Parties: After dissolution of his marriage, father was granted a reduction in his child support amount. On appeal, mother argued that the original agreement between the parties at the time of dissolution as to the amount of child support created a contractual obligation that precludes modification by the trial court. The Supreme Court held that in all dissolution matters relating to children, the best interests of the children control. While terms of a contract may be introduced in evidence in certain cases, the custody and support of children are not left to contract between the parties. In re Marriage of Carlson, 214 M 209, 693 P2d 496, 41 St. Rep. 2419 (1984), followed in In re Marriage of Syverson, 281 M 1, 931 P2d 691, 54 St. Rep. 32 (1997).

Failure to Disclose Assets to Court — Extrinsic Fraud: The husband retained an attorney in a dissolution proceeding. Husband convinced the wife that only one attorney was necessary, and that attorney represented both parties, with the wife being named as the petitioner. The husband and the attorney failed to disclose to the court the balloon payment due on the house given to the wife and the value of the husband's pension. This failure to disclose relevant information to the court was extrinsic fraud and was the basis upon which to reopen a judgment dividing the marital estate. In re the Marriage of Madden, 211 M 237, 683 P2d 493, 41 St. Rep. 1332 (1984), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995). See also In re Marriage of Staudt, 216 M 196, 700 P2d 175, 42 St. Rep. 740 (1985).

"Unconscionable" — Interpretation: The interpretation of "unconscionable" as that word is used in this section must be on a case-by-case basis after scrutiny of the underlying facts and must begin with an objective standard, which is found in the basic purpose behind support payments and how that purpose is to be achieved. The purpose is to make reasonable provisions for the spouse and minor children during and after litigation, reflecting a balance between the needs of the parties and the ability of the parents to pay. The court must look at the relative positions of the parties and how close the present arrangement is to that balance. McNeff v. McNeff, 207 M 297, 673 P2d 473, 40 St. Rep. 2050 (1983).

Unilateral Modification — Contempt: The husband under a dissolution decree stopped making house payments as required by the decree. The wife, who had custody of the son and daughter, proved to have him held in contempt. After a hearing the court modified custody so that the father had custody of the son, but also held the father in contempt. Sixteen months later the husband stopped making payments again. At the hearing he alleged no changed circumstances, and was held in contempt again. A party may not unilaterally modify a decree. State ex rel. Voorhies v. District Court, 668 P2d 241, 40 St. Rep. 1368 (1983) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports).

Discovery of Income Sources, Amount, and Disposition: Husband petitioned for reduction of child support payments, claiming he had become unemployed and had no income. He refused to answer wife's interrogatories requesting information as to money he placed in his new wife's bank accounts and as to the names of the clients he had in his position as a management consultant and the income received from them. The information sought was neither irrelevant nor privileged. Wife was not seeking information as to the new wife's income, and there is no confidential information privilege for the management consultant-client relationship. It was error for the lower court to allow husband to refuse to answer. Hughes v. Hughes, 205 M 69, 666 P2d 739, 40 St. Rep. 1102 (1983).

Marital Separation Agreement Not Conveyance: A marital separation agreement is not a conveyance. A separation agreement incorporated into a divorce decree is enforceable only as a judgment. A judgment can be reopened if obtained through fraud but not for lack of fair consideration. It was error to annul a marital separation agreement under 31-2-311 (now repealed). Witbart v. Witbart, 204 M 446, 666 P2d 1217, 40 St. Rep. 994 (1983).

Remarriage as Substantial Change in Circumstances: As part of the parties' decree of dissolution, a provision terminating maintenance upon the wife's remarriage was included. The wife remarried, and the husband stopped maintenance payments. Subsequently the wife filed a motion to increase child support payments because of changed circumstances. The District Court increased the husband's child support payments approximately by the amount equivalent to the lost maintenance payments. The husband appealed. The Supreme Court, relying on Rome v. Rome, 190 M 495, 621 P2d 1090, 38 St. Rep. 50 (1981), held that in this particular case, the remarriage of the former spouse, which by terms of the decree terminated maintenance, was a substantial change of circumstances allowing for an increase in child support payments. In re Marriage of Richardson, 202 M 380, 658 P2d 398, 40 St. Rep. 155 (1983).

Order That Rental Property Granted Wife Be Placed Under Professional Management: Divorce decree granted wife a four-plex described as being among the most rentable properties in Missoula, wife to have the rental income for support. Wife moved for enforcement of various aspects of the decree, and husband complained that due to wife's mismanagement there were unnecessary vacancies in the apartments. Husband introduced evidence of a real estate agent that agent could manage the four-plex and keep it full for approximately a 5% commission. Trial court properly directed that the four-plex be managed by a competent real estate person and that husband pay the management fee. Baker v. Baker, 198 M 371, 646 P2d 522, 39 St. Rep. 1031 (1982).

Prohibiting Sale of Residence Past Majority Age of Child — Abuse of Discretion: A 1971 dissolution decree apportioned only the personal property of the parties. In 1981, in a proceeding for modification of the decree, the District Court abused its discretion by ordering that the parties' residence not be sold until the youngest child finished college at the age of 22. This in effect amounted to child support past the age of majority when no express agreement or decree provision provided for such support. Torma v. Torma, 198 M 161, 645 P2d 395, 39 St. Rep. 839 (1982).

Jurisdiction Over Appeal of Untimely Modification Order: The lower court order modified the findings of fact and conclusions of law more than 15 days after submission of appellant's posttrial motions. By exceeding the time period mandated by Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., the District Court divested itself of jurisdiction to determine the motion, and its order was a nullity. The original notice of appeal from the second decree, based on that order, was untimely under Rule 5, M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.), and the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction as to the second decree. However, the jurisdictional defect is cured by the appellants having lodged an appeal to the first decree. Sell v. Sell, 193 M 88, 630 P2d 222, 38 St. Rep. 956 (1981).

Use of Father's Surname in Best Interest of Child: The District Court erred in allowing the children to use the surname of their stepfather. Under the circumstances presented, it is in the best interest of the children to use the father's surname until the children reach an age when they can fully understand the circumstances of their parents' dissolution. In re the Marriage of Firman, 187 M 465, 610 P2d 178 (1980).

Review of Awards: If there is no clear abuse of discretion resulting in substantial injustice, the award made by the District Court will not be disturbed. Grenfell v. Grenfell, 182 M 229, 596 P2d 205 (1979), following Brown v. Brown, 179 M 417, 587 P2d 361 (1978).

Continuing Jurisdiction of Sister State to Modify Custody Order After Child Becomes Resident of Montana: Under section 21-139, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), court of sister state entering valid custody order retained continuing jurisdiction to modify such award after party changed domicile to this state since change in child's domicile did not in itself deprive court of sister state of its jurisdiction; courts of either state could possess jurisdiction resulting in concurrent jurisdiction of matter. Corkill v. Cloninger, 153 M 142, 454 P2d 911 (1969), overruling Application of Enke, 129 M 353, 287 P2d 19 (1955), and affirming rule of State ex rel. Nipp v. District Court, 46 M 425, 128 P 590 (1912).

Attorney General's Opinions

Fee for Filing Petition for Contested Amendment of Parenting Plan Not Applicable to Petition to Modify Child Support: Modification of child support pursuant to this section is a separate procedure that does not necessarily entail amendment of a parenting plan pursuant to 40-4-219. Therefore, for filing purposes, a petition to modify child support is not considered a petition for amendment of a parenting plan, and it is inappropriate for a Clerk of Court to collect the $120 statutory fee for filing a petition for a contested amendment of a parenting plan under 25-1-201(1)(a) upon the filing of a petition to modify child support in an existing cause. 47 A.G. Op. 14 (1998).

Commencement Filing Fee Not Chargeable for Certain Postdissolution Proceedings: The Attorney General relied on the holding in In re Marriage of Billings, 189 M 520, 616 P2d 1104 (1980), in finding that a District Court Clerk may not charge a commencement filing fee for postdissolution of marriage action that is brought under the same cause number as the marital dissolution proceeding and that remains under the continuing jurisdiction of the District Court. 43 A.G. Op. 72 (1990).

County Attorney Not Authorized to Compromise Support Order on Behalf of Obligee: A County Attorney, in carrying out his responsibility under URESA (replaced by UIFSA) to represent obligees, may not enter into an agreement with an obligor or his agent to compromise a support order or to allow the sale of property on which a support order is a lien, since under 40-4-208 a support order may only be modified by a court. Further, 40-4-208 provides that a modification of a court support decree may affect only amounts that accrue subsequent to the motion for modification. 41 A.G. Op. 7 (1985).

1995 Amendment: Chapter 546 in (1) substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of family services or the department of social and rehabilitation services"; in (5), in two places, substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of social and rehabilitation services"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Saving Clause: Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1989 Amendment: In (1), before "the department of family services", deleted "the department of revenue"; and in (5), in two places, substituted "department of social and rehabilitation services" for "department of revenue". Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Applicability: Section 32, Ch. 702, L. 1989, provided: "[This act] applies to child support orders and modifications of child support orders issued after September 30, 1989."

1987 Amendments: Chapter 370 and Ch. 609 in two places in (5) substituted "department of revenue" for "department".

Chapter 609 near beginning of (1), after "department of revenue", inserted "the department of family services".

Case Notes

Wage Assignment Proper: This section grants a court the authority to execute a security or other guarantee for the payment of child support delinquencies in amounts equal to the total of 6 months' support payments. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in ordering husband to sign a wage assignment in the amount of $500 a month over all amounts collected for unpaid back child support and current child support. In re Marriage of Hunt, 264 M 159, 870 P2d 720, 51 St. Rep. 209 (1994).

Supreme Court's Adoption of Child Support Guidelines Not Grounds for Modification: The District Court failed to make findings of fact showing a change in husband's circumstances that supported a reduction of child support below the amount set by the original decree. The Supreme Court's adoption of child support guidelines was not in itself a sufficient change of circumstances to justify the modification. Therefore, the modification was reversed and the case was remanded. In re Marriage of Kukes, 258 M 324, 852 P2d 655, 50 St. Rep. 553 (1993).

Child Support Guidelines — Bankruptcy Payments Representing Principal on Mortgage Payments Improperly Deducted: As part of an order for child support, the District Court allowed Alan to deduct payments made by order of a bankruptcy trustee. The Supreme Court held that it was error under Rule 5 of the Guidelines for Determining Child Support for the District Court to allow the deductibility of all of the bankruptcy payments in calculating Alan's child support payments. The rule limits deductions to legitimate business expenses, but part of the bankruptcy payments went to increase Alan's equity in his home located on his ranch. The Supreme Court remanded to the District Court for recalculation of all factors relating to child support. In re Marriage of Nikolaisen, 257 M 1, 847 P2d 287, 50 St. Rep. 133 (1993).

Personal Property "Security or Other Guaranty" Pending Payment of Delinquent Spousal Support: Until support obligations have been paid, personal property awarded in a dissolution decree can serve as "security or other guaranty". The District Court stayed within guidelines and did not abuse its discretion in ordering ex-spouse to deliver personal property belonging to former husband after payment of delinquent support obligation. In re Marriage of Castor, 249 M 495, 817 P2d 665, 48 St. Rep. 807 (1991).

1999 Amendment: Chapter 579 at beginning of (1) substituted "In a proceeding to establish or modify a child support order, a district court may acquire" for "A court of this state that is competent to decide child support matters may exercise" and at end deleted "in a child support determination in the initial or modification decree"; inserted (2) requiring district court to recognize and, if petitioned, enforce child support order issued by another state; inserted (3) prohibiting district court from establishing conflicting support order or modifying existing order entitled to recognition; inserted (4) requiring district court when interpreting support order to apply law of issuing state; inserted (5) requiring district court to apply statute of limitations of issuing state in action to enforce arrears under support order; inserted (6) authorizing district court to modify support order issued by another state only after meeting requirements of 40-5-194 and standards of modification of federal interstate support orders; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 328 in introduction, after "nonresident", substituted "individual or the individual's guardian or conservator" for "parent"; in (1) substituted "individual is personally served with notice within this state in accordance with Rule 4B, Montana Rules of Civil Procedure" for "nonresident parent has resided with the child in this state"; in (2) substituted jurisdiction by consent for jurisdiction by reason of maintaining a marital domicile in this state from which the child was conceived or adopted; in (4), before "adopted", deleted "conceived or"; inserted (5) through (7) relating to an individual residing in this state and providing prenatal expenses or support for the child, a child residing in this state because of the individual's acts or directives, and a child that may have been conceived in this state by the individual; and made minor changes in style.

Preamble: The preamble to Ch. 459, L. 1989, provided: "WHEREAS, the state of Montana has both a social and an economic interest in ensuring that minor children residing in or having significant connections with this state receive ample financial support from their nonresident parents; and

WHEREAS, the procedure established by the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act of 1968 (URESA), while valuable in many instances, sometimes causes delay in obtaining support orders; and

WHEREAS, empowering state district courts to adjudicate child support actions over nonresident parents with ties to the state of Montana will enhance child support collection efforts; and

WHEREAS, enactment of [this act] [40-4-210] will permit Montana courts to exercise the most extensive jurisdiction over child support actions involving nonresident parents as is permissible under the constitutions of the United States and Montana."

Severability: Section 2, Ch. 459, L. 1989, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Child Support — No Jurisdiction Over Father When No Minimum Contacts by Father With Montana: Verleen and Howard were divorced in California, and Howard was ordered to pay child support. Thereafter, Verleen moved with the children to Montana, where she sought and obtained a decree in Missoula County to modify the California court order with respect to visitation and the amount of child support. Howard was personally served in California but did not respond to the motion. Later, Verleen obtained a default judgment against Howard. Later still, Verleen sought an order in California that Howard's home be sold to satisfy the Montana judgments. Howard responded that the Montana court had no jurisdiction. The Supreme Court held that while a question of waiver was raised because of Howard's failure to raise the issue of personal jurisdiction under a Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), motion, the correct analysis is whether the District Court ever had personal jurisdiction over Howard. The Supreme Court held that because the requirements of this section had not been satisfied, the only method under which jurisdiction could otherwise obtain was under Rule 4B, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). Citing Kulko v. Calif. Superior Court, 436 US 84 (1978), the Supreme Court held that there were simply no facts to suggest that Howard had any "minimum contacts" with Montana to warrant a Montana court obtaining jurisdiction over him because Howard's only connection with Montana is that his children now reside here. Heinle v. District Court, 260 M 489, 861 P2d 171, 50 St. Rep. 1141 (1993). However, see Cardneaux v. Cardneaux, 1998 MT 256, 291 M 230, 967 P2d 410, 55 St. Rep. 1055 (1998) (father's stipulation to modify Louisiana child support judgment constituted consent to the District Court's exercise of personal jurisdiction for purposes of modifying both the Louisiana judgment and the court's earlier order declining modification).

40-4-211. Jurisdiction — commencement of parenting proceedings.

Commissioners' Note

The provisions of the Act concerning custody adjudication are integrated with the provisions of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act, promulgated by the Conference in 1968. The latter Act deals with judicial jurisdiction to adjudicate a custody case when more than one state has an interest in the litigation. The Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act governs the substantive and procedural aspects of custody adjudication once the court has decided that it can and should hear the case on the merits. States considering the adoption of this Act should also consider adopting the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. If that Act is adopted in the state, subsections (a) [(1)], (b), [(2)] and (c)[(3)], which are intended to track the interstate jurisdictional sections of that Act, should be omitted, and the remaining subsections should be relettered, accordingly.

The court authorized to hear custody cases has not been identified. In many states the legislature will want to consider the establishment of a Family Court for these purposes; in other states the trial court of general jurisdiction will be named.

Subsection (d) [(4)] makes an important distinction between custody disputes commenced by parents and those commenced by some other person interested in a particular child. A custody proceeding is commenced automatically whenever one of the parents files for a dissolution of legal separation under Part III [Chapter 4]. Also, a parent may commence a custody proceeding without filing a petition for dissolution or legal separation. On the other hand, subsection (d)(2) [(4)(b)] makes it clear that if one of the parents has physical custody of the child, a non-parent may not bring an action to contest that parent's right to continuing custody under the "best interest of the child" standard of Section 402 [40-4-212]. If a non-parent (a grandparent or an aunt or uncle, perhaps) wants to acquire custody, he must commence proceedings under the far more stringent standards for intervention provided in the typical Juvenile Court Act. In short, this subsection has been devised to protect the "parental rights" of custodial parents and to insure that intrusions upon those rights will occur only when the care the parent is providing the child falls short of the minimum standard imposed by the community at large—the standard incorporated in the neglect or delinquency definitions of the state's Juvenile Court Act. Once a custody proceeding is commenced, the court should be able to hear the views of all interested persons; Subsection (d) [(4)] therefore authorizes the judge to permit intervention by relatives who would not have been allowed to commence an action.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 277 in (1)(c)(i) after "has been abandoned" inserted reference to surrender to emergency services provider; inserted (4)(a)(iii) regarding custody; inserted (7) regarding custody proceeding; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 414 in (4)(b) after "parent" inserted "if the person has established a child-parent relationship with the child", after "child" substituted "resides" for "is permanently resident", and after "found" deleted "but only if the child is not physically residing with one of the child's parents"; inserted (6) defining child-parent relationship; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 414, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, it is undisputed that parents have a fundamental right to autonomy in child-rearing decisions; and

WHEREAS, the United States Supreme Court has long recognized a constitutionally protected interest of parents to raise their children without state interference; and

WHEREAS, the liberty interest guaranteed by the 14th amendment to the United States Constitution includes freedom to engage in any of the common occupations of life, to acquire useful knowledge, to marry, to establish a home, and to bring up children; and

WHEREAS, the freedom of personal choice in matters of family life is a fundamental liberty interest protected by the 14th amendment to the United States Constitution; and

WHEREAS, the integrity of the family unit has found protection in the due process clause of the 14th amendment, the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment, and the 9th amendment; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court has recognized the constitutionally protected rights of natural parents to parent their children; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Legislature recognizes that the careful protection of parental rights is not merely a matter of legislative grace but is constitutionally required; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Constitution recognizes the constitutional rights of children; and

WHEREAS, Article II, section 15, of the Montana Constitution provides that the rights of persons under 18 years of age shall include but not be limited to all the fundamental rights of Article II, unless specifically precluded by law which enhances the protection of the persons; and

WHEREAS, these fundamental rights include but are not limited to freedom; pursuing life's basic necessities, enjoying and defending life and liberty, and seeking safety, health, and happiness in lawful ways and the rights of individual dignity and privacy; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature finds that there are times when the rights of parents must be balanced against the rights of children; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature further finds that the courts need direction and authority to consider the best interests of children in parenting and visitation matters; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature finds it is appropriate to establish standards and direction for resolving these issues."

1997 Amendment: Chapter 343 in (1), in first clause in two places, substituted "parenting" for "child custody" and near end of clause, after "initial or", substituted "amended" for "modification"; in (1)(a)(ii), near middle after "person", deleted "claiming his custody or for other reason"; in (1)(d), near end after "determine", substituted "parenting" for "custody"; in (2), at end before "determination", substituted "parenting" for "child custody"; in (3), at end, substituted "parenting of the child" for "his custody"; in (4), at beginning, substituted "parenting plan" for "child custody"; at beginning of (4)(a)(ii) and in (4)(b), near beginning after "petition for", substituted "parenting" for "custody of the child"; in (4)(b), after "petition for", substituted "parenting" for "custody of the child" and near end, after "is not", substituted "physically residing with" for "in the custody of"; in (5), in first sentence near beginning before "proceeding", substituted "parenting" for "child custody", near middle substituted "caretaker" for "custodian", and substituted "those persons with whom the child is physically residing" for "those persons having physical custody of the child"; and made minor changes in style.

Saving Clause: Section 41, Ch. 343, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 42, Ch. 343, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 43, Ch. 343, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] applies to proceedings begun after October 1, 1997, including proceedings regarding modification of orders or decrees existing on October 1, 1997."

Montana Changes: In subsection (5) Montana deletes "and" following "guardian" and inserts "those persons having physical custody of the child and all other contestants", following "custodian". This section is substantially similar to section 3 of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act; the commissioners' note to section 3 of the UCCJA is compiled under 40-7-104 (now repealed).

GENERAL

Parent's Failure to Pay Support Not Basis for Nonparent's Standing to Seek Custody: A parent's failure to provide adequately for a child's basic necessities when financially able to do so is an express statutory basis for a finding that the child is a youth in need of care and is also a statutory exception to the requirement that a natural parent consent to the adoption of a child. However, this section contains no provision under which a parent's failure to provide support when able to do so can serve as a basis for a nonparent's standing to seek custody of that parent's child, nor does failure to pay child support when able constitute voluntary relinquishment of a parent's right to custody. Girard v. Williams, 1998 MT 231, 291 M 49, 966 P2d 1155, 55 St. Rep. 965 (1998).

Voluntary Relinquishment Defined — Abandonment by Incarceration Not Equated With Voluntary Relinquishment: In determining whether a nonparent had standing to petition for child custody based on voluntary relinquishment, the Supreme Court held that that determination is dependent on the particular facts and circumstances of a given case. Generally, however, in order for a parent to voluntarily relinquish the right to custody of a child, the parent must manifest an intentional renouncement of the right to custody. Custodial rights cannot be relinquished unconsciously or accidentally. In finding that a father's incarceration constituted abandonment of his children in the present case, the District Court equated abandonment via incarceration to voluntary relinquishment. This section does not mention abandonment by a natural parent as a circumstance under which a nonparent may seek custody, and abandonment terminology has no place in determining a nonparent's standing in custody proceedings under this section. The mere fact of incarceration did not rise to the level of a voluntary relinquishment when considered in conjunction with the father's actions to maintain contact with his children, establish his paternity, and seek their custody. In order to establish standing pursuant to this section, a nonparent must present evidence sufficient to convincingly prove that the parent voluntarily relinquished custody rights. Girard v. Williams, 1998 MT 231, 291 M 49, 966 P2d 1155, 55 St. Rep. 965 (1998).

Indians — Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Dissolution of Marriage — Different Residences of Parties — Factors to Be Considered — Bertelson Followed: Stacey, an enrolled member of the Fort Peck Tribes, married Shane, a non-Indian. After the marriage ceremony, Stacey returned to the Fort Peck Indian Reservation and Shane went to Forsyth, where his parents lived and where he worked. Some time later, Stacey had a child who also became an enrolled member and lived with Stacey on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. Still later, Shane filed a dissolution action in a state District Court. The District Court ordered joint custody and ordered that Shane would be the primary residential custodian. Approximately 1 month later, the Fort Peck Tribal Court awarded temporary custody to Stacey. She then filed a motion in District Court under Rules 12(h) and 60, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to dismiss Shane's dissolution action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The District Court held that it had subject matter jurisdiction over the case and issued a final decree of dissolution. In that decree, the District Court held that the parties' child had significant contacts both off and on the reservation, held that the District Court shared concurrent jurisdiction with the tribal court, and therefore denied Stacey's motion to dismiss. The Supreme Court reviewed its previous holdings regarding tribal jurisdiction and child custody jurisdiction under the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. The Supreme Court also reviewed the purposes of the Indian Child Welfare Act, which, while not strictly applicable to the case before it, cautions that state courts should be careful not to erode the sovereignty of tribes and tribal courts. In reliance upon In re Bertelson, 189 M 524, 617 P2d 121 (1980), the Supreme Court held that the best interests of the child should be determined and followed in deciding whether a state or tribal court has jurisdiction for the purposes of awarding custody but that when an Indian child resides off the reservation, state courts and tribal courts share concurrent jurisdiction. The Supreme Court then held, in further reliance upon Bertelson, that even when jurisdiction is concurrent, it does not mean that states courts should exercise jurisdiction and that in deciding whether to exercise concurrent jurisdiction, the state courts should consider: (1) 40-4-102, 40-4-107, 40-7-108, and this section; (2) certain policy issues; and (3) the residence of the parties pursuant to 1-1-215. For this reason, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for a determination of the residence of Stacey and her child, saying that if the District Court determines that both reside on the reservation, the District Court must dismiss the case. However, if the District Court finds that Stacey's child is not a resident of the reservation and that the District Court shares jurisdiction with the tribal court, the District Court must then consider factors from Bertelson, previously discussed by the Supreme Court, to determine whether the District Court or the tribal court is better able to determine the best interests of the child. In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 M 399, 956 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 147 (1998).

Automatic Transfer of Custody to Surviving Parent — Grandparents' Lack of Standing to Petition for Custody: Lora lived with her children at her parents' home for 5 months. She decided to go to California, leaving the children with their grandparents. Neither of the children's fathers had been in contact with the children. Although the father of the oldest child paid child support, he never exercised visitation. Lora was killed in a car accident on her way back to Montana, at which point both fathers stepped forward and asserted themselves as ready and willing to care for the children. The grandparents contended that a lack of parental custody by the fathers, coupled with the grandparents' physical control of the children, gave them standing under this section to petition for custody. The District Court held, and the Supreme Court affirmed, that when one parent dies, the surviving parent automatically assumes the right to custody of the couple's children and that the lack of evidence that either father had voluntarily relinquished his right of custody precluded the grandparents' standing to petition for custody. A lack of visitation, in and of itself, was insufficient to divest Jeff of parental rights in light of the fact that he acknowledged paternity and monetarily supported the child. In re Estate, Conservatorship, & Guardianship of K.M., Kr.O., & Ka.O., 280 M 256, 929 P2d 870, 53 St. Rep. 1392 (1996), followed in Girard v. Williams, 1998 MT 231, 291 M 49, 966 P2d 1155, 55 St. Rep. 965 (1998).

Concurrent State Jurisdiction Under UCCJA Determined by PKPA: Pamela Shupe obtained a divorce decree from Utah granting her sole custody of the couple's child. The father, Yancy, petitioned for a change of custody in Montana. The Supreme Court determined that each state had adopted the UCCJA and therefore each state had jurisdiction to make a custody determination. The Supreme Court stated that the PKPA had been enacted to remedy problems of concurrent state jurisdiction under the UCCJA. The Supreme Court held that because Utah had jurisdiction and had not declined to exercise its jurisdiction, then under the PKPA, Montana was not authorized to modify the original custody determination of Utah. In re Marriage of Shupe, 276 M 409, 916 P2d 744, 53 St. Rep. 447 (1996).

Appointment of Attorney for Children Not Necessary — Children's Position Adequately Developed: In a change of custody proceeding, mother's motion that the court appoint an attorney for the children was not ruled on and the court did not state why an appointment was not made. The Supreme Court carefully reviewed the record to determine if an attorney was required for the children. The court found substantial expert and other evidence, largely uncontradicted, that stepfather subjected the children to ritual satanic sexual abuse, that the boy had expressed suicidal wishes, that the father and his subsequent wife were better suited to have custody, that the children were progressing well in the father's custody and had not progressed well in the mother's custody, and that the mother behaved erratically toward the children and sometimes acted contrary to the children's best interests. The Supreme Court found that the lower court did not err in failing to appoint an attorney for the children because the issues as to their best interests were well-developed. The court also expressly overruled the holding in In re Gullette, 173 M 132, 566 P2d 396 (1977), that in a contested guardianship proceeding in which custody is in serious dispute, the court must appoint independent counsel for the child or make a finding stating why the appointment was not necessary. McDowell v. McDowell, 263 M 252, 868 P2d 1250, 51 St. Rep. 42 (1994).

Jurisdictional Requirements Not Met — Inapplicability of Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act: The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act does not apply unless the jurisdictional conditions of this section are met, including whether: (1) a determination of the child's home state has been made; (2) the child and parents or at least one contestant has a significant connection with Montana and substantial evidence is available in Montana concerning the child's present or future care, training, and personal relationships; (3) the child is physically present in this state and has been abandoned or an emergency situation necessitates the child's protection; or (4) another state has jurisdiction or has declined jurisdiction because Montana is a more appropriate forum and it is in the child's best interest that Montana assume jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Erler, 261 M 65, 862 P2d 12, 50 St. Rep. 1195 (1993), distinguished in In re Marriage of Shupe, 276 M 409, 916 P2d 744, 53 St. Rep. 447 (1996).

Marriage and Divorce Law Inapplicable to Nonparent Seeking Child Custody: As part of a change in custody proceeding conducted under the marriage and divorce statutes, the District Court erred in granting to a nonparent the custody of a child who was neither a natural child nor adopted. The proper procedure to be followed is contained in the child abuse, neglect, and dependency statutes. Although the nonparent apparently fit the requirements for custodian under either scenario, the case was remanded for correct procedural consideration under Title 41, ch. 3. In re Marriage of Miller, 251 M 300, 825 P2d 189, 49 St. Rep. 36 (1992), following In re Doney, 174 M 282, 570 P2d 575 (1977), and overruling a contrary prior holding in In re Custody of C.C., K.C., & B.C., 215 M 72, 695 P2d 816 (1985).

Jurisdiction Under Abuse and Neglect Statutes Based on Presence of Child in State: In a case in which the natural parents were residents of Wyoming but the child was born in Montana and present in Montana, the District Court had jurisdiction in an action to terminate parental rights under the abuse and neglect statutes, 41-3-601 through 41-3-612, based on the presence of the child in Montana. The District Court did not err when, based on lack of standing, it denied a motion to dismiss Catholic Social Services' petition to terminate the father's rights. A petition to terminate parental rights was not a petition for adoption, and the father's consent under 40-8-111 (now repealed) was not necessary. In re Parental Rights of Baby Girl W., 249 M 206, 814 P2d 976, 48 St. Rep. 643 (1991).

Venue for Custody Dispute in County Where Child Resides: The petitioner filed for custody and visitation in the county where he resided. The lower court denied the respondent's motion for a change of venue to the county where she and the child lived. The Supreme Court reversed on the grounds that the action was controlled by the Uniform Child Custody and Jurisdiction Act, not the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act, so that the proper venue was the county in which the child resided. In re Custody of C.A.C., 246 M 291, 806 P2d 19, 47 St. Rep. 2032 (1990).

General Jurisdictional Rules for Divorce, Custody, and Child Support: A divorce action is generally in rem as to the status of the parties and in personam as to other matters. Thus, the lower court did not need in personam jurisdiction to grant dissolution to wife living in Montana when husband was in Tennessee. The court could grant the wife custody of the children living in Montana, but not of the child living in Tennessee with his father, since this section specifically granted jurisdiction to determine custody of children living in Montana. The court was without jurisdiction to award child support because the court did not have in personam jurisdiction over the father under Rule 4, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). In re Marriage of Appleton, 234 M 345, 763 P2d 658, 45 St. Rep. 1959 (1988).

Adoption by Stepparent — No Mandatory Termination of Grandparents' Visitation: There is no clear legislative intent or public policy that mandates termination of visitation for natural grandparents when a grandchild is adopted by a stepparent. Kanvick v. Reilly, 233 M 324, 760 P2d 743, 45 St. Rep. 1524 (1988).

Continuing Court Jurisdiction Regarding Maintenance, Support, Property Disposition, and Child Custody — New Judge: Since under Montana law a court has continuing jurisdiction in matters of maintenance, support, property disposition, and child custody, a newly appointed judge may make findings in a case he or she has not heard, may need to hear new evidence, and is entitled to rely on the record established in the case. In re Marriage of Ensign, 227 M 357, 739 P2d 479, 44 St. Rep. 1146 (1987).

Final Custody Plan and Maintenance Schedule Required: Where the District Court on one hand stated that the sale of the family home "should be retained as an available option" and on the other hand set terms of a 30-day buy-out or sale period, the case was remanded for determination of a final custody plan and maintenance schedule, since resolution of custody and maintenance hinged on sale of the home. In re Marriage of Ensign, 227 M 357, 739 P2d 479, 44 St. Rep. 1146 (1987).

Statutory Conditions Met — Children's Best Interests Served in Montana: The District Court properly exercised jurisdiction under this section by: (1) establishing a significant connection of the father and children with Montana; (2) noting that there was substantial evidence available locally that was relevant to the custody issue; and (3) finding that a Utah court declined to accept jurisdiction, deferring to a Montana court which it expressly found to be the more convenient forum. In re Marriage of Cook, 223 M 293, 725 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 1732 (1986).

Management of Children's Accounts: District Court did not abuse its discretion when it allowed husband to manage financial accounts of the children that were to be kept separate from accounts of the husband and wife. In re Marriage of Williams, 220 M 232, 714 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 319 (1986).

Child Custody Jurisdiction: According to 40-7-104 (now repealed), the provisions of 40-4-211 determine whether a state has a sufficient interest in a child custody dispute to assume jurisdiction. In the present case, Montana does not have the authority under any of the provisions of 40-4-211 to hear the present custody proceeding. Even if Montana had such authority, several provisions of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA), including 40-7-107 and 40-7-108, would confer jurisdiction in the Arizona court. In re Marriage of Brown, 218 M 14, 706 P2d 116, 42 St. Rep. 1360 (1985).

Best Interests Criteria — Criteria Not Including Past Contacts: The plain meaning of the criteria in 40-4-211(1)(b)(ii) focuses on "present or future" care, protection, etc., and an argument that concentrates on the past situation of the children does not satisfy the jurisdictional requirements of the subsection. In re Marriage of Lance, 213 M 182, 690 P2d 979, 41 St. Rep. 2032 (1984).

Significant Connection and Substantial Evidence Not Limited to One State: The husband petitioned in Montana for a change of custody of his daughter. The former wife resided in California. Because the daughter was sent by the wife on two occasions to reside with the husband and attend school, the Supreme Court upheld the District Court's jurisdiction of a petition to change custody. The Supreme Court noted that 40-4-211 does not require that the child's only significant connection be with Montana in order for a District Court to assume jurisdiction. The same is true of the availability of substantial evidence concerning the child's present or future care, protection, training, and personal relationships. Bolton v. Bolton, 212 M 212, 690 P2d 401, 41 St. Rep. 1698 (1984), followed in In re Custody of N.G.H., 1998 MT 212, 290 M 426, 963 P2d 1275, 55 St. Rep. 892 (1998).

When "Continuing Jurisdiction" Applicable: The Supreme Court held that the father's reliance on the doctrine of "continuing jurisdiction" as being the sole jurisdictional test in interstate custody disputes is misplaced. That doctrine is linked to 40-4-219 regarding jurisdiction to modify prior custody decrees. In those custody cases where a state other than Montana has a possible interest, the jurisdictional requirements of 40-4-211 must be met before a court may assert "continuing jurisdiction" under 40-4-219. In this custody dispute, the issue is one of overcoming the premier jurisdictional hurdle by establishing one of the disjunctive requirements of 40-4-211. The father established that both he and the child have a significant connection with Montana and there is substantial pertinent evidence here. Bolton v. Bolton, 212 M 212, 690 P2d 401, 41 St. Rep. 1698 (1984), followed in In re Marriage of Harper, 235 M 41, 764 P2d 1283, 45 St. Rep. 2145 (1988), In re Marriage of Alpert/Hameline, 258 M 344, 852 P2d 669, 50 St. Rep. 564 (1993), and in In re Marriage of Miller/Beam, 259 M 424, 856 P2d 1378, 50 St. Rep. 863 (1993).

Determination of Improper Retention of Child: A mother was granted custody of her child in Kentucky but consented to the child's removal to Montana by its father for a visit. In determining whether the father improperly retained the child, all the circumstances surrounding the retention should be examined. The retention is not improper per se merely because the custodial parent requested return. Pierce v. Pierce, 197 M 16, 640 P2d 899, 39 St. Rep. 315 (1982).

Custody of Indian Children — Appropriate Forum: The District Court ordered Mr. and Mrs. Stanley, members of the Chippewa Cree Tribe, to return their grandchildren to Bertelson, the natural mother. On appeal, the Supreme Court remanded the case to develop a complete evidentiary record and to determine whether the tribal court is the appropriate forum. In re Bertelson, 189 M 524, 617 P2d 121, 37 St. Rep. 1682 (1980), followed in In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 M 399, 956 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 147 (1998).

Motion Granted — Preclusion of Child Custody Challenge: The mother of the child over whom a custody dispute arose was precluded from having set aside the child custody provision in the default marriage dissolution decree awarding custody to the respondent. The mother was barred by estoppel, laches, and res judicata from asserting that the respondent was not the child's natural parent. Morrell v. Giesick, 188 M 89, 610 P2d 1189 (1980).

Abandoned and Abused Child Present in Montana — Jurisdictional Test Met: When a child was present in Montana, having been abandoned by both of her natural parents, having been subjected to mistreatment and abuse, and having been threatened with further mistreatment and abuse, her situation met the test for jurisdiction expressed in 40-4-211. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

No Retroactive Application of UCCJA: Absent a clear expression of legislative purpose, retrospective application of even a procedural statute so as to affect prior proceedings of a pending action cannot be justified. Therefore, jurisdictional rulings entered before the effective date of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA) are not subject to the UCCJA. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Lack of Jurisdiction — Award Only Two Years Old — No Finding of Danger: The District Court did not have jurisdiction to modify a prior custody award made less than 2 years prior when the court made no finding that the child's present environment seriously endangers his physical, mental, moral, or emotional health. The court also lacked jurisdiction to issue an order to show cause under 40-4-220 or to modify the custody decree under 40-4-211. Strouf v. Strouf, 176 M 406, 578 P2d 746 (1978), distinguished in Connolly v. Connolly, 209 M 298, 680 P2d 568, 41 St. Rep. 720 (1984).

When Act Applies: Where second custody hearing was based on another application for change of custody after Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act became effective, and the application alleged change in circumstances based in part on events that had occurred following effective date of Act, application was governed by the Act. Holm v. Holm, 172 M 81, 560 P2d 905 (1977).

"Seize and Run" of Minor Children as Not Conferring Jurisdiction in Custody Modification Cases: District Court erred in assuming jurisdiction to award custody of minor children to father living in Montana based on children's physical presence before court where divorce and custody had been previously awarded to mother in State of Washington. Mere fact father seized children from mother living in Washington and brought them before Montana court is insufficient to establish jurisdiction over mother who has no "contacts" with State of Montana, and any attempt by Montana to exercise jurisdiction over her would be in violation of the Due Process Clause of 14th amendment to the United States Constitution. Therefore, any custody decree rendered by Montana court would not be entitled to full faith and credit, and the interstate custody battle would continue, and whatever chance the children have for stability and happiness would be lost amidst the din of warring parents. State ex rel. Muirhead v. District Court, 169 M 535, 550 P2d 1304 (1976).

OUT-OF-STATE PROCEEDINGS, DECREE

Full Faith and Credit Afforded Out-of-State Renewable Child Support Judgment — Res Judicata Applicable: Article IV, sec. 1, U.S. Const., provides that full faith and credit be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. As restated in Baker v. Gen. Motors Corp., 522 US 222, 139 L Ed 2d 580, 118 S Ct 657 (1998), a final judgment in one state, if rendered by a court with adjudicatory authority over the subject matter and persons governed by the judgment, qualifies for recognition throughout the land. When issues of jurisdiction have been determined by one court, the doctrine of res judicata precludes a second court from considering jurisdiction as long as the first court fully and fairly considered the issue, and that judgment, as to jurisdiction, is entitled to full faith and credit in the second court. In the present case, a Utah renewable child support judgment, in which the Utah court established jurisdiction of the parties, was entitled to full faith and credit in Montana, despite contentions by the husband that he no longer had minimum contacts with Utah after moving to Montana. The jurisdiction arguments raised before the Montana Supreme Court were identical to the arguments that were previously raised, fairly considered, and finally decided in Utah, precluding relitigation by the Montana court under res judicata. In re Child Support of Mason, 1998 MT 192, 290 M 253, 964 P2d 743, 55 St. Rep. 803 (1998).

Concurrent State Jurisdiction Under UCCJA Determined by PKPA: Pamela Shupe obtained a divorce decree from Utah granting her sole custody of the couple's child. The father, Yancy, petitioned for a change of custody in Montana. The Supreme Court determined that each state had adopted the UCCJA and therefore each state had jurisdiction to make a custody determination. The Supreme Court stated that the PKPA had been enacted to remedy problems of concurrent state jurisdiction under the UCCJA. The Supreme Court held that because Utah had jurisdiction and had not declined to exercise its jurisdiction, then under the PKPA, Montana was not authorized to modify the original custody determination of Utah. In re Marriage of Shupe, 276 M 409, 916 P2d 744, 53 St. Rep. 447 (1996).

Excusal of Wyoming Judge Based on Attempted Payoff — Not Declined Jurisdiction: Where an individual judge in Wyoming, the state in which the subject children resided, advised petitioner he would not sit on any controversy involving petitioner because of an attempted payoff by petitioner, this circumstance did not amount to deference to Montana as a more appropriate state to assume jurisdiction. The District Court properly declined jurisdiction as contemplated in 40-4-211. In re Marriage of Lance, 213 M 182, 690 P2d 979, 41 St. Rep. 2032 (1984).

"Forum Non Conveniens" — "Clean Hands": In a proceeding to modify a Kentucky child custody decree, the "forum non conveniens" and "clean hands" provisions come into play only after the following findings are made: (1) Kentucky no longer has jurisdiction; (2) Montana has jurisdiction under 40-4-211; and (3) under 28 U.S.C. §1738A(f), 40-4-211, and 40-7-114 (now repealed), Montana has jurisdiction to modify the Kentucky decree. Pierce v. Pierce, 197 M 16, 640 P2d 899, 39 St. Rep. 315 (1982).

Full Faith and Credit for Out-of-State Custody Determination: Custody determinations made in accordance with the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act must be given full faith and credit under section 8 of the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act of 1980, 28 U.S.C. §1738A. The same two-step procedure set forth in Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086, 36 St. Rep. 1360 (1979), must be followed in applying the federal law. Pierce v. Pierce, 197 M 16, 640 P2d 899, 39 St. Rep. 315 (1982).

Insufficient Evidence to Support Trial Court's Finding: In a proceeding to determine jurisdiction in a modification of a Kentucky child custody decree, the only evidence before the trial court was a copy of a Kentucky contempt order, a letter from a Kentucky court officer, and an affidavit from the Montana parent. None of this evidence supported a finding of continuing jurisdiction in Kentucky. A trial court must make specific findings based on evidence in the record as to the particular basis upon which another state can continue to exercise jurisdiction. Pierce v. Pierce, 197 M 16, 640 P2d 899, 39 St. Rep. 315 (1982).

Proceedings by Out-of-State Court After Jurisdiction Established: A father initiated a proceeding in Montana to modify a Kentucky child custody decree. Subsequently, a Kentucky court issued a contempt order against the father for his alleged wrongful removal of his child from Kentucky. If Montana originally had jurisdiction to modify the decree, the contempt order by the Kentucky court was in violation of Kentucky and federal law, there being an action pending in an out-of-state court. Pierce v. Pierce, 197 M 16, 640 P2d 899, 39 St. Rep. 315 (1982).

Custody Jurisdiction Under UCCJA and Interstate Compact on Juveniles: Wyoming had jurisdiction over the runaway juvenile as it was her home state. The District Court in Montana therefore did not have jurisdiction to modify the Wyoming court's custody decree. The interaction of the Interstate Compact on Juveniles and the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA) placed the District Court in the following position: (1) under the Compact, it had the authority to deny Wyoming's requisition ordering the juvenile's return to Wyoming and to place her in the custody of her grandparents; and (2) under the UCCJA, it was not required to recognize or enforce the Wyoming custody decree but was precluded from modifying the decree order. The District Court concluded that the juvenile's best interest would be served by having her in the custody of her grandparents and denied the Wyoming requisition. The court did not modify the Wyoming custody order. This procedure appears to be allowed under the interaction of the Compact and the UCCJA. Application of Pierce, 184 M 82, 601 P2d 1179 (1979).

Notice Requirements for Enforcement of Out-of-State Decree: Before the recognition and enforcement provisions of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA) can be applied, the initial decree must be entered in conformity with strict notice requirements. If there is no compliance with the notice requirements of the UCCJA by the state entering the initial decree, Montana courts are not required to recognize and enforce the out-of-state decree. (Following Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).) Here notice of the Wyoming hearing was not given to the Raws, the persons in physical custody of Katherine, and the District Court therefore was not required to recognize or enforce the Wyoming order. Application of Pierce, 184 M 82, 601 P2d 1179 (1979).

Custody — Jurisdiction — Recognition of Foreign Decree: When a custody decree of another state is in force, a question of the applicability of the Full Faith and Credit Clause to custody decrees arises. When the California court heard no testimony on the best interests of the child, the precise question at issue in the Montana action, the Montana court was not bound to follow the California court's decree. Similarly, the Montana court was not prevented by the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act from modifying the California decree. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Jurisdiction to Modify a Foreign Custody Decree: There is no requirement that the Montana court recognize or enforce a foreign court's decree when the foreign court failed to give notice to the person in physical custody of the child as required by the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. Further, the foreign court did not retain the jurisdiction it had at the time of initial custody proceedings because the foreign state had long since ceased to be the home of the child. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

NONPARENT CUSTODY

No Authority to Grant Third-Party Petition for Parenting Plan Absent Termination of Parental Rights: A young, single mother left her child in the temporary care of the Knopps, her aunt and uncle, while she sought employment and a place to live. About 2 months after the child was left with them, the Knopps petitioned for a parenting plan and support for the child. Although the document was referred to as a petition for a parenting plan, child support, and medical support, it was the functional equivalent of a petition for permanent custody. The Knopps applied for temporary custody and received it, ex parte, so that when the mother returned and tried to remove the child to their new home, she was not allowed to do so. The mother then sought termination of the guardianship and the return of her child. The mother's parental rights were never terminated or suspended by the state or county, nor were any proceedings ever commenced to demonstrate that the child was abused, dependent, or neglected. The District Court dismissed the petition, relying on In re Guardianship of D.T.N., 275 M 480, 914 P2d 579 (1996), in holding that the mother had a constitutional right to custody of her child and that permanent guardianship could not be granted because the mother's parental rights had not been terminated or suspended. The Knopps appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The rule of law does not permit destruction of a natural parent's fundamental right to the custody of a child based simply on the subjective determination of the child's best interests. Rather, a natural parent cannot be denied custody of a child absent termination of parental rights for abuse or neglect pursuant to Title 41, ch. 3. In re Parenting of J.N.P., 2001 MT 120, 305 M 351, 27 P3d 953 (2001). See also In re A.R.A., 276 M 66, 919 P2d 388 (1996), and Girard v. Williams, 1998 MT 231, 291 M 49, 966 P2d 1155 (1998).

Probate Code Permanent Guardianship Proceeding — Dependency or Neglect Not Grounds for Terminating Mother's Custody of Child: A mother's parental rights were not terminated by circumstance when a court order granted, with her consent, temporary guardianship in the paternal grandparents. A later court, on the grandparents' petition for permanent guardianship under the Uniform Probate Code, found that the child was neglected or dependent and that the child's best interests would be served by granting the petition. The mother appeared in and contested the later action, withdrew her consent, and filed a petition to terminate the temporary guardianship. The guardianship provisions of the Uniform Probate Code were never intended as a substitute for the child custody provisions of this title governing dissolution of marriage or for the procedures of Title 41 governing termination of the parent-child relationship. The court relied on cases stating that a dependent neglected best interests of the child determination could not be made in a Uniform Probate Code permanent guardianship proceeding and had to be made under a child custody or parental termination proceeding. In re Guardianship of D.T.N., 275 M 480, 914 P2d 579, 53 St. Rep. 253 (1996).

Intervention by Nonparent in Custody Proceeding: The lower court refused to allow the children's grandparents, who were seeking custody, to intervene in the parents' dissolution. The Supreme Court held that if a nonparent moves to intervene in an ongoing dissolution proceeding and presents a prima facie case demonstrating that the child is not in the physical custody of either of the parents, the lower court must grant the motion. In re Custody of R.R.K., R.D.K., & L.M.K., 260 M 191, 859 P2d 998, 50 St. Rep. 1002 (1993).

Nonparent to Establish Standing to Initiate Custody Action: The grandparents filed an action to obtain custody of their grandchildren. The Supreme Court held that this section authorizes a nonparent to seek custody, but the nonparent must satisfy the standing requirement by demonstrating that the child is not in the physical custody of one of the parents. Standing for a nonparent does not depend on who has actual physical possession of the child at the moment the petition is filed; rather, the trial court should focus on whether the parent actually relinquished physical custody and on the length of the separation. If the nonparent successfully establishes standing, custody must be determined based on the best interests of the child pursuant to 40-4-212. In re Custody of R.R.K., R.D.K., & L.M.K., 260 M 191, 859 P2d 998, 50 St. Rep. 1002 (1993), followed in Girard v. Williams, 1998 MT 231, 291 M 49, 966 P2d 1155, 55 St. Rep. 965 (1998).

Rights and Obligations of Stepfather — Equitable Adoption Not Recognized: Pierce sought custody of his spouse's child in connection with a dissolution of marriage. Pierce never formally adopted the child, but argued that an equitable adoption existed giving him standing to seek custody. The court reaffirmed the law that equitable adoption is not recognized in Montana. To adopt a child, the correct statutory procedures must be followed, and followed rigorously. Pierce had no standing to contest the custody of the child, nor had he any obligation to that child. In re Marriage of Pierce, 198 M 255, 645 P2d 1353, 39 St. Rep. 914 (1982).

Custody Awarded Nonparent: Permanent custody cannot be awarded to a nonparent on the basis of the "best interest" test, it being appropriate only to determine custody rights between natural parents, but rather when natural parents forfeit their rights by not meeting the minimum standards of the child abuse, neglect, and dependent statutes. Henderson v. Henderson, 174 M 1, 568 P2d 177 (1977).

Erroneous Award of Temporary Custody to Aunt: An aunt did not have standing to bring an action for temporary custody of her brother's children because they were in the "physical custody", although not actual and immediate control, of their mother. The aunt was not a party to the original custody proceeding, the motion for temporary custody was accompanied by a deficient affidavit, and no notice was given to the mother. Henderson v. Henderson, 174 M 1, 568 P2d 177 (1977).

HOME-STATE DETERMINATION

Lack of Montana Residency and Significant Connections — No Montana Jurisdiction: The statutory considerations of this section were not met and thus a Montana court had no jurisdiction over a child custody case when: (1) prior to commencement of the proceeding, the child lived in Pennsylvania for about 8 years, visiting Montana only briefly; (2) the child's significant connections were with Pennsylvania, with only minimal Montana connections; (3) Pennsylvania, under its version of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act, had subject matter jurisdiction and, absent evidence that Pennsylvania had declined to exercise that jurisdiction, jurisdiction did not confer to Montana; and (4) the facts of the case did not constitute such an extraordinary or emergency situation as to confer custody jurisdiction to Montana. In re Marriage of Miller/Beam, 259 M 424, 856 P2d 1378, 50 St. Rep. 863 (1993).

Montana Not Child's "Home State" — Lack of Child Custody Jurisdiction: A Montana court granted father's petition for dissolution but ruled that it lacked jurisdiction over the question of child custody because neither child of the marriage had lived in Montana for 6 months prior to filing of the dissolution petition. Because Montana was not the children's home state under subsection (2)(a) of this section, the court's ruling regarding lack of jurisdiction was proper because a court does not acquire subject matter jurisdiction merely by ruling on a matter, nor does jurisdiction over a dissolution of marriage necessarily confer jurisdiction over related child custody issues. In re Marriage of Oltersdorf, 256 M 96, 844 P2d 778, 49 St. Rep. 1153 (1992). See also In re Marriage of Lance, 213 M 182, 690 P2d 979 (1984), and In re Marriage of Brown, 218 M 14, 706 P2d 116 (1985).

Frequent Parental Moves — Mere Presence Out-of-State Insufficient to Confer Jurisdiction: Mother contended the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction, asserting that California was the proper forum due to the child's and mother's residency there. The court properly assumed jurisdiction after finding that: (1) California was not the child's home state because mother and child moved to California less than 3 months before father filed the modification action, in August 1987, and had not previously lived there; (2) before moving to California in June 1987, mother and child had lived primarily in Oregon and one or both had lived in Washington and Nevada for periods of 1 to 3 months since November 1986; (3) mother and child moved frequently and lived in four or more households in the previous 2 years; (4) there was no evidence of any significant connection between mother and child and the state of California or proof that mother intended to remain there; and (5) mere physical presence in California for less than 6 months before commencement of proceedings was insufficient to confer jurisdiction in California. In re Marriage of Klose, 243 M 211, 793 P2d 1311, 47 St. Rep. 1156 (1990).

Residency Establishing Home State — Out-of-State Parent Claiming Custody: Jurisdiction was properly in Montana and the provisions of this section applied in a case where the family lived in Montana several years, the mother claimed custody and moved the child to New Mexico, and the father filed for custody in Montana 5 months later. In re Marriage of Cox, 226 M 176, 736 P2d 97, 44 St. Rep. 567 (1987).

No Tolling of Six-Month Home State Period: The children had moved from Montana with the custodial parent and resided in Wyoming for 7 months, but the custodial parent did not give notice to the District Court of her move as required by a District Court order. At the time of the move, the father was incarcerated in Montana. The Supreme Court held that neither circumstance tolled the home state period of 6 months established by 40-4-211. The court based its decision on the legislative history of the section, following Pierce v. Pierce, 197 M 16, 640 P2d 899, 39 St. Rep. 315 (1982), and upon the fact that incarceration is no bar to petitioning for custody modification. In re Marriage of Lance, 213 M 182, 690 P2d 979, 41 St. Rep. 2032 (1984).

"Home State" — Improper Conduct: A noncustodial parent's refusal to return his child to the custodial parent does not toll the calculation of the 6-month period to establish "home state". Facts relating to the improper conduct of a petitioner should only be addressed in the context of determining whether it is appropriate to exercise jurisdiction once it has been determined that Montana has jurisdiction. Pierce v. Pierce, 197 M 16, 640 P2d 899, 39 St. Rep. 315 (1982).

"Home State" — "Significant Connection": A mother was granted custody of her son in July 1979 in Kentucky. In August 1979 she permitted the father to take the child to Montana but requested the child's return after 5 months. The child was not returned, and in August 1980 the father filed a petition for modification of the Kentucky child custody decree. Montana has jurisdiction under either the "home state" or "significant connection" standard. Pierce v. Pierce, 197 M 16, 640 P2d 899, 39 St. Rep. 315 (1982).

Jurisdiction and Venue — Home State — County Residence: The court had jurisdiction to modify the child's custody because Montana was the home state of the child at the time the action was commenced and venue of the case because defendant was a resident of the county when the action was commenced. Ronchetto v. Ronchetto, 173 M 285, 567 P2d 456 (1977).

"Seize and Run" of Minor Children as Not Conferring Jurisdiction in Custody Modification Cases: District Court erred in assuming jurisdiction to award custody of minor children to father living in Montana based on children's physical presence before court where divorce and custody had been previously awarded to mother in State of Washington. Mere fact father seized children from mother living in Washington and brought them before Montana court is insufficient to establish jurisdiction over mother who has no "contacts" with State of Montana, and any attempt by Montana to exercise jurisdiction over her would be in violation of the Due Process Clause of 14th amendment to the United States Constitution. Therefore, any custody decree rendered by Montana court would not be entitled to full faith and credit, and the interstate custody battle would continue, and whatever chance the children have for stability and happiness would be lost amidst the din of warring parents. State ex rel. Muirhead v. District Court, 169 M 535, 550 P2d 1304 (1976).

Commissioners' Note

This section [except the last sentence] is designed to codify existing law in most jurisdictions. It simply states that the trial court must look to a variety of factors to determine what is the child's best interest. The five factors mentioned specifically are those most commonly relied upon in the appellate opinions; but the language of the section makes it clear that the judge need not be limited to the factors specified. Although none of the familiar presumptions developed by the case law are mentioned here, the language of the section is consistent with preserving such rules of thumb. The preference for the mother as custodian of young children when all things are equal, for example, is simply a shorthand method of expressing the best interest of children—and this section enjoins judges to decide custody cases according to that general standard. The same analysis is appropriate to the other common presumptions: a parent is usually preferred to a non-parent; the existing custodian is usually preferred to any new custodian because of the interest in assuring continuity for the child; preference is usually given to the custodian chosen by agreement of the parents. In the case of modification, there is also a specific provision designed to foster continuity of custodians and discourage change. See Section 409 [40-4-219].

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 343 in (1), in first sentence, substituted "the parenting plan" for "custody" and in second sentence, after "relevant", inserted "parenting"; at end of (1)(a) deleted "as to custody"; at end of (1)(b) deleted "as to a custodian"; in (1)(c), near middle after "person who", deleted "may"; inserted (1)(h) through (1)(m) setting out additional factors a court shall consider in determining the parenting plan; in (2), in two places, substituted "parenting" for "custody"; deleted former (3)(a) that read: "Custody should be granted to the parent who has provided most of the primary care during the child's life"; at beginning of (3)(a) substituted "parenting plan" for "custody"; inserted (3)(b) describing when a motion to amend a final parenting plan is vexatious; deleted (4) that read: "(4) The following are rebuttable presumptions:

(a) A knowing failure to pay birth-related costs that the person is able to pay is not in the best interest of the child.

(b) Failure to pay child support that the person is able to pay is not in the best interest of a child in need of the child support"; and made minor changes in style.

Saving Clause: Section 41, Ch. 343, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 42, Ch. 343, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 43, Ch. 343, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] applies to proceedings begun after October 1, 1997, including proceedings regarding modification of orders or decrees existing on October 1, 1997."

1995 Amendment: Chapter 467 inserted (3) concerning rebuttable presumptions that apply unless contrary to best interest of child; inserted (4) concerning rebuttable presumptions related to birth costs and child support; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 15, 1995.

Severability: Section 5, Ch. 467, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1989 Amendment: Inserted (2) that read: "(2) A de facto custody arrangement, in the absence of a prior custody decree, does not require the child's parent or parents to prove the factors set forth in 40-4-219"; and made changes in form.

1987 Amendment: In introduction, at end, inserted "but not limited to"; inserted (6) requiring the court to consider any abuse or threat of abuse by one parent against the other parent or a child; and inserted (7) requiring the court to consider any chemical dependency or chemical abuse by either parent.

GENERAL

Implied Finding of Changed Circumstances Warranting Revision of Parenting Plan Absent Showing of Abuse of Discretion: A District Court may, in its discretion, amend a parenting plan if it finds that there has been a change in circumstances of the child and that a change is necessary for the child's best interests. In making the determination, the court relies on facts that arose after the prior parenting plan or that the court was unaware of at the time of the prior plan. Here, the court did not make a specific finding of changed circumstances, but such a finding was implied, and the court's failure to specifically cite the words "a change in circumstances" was at most harmless error. The trial court is in the best position to resolve child custody issues, and it is that court's duty to resolve conflicts regarding evidence and to determine the qualifications and competency of expert witnesses. The court's decisions in regard to these duties will not be disturbed absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. In re Custody of Arneson-Nelson, 2001 MT 242, 307 M 60, 36 P3d 874 (2001).

Sua Sponte Modification of Postadoption Visitation Agreement Within Discretion of District Court: The rule that in the context of separation agreements made between spouses, parties cannot make binding agreements concerning the support, custody, or visitation of children applies equally to postadoption agreements made between an adopted child's birth parents and adoptive parents. The best interests of the child are paramount, and sua sponte modification of an original visitation agreement in this case was within the discretion of the District Court after determining the best interests of the adopted child. Groves v. Clark, 1999 MT 117, 294 M 417, 982 P2d 446, 56 St. Rep. 490 (1999). No Duty of Attorney to Nonclient in Child Custody Case: An attorney must be able to vigorously advocate a client's interests in litigation without being compromised by obligations to nonclients. If an attorney were considered to owe the same duty of care to both a parent and child in an adversarial custody case, neither parent nor child would be served effectively. Because the interests of a parent and those of a child may not be identical, the attorney's duty runs solely to the client except if the conduct rises to the level of deceit or collusion or is intentionally reckless. Rhode v. Adams, 1998 MT 73, 288 M 278, 957 P2d 1124, 55 St. Rep. 303 (1998).

Primary Caretaker Presumption Rebutted — Modification of Joint Custody Affirmed: Michael and Michelle entered a joint child custody arrangement with physical custody shared equally, alternating weekly. One year after the dissolution, Michelle was accepted at a Billings university and sought a custody modification that would designate her as primary custodian and that would allow her to move with the child to Billings from the family's hometown of Glasgow. Michael testified as to the child's ties to home, school, community, and family in Glasgow, while Michelle stressed the importance of consistency of herself as primary physical custodial parent, having provided the primary care for the child during the 3 years prior to dissolution. After considering all the factors in this section, the District Court granted Michael primary residential custody during the school year and Michelle during the summer, with 9 days a month visitation for Michelle during the school year and Michael one weekend visitation a month during the summer. Michelle appealed, contending that the court failed to properly apply the primary care presumption in subsection (3) of this section (deleted 1997) because the court considered that both parents shared primary care equally since their divorce rather than considering that she had provided most of the primary care during the child's life. The Supreme Court, noting that there was no initial designation of primary caregiver or custodian in this case, held that a proper determination of the child's best interests was sufficient to rebut the primary care presumption. In re Marriage of Hlad, 282 M 449, 938 P2d 673, 54 St. Rep. 426 (1997), distinguishing In re Marriage of Abrahamson, 278 M 336, 924 P2d 1334 (1996).

Modification of Custody Order Required by Substantial Change in Circumstances — Application of In Re Marriage of Johnson Required — Jurisdictional Prerequisites — Absurd

Application of Statute Avoided: After making an agreement for child custody as part of the dissolution of her marriage, Kimberly determined to attend college and moved from Lewistown to Billings with her children. On a remand from the Supreme Court, the District Court held that In re Marriage of Johnson, 266 M 158, 879 P2d 689 (1994), did not apply because custody was not being transferred from the primary custodian to the secondary custodian. The Supreme Court held that contrary to the District Court's interpretation, Johnson did apply to the case and that Johnson applied to any case in which a custody modification would have the effect of substantially changing the children's primary residence, requiring that the District Court must first meet the jurisdictional requirements of 40-4-219. However, the Supreme Court found that a literal application of that statute would cause an absurd result by its application only to movement of a child to another state and not to instances in which the child is moved from one end of the state to another or to another country. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that if a change has occurred in the circumstances of the child or the child's custodian, causing the children to move from one location to another in a manner that would hinder the effectiveness of the custody arrangement, then the jurisdictional requirements of 40-4-219 have been met and the District Court may modify the custody arrangement pursuant to this section. The Supreme Court then applied the rule to the case before it and concluded that the modification of the custody arrangement changing the custody of Kimberly's ex-husband from 160 days to 75 days annually was in the best interests of the children, as demonstrated in the record. In re Marriage of Syverson, 281 M 1, 931 P2d 691, 54 St. Rep. 32 (1997).

Failure to Mention Statute Not Reversible Error — Presumption Adequately Rebutted: This section does not require the District Court to find that one parent is unfit to have custody, but rather creates a rebuttable presumption in favor of the preexisting custodial parent. In this case, the District Court failed to explicitly mention the statute, but nevertheless considered the substantial evidence and determined that the statutory presumption had been adequately rebutted. Failure to explicitly mention the statute was, at most, harmless error. In re Marriage of Abrahamson, 278 M 336, 924 P2d 1334, 53 St. Rep. 939 (1996), followed in In re Marriage of Baer, 1998 MT 29, 287 M 322, 954 P2d 1125, 55 St. Rep. 104 (1998).

Best Interest of Child Standard Unconstitutional in Custody Award to Nonparent Over Natural Parent Absent Finding of Abuse, Neglect, or Dependency: The best interest of the child standard incorporated into 40-4-221 in determining the custody of a child whose custodial parent dies is unconstitutional to the extent that it allows the grant of a petition prior to the termination of the noncustodial parent's constitutional right to custody. Use of the standard is improper in that any showing that a nonparent may be able to provide a better environment than a natural parent is irrelevant to the question of custody between the two in view of the constitutional right of a parent to custody. Although 40-4-221 gives a nonparent standing to request a custody hearing, it does not give the District Court authority to deprive a natural parent of the right to custody absent a finding of abuse, neglect, or dependency on the part of the natural parent. In re A.R.A., 277 M 66, 919 P2d 388, 53 St. Rep. 543 (1996), following In re Doney, 174 M 282, 570 P2d 575 (1977), and overruling Brost v. Glasgow, 200 M 194, 651 P2d 32 (1982), and In re C.G., 228 M 118, 740 P2d 1139 (1987).

Modification of Custody Based on Best Interests of Children — Affirmed Despite Application of Wrong Statute: The lower court granted the father's motion to modify the joint custody provisions of the divorce decree to allow him to have primary custody of three of the parties' five children. The Supreme Court noted that the lower court should have applied 40-4-219 because the modification had the effect of substantially changing the primary residence of the three children. However, because the mother had not objected to the application of the wrong statute, the Supreme Court stated that it would review the lower court's action based upon its application of this section. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not erred in finding that the best interests of the three children were served by a change in custody even if it resulted in splitting up the five children. In re Marriage of Lockman, 266 M 194, 879 P2d 710, 51 St. Rep. 726 (1994).

Petition Resulting in Change of Primary Residence of Children in Joint Custody Construed as Petition to Terminate Joint Custody — Jurisdictional Requirements Applicable — Best Interest Standard Applicable on Petition Not Resulting in Change of Primary Residence: A motion or petition to modify a sole custody provision or to terminate a joint custody provision must satisfy the jurisdictional prerequisites set out in 40-4-219. Likewise, a motion or petition to modify child custody provisions in a dissolution decree that have the effect of substantially changing the primary residence of the parties' children, even though the formal joint custody designation is retained, is to be construed as a motion or petition to terminate joint custody and must also satisfy the jurisdictional prerequisites set out in 40-4-219. Any effort to modify the physical custody arrangement in a decree that provides for joint custody but that does not seek a substantial change in the children's primary residence may be considered according to the best interest standard set out in this section. In this case, because the mother sought a modification of the children's physical custody arrangement, the District Court erred in modifying physical custody without finding substantial endangerment as required by 40-4-219. In re Marriage of Johnson, 266 M 158, 879 P2d 689, 51 St. Rep. 703 (1994), followed in In re Marriage of Gallagher, 266 M 358, 880 P2d 1303, 51 St. Rep. 840 (1994), and In re Marriage of Syverson, 281 M 1, 931 P2d 691, 54 St. Rep. 32 (1997).

Sole Custody Awarded Father — Mother's Mental Health a Factor in Granting Supervised Visitation — No Abuse of Discretion: Mother appealed from the District Court child custody order in a dissolution of marriage granting the father sole custody of their son and granting the mother supervised visitation rights. The Supreme Court ruled that because mental health is a factor used in determining the best interests of the child, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in relying upon the opinion of experts that the mother was in need of treatment and in granting sole custody to the father and ordering supervised visitation by the mother. In re Marriage of Cook, 250 M 210, 819 P2d 180, 48 St. Rep. 795 (1991).

Best Interests of Child in Determining Custody for Purposes of Religious Education: A question of religious education must be strictly limited to the context of the best interests of the child. Courts will not debate the merits of different religions or show partiality to any religious faith, but courts will examine religious practices that interfere with a child's general welfare. In re Marriage of Gersovitz & Siegner, 238 M 506, 779 P2d 883, 46 St. Rep. 1455 (1989).

"Best Interest" Factors Examined — No Abuse of Discretion: When facts were examined under the statutory standards, including allegations of physical abuse, wishes of the parents, wishes of the children, and the interaction and interrelationship of the parents with the children, there was no abuse of discretion through failure to examine the best interests of the children in the District Court award of joint custody. In re Marriage of Allen, 237 M 64, 771 P2d 578, 46 St. Rep. 624 (1989).

Changed Circumstances Rule Applicable to Modification of De Facto Custody Arrangement: The changed circumstances rule and the best interests test applicable to modification of judicial custody decrees, as set forth in 40-4-219, are to be applied in modifying a child custody arrangement where there has been no previous judicial supervision or decree. The best interests test of this section does not apply. (See subsequent 1989 amendment.) In re Custody of Pierre Daniel Andre, 234 M 80, 761 P2d 809, 45 St. Rep 1745 (1988).

Qualified Intervenor and Natural Father Claiming Custody — "Best Interest" Standard Properly Applied: In a case where the natural custodial parent died, the District Court partially relied on the stringent standard set forth in In re Guardianship of Doney, 174 M 282, 570 P2d 575 (1977), in holding that, to gain custody, the intervenor must show that the natural father was unfit. The Supreme Court found that the Doney standard was incorrectly applied, but since the lower court ultimately applied the correct standard (best interest of the child) in its final determination, that determination did not constitute reversible error. Weber v. Van De Kop, 228 M 118, 740 P2d 1139, 44 St. Rep. 1388 (1987).

Award to Father — Care Provided by Grandparent: Mother appealed order granting child custody to father, arguing that since the child's grandmother provided daily care while the husband worked, custody had in fact been awarded to the grandparents and the best interest of the child standard was therefore inappropriate to determine the custody rights between natural parents. The court held that the award of custody to the father does not in effect award custody to the grandparents who care for the child during the father's working hours. In re Custody of N.T.E., 227 M 396, 739 P2d 485, 44 St. Rep. 1178 (1987).

Travel Restriction in Best Interest of Child — Proof Required: The parent who requests a travel restriction for the time the other parent has physical custody must provide sufficient proof that a restriction is in the best interest of the child. In re Marriage of Cole, 224 M 207, 729 P2d 1276, 43 St. Rep. 2136 (1986).

No Conflict Between UCCJA and "Best Interests of Child" Test: Under the provisions of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA) and 40-4-211, the Montana court properly declined to exercise its jurisdiction. The custody proceedings in Arizona, the children's residence, were filed prior to those in Montana, and Arizona had not stayed its proceedings. The provisions of the UCCJA which are rules for determining jurisdiction do not conflict with this state's rules for determining custody. The former is a procedural determination as to the proper forum, made prior to any substantive inquiry, and the latter is the application of substantive rules. No evidentiary hearing is required in a procedural determination as to the proper forum. In re Marriage of Brown, 218 M 14, 706 P2d 116, 42 St. Rep. 1360 (1985).

Standard Governing Custody and Visitation Decisions — Best Interests of Child — Whether or Not Parents Married: In an action filed under 40-6-115, the father of a child sought to establish paternity of the child and petitioned for joint custody, visitation rights, and settlement of child support. The District Court awarded sole custody to the mother and granted the father limited visitation rights. The father appealed, claiming that it was a denial of equal protection of the law to determine his parental rights under the Uniform Parentage Act, Title 40, ch. 6, part 1, rather than under Title 40, ch. 4, the chapter that would have governed the case had he and the child's mother been married. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the standard for determination of child custody and visitation, best interests of the child, was the same in both laws, and the legally proper result was the same. Schuman v. Bestrom, 214 M 410, 693 P2d 536, 42 St. Rep. 54 (1985).

Potential for Serious Harm Sufficient for Jurisdiction — Best Interests of Children — Modification Granted: There was a sufficient change of circumstances in children's environment to justify change in custody when custodial father of four married mother of four minor children, became a member of a nondenominational religious group advocating rigid religious beliefs, and adopted a strict child-rearing philosophy involving physical punishment and a prohibition against school activities or extracurricular activities until high school. Fact that father had inflicted severe disciplinary practices only on the older children was sufficient to establish jurisdiction to consider modification. District Court awarded custody to the mother, who had remarried and had stable employment and a home in town that could provide children with opportunity for interaction with peers. Supreme Court found substantial credible evidence to support finding of District Court that change in custody was in best interests of children. Reinoehl v. Perry, 213 M 479, 691 P2d 1384, 41 St. Rep. 2269 (1984).

Two-Part Test for Modification: Section 40-4-219 sets out a two-part test to judge whether to modify a prior custody decree. The first part of the test contains two subparts. There must be a change of circumstances, and the change must be significant enough in relation to the best interests of the child that those interests are no longer served by the decree in force as judged by the criteria of 40-4-212. The second part of the test is that the primary custodian may not be changed unless the court finds the enumerated dangers exist and that the advantages of change outweigh the disadvantages. The facts of this case support the modification. R.L.S. & T.L.S. v. Barkhoff, 207 M 199, 674 P2d 1082, 40 St. Rep. 1982 (1983).

Child Custody Dispute — Allegedly Unsafe Condition of Custodian's Yard Knowable Before Trial: There was no merit to husband's claim that new evidence warranted a new trial of divorce proceeding. Wife was granted custody of the child of the marriage, and the asserted new evidence, that part of the backyard where wife lived was bounded by a ditch, was available at the time of the trial and could have been ascertained by husband. Cherewick v. Cherewick, 205 M 75, 666 P2d 742, 40 St. Rep. 1106 (1983).

Separation of Children — Best Interest to Be Considered Separately: In a dissolution proceeding the trial court awarded custody of the older child to the wife and the two younger children to the husband. Wife contended this was error. The Supreme Court held that in child custody matters, the primary factor to be considered is the best interest of the child. The plain meaning of the word "child" mandates that the best interest of each child be considered, not the best interest of the children as a collective. Where there were findings on the factors set forth in 40-4-212, which set out the essential and determining facts upon which the District Court rested its conclusions, there was no abuse of discretion in separating the children. Meyer v. Meyer, 204 M 177, 663 P2d 328, 40 St. Rep. 753 (1983).

Death of Custodial Parent — "Best Interest of Child" Test Applicable: After the death of the custodial mother, the natural father and the maternal grandmother both requested custody of the children pursuant to 40-4-221. The trial court properly determined custody in accordance with the "best interest of child" test of this section. A more stringent standard was not required. Brost v. Glasgow, 200 M 194, 651 P2d 32, 39 St. Rep. 1679 (1982).

Best Interests — Findings on Statutory Factors — No Abuse of Discretion: The marriage of the parties was dissolved, and the mother was awarded custody of the three minor children. The father appealed the custody order, claiming that the District Court abused its discretion in awarding custody because the mother had lived with another man prior to the dissolution and had locked the children in the car with a loaded gun. The mother testified that she and the children had lived with another man prior to the dissolution. She also testified that the gun incident came about when the father attempted to take the children and the mother held him off. She then put the gun in her purse and left it in the car with the children. The Supreme Court found that the District Court properly considered every factor set out in 40-4-212. There was no finding of abuse of discretion, and the award of custody was affirmed. Malcolm v. Malcolm, 196 M 477, 640 P2d 450, 39 St. Rep. 262 (1982).

Fit Parent Properly Denied Custody — Factors to Be Considered by Court: In an action for dissolution of the parties' marriage in which the court found the wife not an unfit mother, the trial court did not err in granting custody of the two children of the parties to the father. The fitness of either party as a parent is only one factor to be considered by the court in granting custody. The court also found that the wife's new husband had an unsettling influence upon the children. Therefore, no error was committed. Bier v. Sherrard, 191 M 215, 623 P2d 550, 38 St. Rep. 158 (1981).

Severance of Parental Rights — Counsel Not Absolutely Required at In-Chambers Interview of Children: In the trial court, a mother's parental rights to her two children were terminated and custody granted to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). On appeal, the issue was whether the court had erred by interviewing the children in chambers without the presence of the mother and counsel. When the trial court announced to counsel and the mother that it wished to interview both children in chambers, neither counsel nor the mother objected. The mother claimed that the interview of the children without the presence of her counsel violated her rights to due process. She relied on a case in which it was stated that a child may testify out of the parents' presence in abuse and neglect cases subject to the cross-examination by the parents' attorney. The reviewing court noted that nothing in that opinion suggested that it was the duty of the trial judge to assert a parent's right to cross-examination if counsel for the parent does not. Here, in any event, there was no testimony in chambers, just an inquiry into the children's desires regarding custody. A record of the interviews was made and any claimed right of cross-examination was waived by failing to assert that right at the trial level. In re A.C.S. & E.S.S., 190 M 180, 619 P2d 1199, 37 St. Rep. 1868 (1980).

Custody Also Based on Natural Parent Rights: As between a natural father of a child and grandparents of the child, the natural father is entitled to prevail on the basis of his superior rights as a parent. Moreover, absent a finding of abuse, neglect, or unfitness as a parent, a natural parent is entitled to the custody of his child, citing In re Doney, 174 M 282, 570 P2d 575 (1977). In re Marriage of Korol, 188 M 351, 613 P2d 1016 (1980).

Custody Within Court's Discretion: The award of custody is a matter for the trial court's discretion. When the child in question said in an in-chambers interview that it would be "O.K." if he lived with his mother, there was no abuse of discretion. Bailey v. Bailey, 184 M 418, 603 P2d 259 (1979).

Parent's Activities in the Home: While a mother's relationship with another man may not in itself be adequate to support a finding of her unfitness as a parent, especially in a change of custody proceeding, a District Court should not be directed to ignore a parent's activities in the home. Wilson v. Wilson, 180 M 377, 590 P2d 1136 (1979).

Failure to Properly Pursue Appeal — Best Interest of the Child: Even though a party may fail to both timely appeal and to pursue the appeal with some measure of diligence, in hearing a motion to dismiss said party's appeal, the court must still pay heed to the statutory requirement that it look to the best interest of the child. Lehman v. Billman, 178 M 367, 584 P2d 662 (1978).

Removal of Children Warranted: The District Court did not abuse its discretion when it granted the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services' (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) petition for permanent custody and authority to consent to adoption of three children since they were adjudged dependent and neglected and there was ample evidence to warrant removal from their parents. In re Gore, Youths in Need of Care, 174 M 321, 570 P2d 1110 (1977).

Custody Awarded Nonparent: Permanent custody cannot be awarded to a nonparent on the basis of the "best interest" test, it being appropriate only to determine custody rights between natural parents, but rather when natural parents forfeit their rights by not meeting the minimum standards of the child abuse, neglect, and dependent statutes. Henderson v. Henderson, 174 M 1, 568 P2d 177 (1977).

Contested Guardianship Custody: When a guardianship case is before the court under 72-5-222 and the custody of a child is being contested, the court must consider the provisions of 40-4-212 and guidelines set forth by this court in recent custody cases. In re Guardianship of Gullette, 173 M 132, 566 P2d 396 (1977).

Award to Father — No Need to Prove Mother Unfit: The court did not abuse its discretion by determining that the interests of the children would be best served by granting custody to the father. Absent any other indication in the record, the court's award will not be presumed to be based on superior earning power. The rebuttable presumption favoring mothers (no longer followed) was overcome by the evidence without the need of proving the mother unfit. Isler v. Isler, 173 M 29, 566 P2d 55 (1977).

Custody Award Supported by Favorable Interaction and Interrelationship of Boys With Father: District Court properly awarded custody to father where evidence showed he spent considerable amounts of time with boys and entered into activities with them, whereas mother had made no attempt to see children for a year and had not written or sent birthday gifts. Haywood v. Sedillo, 167 M 101, 535 P2d 1014 (1975).

Change of Circumstances Warranting Change of Custody: To prevent uprooting of child of tender years who had been in physical custody of her father by agreement of parents because of child's emotional problem, it was in the best interest of the child to change legal custody to the father because of change of circumstances. Gilbert v. Gilbert, 166 M 312, 533 P2d 1079 (1975).

Custody of Younger Children Awarded to Father: District Court did not abuse its discretion in awarding custody of two younger children to father who had moved to California, as they have a good home with their father and paternal grandparents, are well cared for and happy, their educational and religious training is being more than adequately fulfilled, and they have lived with their father for more than 5 years. Anderson v. Anderson, 145 M 244, 400 P2d 632 (1965).

JOINT CUSTODY — DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

School-Year Custody to Primary Caregiver Mother, With Summer Custody and Alternate Holidays to Father Who Had Shown Little Interest in Eight-Year-Old Son's School Activities: It was not an abuse of discretion to award divorced parents joint custody of an 8-year-old boy, with the boy's primary residence being with his mother in Oregon and the father (in Montana) having liberal visitation. A doctor and another evaluator, both agreed to by the parents, determined that the mother should have custody during the school year and that the father should have custody during the summers and on alternating holidays. The court found that the mother had been the primary caregiver most of the time because the father's employment was often away from home. The court also found that the father showed little interest in the boy's school activities and that the mother would be better able to provide for the boy during the school year. In re Marriage of Hogstad, 275 M 489, 914 P2d 584, 53 St. Rep. 257 (1996).

No Bias Against Shared Custody or Gender Bias Demonstrated by District Court: Throughout Ed and Ann's marriage, Ed was the homemaker and primary caretaker of the couple's four children, while Ann pursued medical studies and then practiced medicine. Upon moving to Montana, the couple sought a dissolution. After the District Court awarded primary residential custody to Ann, Ed argued that the District Court demonstrated a bias against shared custody and a gender bias against him in awarding maintenance. The Supreme Court held that the record adequately demonstrated that the District Court's award of primary physical custody to Ann was based upon the parties' preferences against shared custody and that the award of maintenance was limited because Ed had failed to take advantage of employment opportunities in order to be with his children. In re Marriage of Bukacek, 274 M 98, 907 P2d 931, 52 St. Rep. 1141 (1995).

Visitation Used as Factor in Awarding Custody: Laurie Wang argued that the lower court erred in awarding her husband custody of their child based in part on a finding that the father was more likely to allow frequent and continuing visitation. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had properly considered visitation in awarding custody because Laurie had interfered with the father's visitation in the past. In re Marriage of Wang, 271 M 291, 896 P2d 450, 52 St. Rep. 449 (1995).

Petition Resulting in Change of Primary Residence of Children in Joint Custody Construed as Petition to Terminate Joint Custody — Jurisdictional Requirements Applicable — Best Interest Standard Applicable on Petition Not Resulting in Change of Primary Residence: A motion or petition to modify a sole custody provision or to terminate a joint custody provision must satisfy the jurisdictional prerequisites set out in 40-4-219. Likewise, a motion or petition to modify child custody provisions in a dissolution decree that have the effect of substantially changing the primary residence of the parties' children, even though the formal joint custody designation is retained, is to be construed as a motion or petition to terminate joint custody and must also satisfy the jurisdictional prerequisites set out in 40-4-219. Any effort to modify the physical custody arrangement in a decree that provides for joint custody but that does not seek a substantial change in the children's primary residence may be considered according to the best interest standard set out in this section. In this case, because the mother sought a modification of the children's physical custody arrangement, the District Court erred in modifying physical custody without finding substantial endangerment as required by 40-4-219. In re Marriage of Johnson, 266 M 158, 879 P2d 689, 51 St. Rep. 703 (1994), followed in In re Marriage of Gallagher, 266 M 358, 880 P2d 1303, 51 St. Rep. 840 (1994), and In re Marriage of Syverson, 281 M 1, 931 P2d 691, 54 St. Rep. 32 (1997).

Alternating Months of Physical Custody Properly Rejected: Colleen and Daniel were married in 1983 and divorced approximately 10 years later. At the custody hearing, counsel for the parties' children presented a plan in which the parties would have joint custody and actual physical custody would alternate between the parties monthly. The District Court rejected this plan and awarded primary physical custody to Colleen. Citing In re Marriage of McLean/Fleury, 257 M 55, 849 P2d 1012 (1993), the Supreme Court upheld the award of primary physical custody. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly based its award upon the standard of best interests of the child and correctly cited numerous considerations that supported its award, including the testimony of a licensed clinical therapist who testified that the plan submitted by the children's counsel was an impossible plan for the children. In re Marriage of Strizic, 263 M 193, 867 P2d 386, 51 St. Rep. 11 (1994).

Statutory Factors Considered — Failure to Award Sole Custody Not Error: The District Court found that both parents were in good health, that the child had lived with his mother since birth, and that the father had visited him on numerous occasions. It was undisputed that the mother was doing a good job raising the child and that she should be his primary custodian. These findings constituted adequate consideration of the child's best interests. Absent any findings to rebut the statutory presumption of joint custody, it was not error for the court to fail to award mother sole custody. In re Paternity of W.L., 259 M 187, 855 P2d 521, 50 St. Rep. 751 (1993).

No Error in Modification of Joint Custody Order Against Child's Own Wishes: When the mother and father were divorced, they entered into a stipulation providing for joint custody of their daughter, with primary physical custody for the mother and liberal visitation for the father. In the years following the divorce, the mother, by moving to other states and not allowing the daughter to see her father, continually frustrated the father's attempts to have a meaningful relationship with his daughter. The father petitioned for a change of primary physical custody. The petition was granted by the District Court after the court interviewed the daughter, who did not want to live with her father. The Supreme Court held that there was no error in the District Court's modification of the custody order. The record showed that the District Court considered the best interests of the child. The Supreme Court stated, citing Marriage of Mitchell, 248 M 105, 809 P2d 582 (1991), that although the testimony was not the same on both sides, it was the District Court's duty to resolve those conflicts and further stated that the Court's resolution of those conflicts will not be disturbed on appeal absent an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Ulland, 251 M 160, 823 P2d 864, 48 St. Rep. 1159 (1991).

Modification of Physical Custody Within Joint Custody Proper — Best Interest of Child: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in modifying physical custody within a joint custody situation from mother to father after finding that: (1) mother used profane or abusive language toward children; (2) father was refused visitation; (3) mother was drinking a number of times in children's presence; (4) mother engaged in inappropriate behavior with her fiance in children's presence; (5) testimony of a Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) social worker indicated that mother was verbally abusive, uncooperative in arranging a home study, and the subject of referrals for investigation of child abuse or neglect from three sources. In re Marriage of Gravely, 248 M 105, 809 P2d 582, 48 St. Rep. 353 (1991).

Determination of Primary Custodian Not Reversible Absent Clear Error: Father, who was the primary caretaker for 1 year while mother was away on military duty overseas, asserted he should have been given primary physical custody. Evidence showed that both parents had loving relationships with the children and would be good caretakers. In the presence of conflicting testimony, it was not error for the trial court to grant primary physical custody to the mother regardless of the father's assertion. The award was not reversible absent a showing of clear error. In re Marriage of Merriman, 247 M 491, 807 P2d 1351, 48 St. Rep. 275 (1991).

Award of Joint Custody With Unequal Time Share of Physical Custody Not Per Se Abuse of Discretion: The fact that a District Court awarded joint custody absent an equal time share of the children did not, per se, amount to an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Otto, 245 M 271, 800 P2d 706, 47 St. Rep. 2080 (1990). See also In re Marriage of Kovarik, 1998 MT 33, 287 M 350, 954 P2d 1147, 55 St. Rep. 117 (1998).

Joint Custody Award Proper: For a period of time after the wife filed for divorce, she and her child continued to live with the husband. After the couple separated, the wife moved out of state with the child. The Supreme Court stated that a custody arrangement had never been agreed upon and remained at issue pending resolution of the action; therefore, de facto custody had not been established. The court went on to hold that because no de facto custody existed, then 40-4-219, which provides that a court may modify a prior custody decree, did not apply to the case before it because there was no decree or informal arrangement to modify. In re Marriage of Hoffmaster, 239 M 84, 780 P2d 177, 46 St. Rep. 1531 (1989).

Family Integration — Not Grounds for Modifying Joint Custody Decree: The divorce decree between the parties provided for joint custody, and a subsequent modification gave primary physical custody to the mother. When the mother decided to move out of state, the father brought a motion to modify custody to give him primary physical custody on the basis that the child was integrated into his family and the Butte community. The Supreme Court held that the integration rationale only applied to proceedings to terminate joint custody and was inapplicable to modification actions. In re Marriage of Johnson, 238 M 153, 777 P2d 305, 46 St. Rep. 1164 (1989), distinguished, in implementing a prior order, in In re Marriage of Zuelke, 274 M 362, 909 P2d 684, 52 St. Rep. 1225 (1995).

Joint Custody Not Awarded — When Written Findings Adequate: Where substantial evidence existed in the record to support an award of sole custody, the fact that the District Court's written findings supporting nonaward of joint custody were not "exemplary" did not constitute reversible error. In re Marriage of Syljuberget, 234 M 178, 763 P2d 323, 45 St. Rep. 1825 (1988).

Equal Physical Custody Not in Best Interests of Child: Father appealed trial court custody and visitation schedule that provided 140 days to father and 225 to mother. He alleged that based on Montana's equal allotment of custodial time provision, the court's grant of less than one-half of the child's time constituted a misapplication of the best interest of the child standard. The Supreme Court upheld the award, stating that substantial credible evidence supported the specific custody and visitation award. Depending on the circumstances in joint custody awards, equal physical custody will not be awarded if not in the best interests of the child. In re Marriage of Smyka & Dayton, 227 M 408, 739 P2d 489, 44 St. Rep. 1188 (1987).

Joint Custody Not Awarded — No Abuse of Discretion:

Although both mother and father are fit parents, the record and findings show substantial reasons why joint custody would not be in the best interest of the infant children. These findings include the geographical distance between the parents, their inability to communicate regarding issues involving the children due to interference from the father's present female cohabitant, the father's record of indifference regarding visitation, and the mother's role as primary caretaker for the infants' entire 2 years of life. In re Marriage of Dunn, 226 M 394, 735 P2d 1117, 44 St. Rep. 749 (1987).

Upon a showing of adequate care by the mother and finding that the father had made no application for joint custody nor shown a willingness to assume child support responsibilities, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting sole custody to the mother. In re Marriage of Shirilla, 225 M 106, 732 P2d 397, 44 St. Rep. 75 (1987).

The court did not abuse its discretion in not allowing joint custody when it considered the prospect of joint custody and the criteria set forth in 40-4-212, 40-4-222 through 40-4-224 (all now repealed), and 40-4-225. In re Marriage of Alt, 218 M 327, 708 P2d 258, 42 St. Rep. 1621 (1985).

Joint Custody as Precluding Specific Visitation Schedule: It was not error for the District Court to award joint custody, give primary residential custody to the mother, permit the children to live with the father "at such times and places as the parties may agree", provide that in the absence of agreement the mother had discretion to determine visitation based on "the best interests and reasonable desires of the children", and rule that a specific visitation schedule was therefore unnecessary. In re Marriage of Revious, 226 M 304, 735 P2d 301, 44 St. Rep. 674 (1987).

Well-Being, Mental Health, Best Wishes, and Desires of Children — Father's Desire for Joint Custody Overridden: Any 40-4-224 (now repealed) presumption favoring joint custody was overridden by abundant evidence supporting grant of sole custody to the wife. The findings and reasons for granting her sole custody are identical to those for denying husband's request for joint custody. The lower court found that one of the two children, both of whom are girls, was mildly retarded; that the retarded girl had been molested by the paternal grandfather while visiting the father and as a result needed continuous psychiatric care; that the mother had told the father of a previous molestation attempt; that the retarded child attended a special education program, could not care for herself, and probably would not be able to for many years; that the mother and daughters had a close relationship and had lived together continuously since the parents' separation and the mother took care of the children's daily needs, including the special needs of the retarded child; and that the father, who lived in Whitefish, Montana, had seen the children, who lived in Washington and are 16 and 17 years old, only three times in the last 18 months and the children did not express a desire to spend time with him. In re Marriage of Manus, 225 M 457, 733 P2d 1275, 44 St. Rep. 398 (1987).

Petition to Modify Joint Custody — Standard — Change of Residence of Custodial Spouse: Wife appealed a District Court order that modified a joint custody decree by changing the physical custody of the children from the wife to the husband after the wife had requested that the husband assume custody for 1 ½ years because of her difficult financial circumstances. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court properly applied the best interest of children standard, rather than serious endangerment, which may be relied on only to terminate a joint custody arrangement. Furthermore, the husband was denied custody not because the wife moved to Texas but because the children's interests would best be served by allowing them to remain in the same family, school, and community they have enjoyed for several years. In re Marriage of Bergner & Owens, 222 M 305, 722 P2d 1141, 43 St. Rep. 1285 (1986).

Physical Custody Shared: The trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the children's best interests would be served by awarding joint custody, with physical custody shared equally by the parents. If either parent moved from the local area, the other parent would have physical custody of the children. In re Marriage of Ryan, 222 M 188, 720 P2d 691, 43 St. Rep. 1163 (1986).

Joint Custody Not Mandated — Material Outside Record Not Considered: Montana's policy favoring joint custody does not mandate joint custody. When the District Court carefully considered the best interests of the children and the recommendations of the children's guardian ad litem before awarding sole custody to the wife with reasonable visitation for the husband, the Supreme Court will not modify sole custody and will not consider a supplemental affidavit concerning the current residence of one of the children. The court will not consider any material outside the record developed at trial. In re Marriage of Cruikshank, 222 M 152, 720 P2d 1191, 43 St. Rep. 1132 (1986).

Court Not in Error in Denying Joint Custody and Limiting Summer Visitation: Appellant husband appealed judgment denying joint custody and limiting summer visitation to 2 weeks each summer. Appellant sought joint custody and summer visitation of 6 to 10 weeks. The District Court detailed to an extraordinary degree its concerns on the children's best interests. Furthermore, it left the door open for modification and for appellant to demonstrate, in the future, his capacity for joint custody or a longer period of visitation. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion and that its judgment was supported by substantial credible evidence. In re Marriage of Shelton, 219 M 456, 712 P2d 782, 43 St. Rep. 89 (1986).

Findings on Joint Custody Required: After several attempts at reconciliation, the parties' marriage was dissolved. During the dissolution the mother asked the court to grant the parties joint custody, with the provision that she be the residential parent. An attorney was appointed to represent the children, and he recommended that joint custody be awarded with the mother designated as the residential parent. The court awarded custody to the father. On appeal, the Supreme Court vacated the custody order and remanded for findings on why joint custody was not awarded as required by 40-4-224 (now repealed). Murphy v. Murphy, 205 M 162, 666 P2d 755, 40 St. Rep. 1188 (1983).

SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE, FINDINGS

Findings of District Court Regarding Custody of Child With Mother Not Erroneous Despite Evidence of Inappropriate Physical Contact Between Child and Mother's Relative: As part of a paternity action, the mother was awarded primary physical custody, and the father appealed. An amended parenting plan arrived at during mediation gave each parent physical custody of the child during alternating months. Near the end of one month's visit with the father, the child divulged that inappropriate physical contact with her stepgrandfather had occurred while in the mother's custody. The father moved for modification of the parenting plan. The District Court was faced with conflicting evidence in the case, receiving testimony from the stepgrandfather that no inappropriate touching occurred, as well as testimony from professionals who opined that sexual abuse had occurred. Additional expert testimony suggested that the child's constant travel was a possible cause of her troubling behavior and that the experts who suggested that sexual abuse occurred had not followed standard protocols when interviewing the child. Lay testimony indicated that it was unlikely that the stepgrandfather had an opportunity to commit the alleged abuse. The court ultimately determined that sexual abuse had not been proved. The father appealed on grounds that the court's findings were insufficient, that the court erred in not giving the father custody based on the evidence presented, and that the court erred by apparently rejecting the testimony of the child's clinical psychologist and the disclosures made by the child relating to sexual abuse. The Supreme Court noted that credibility determinations are within the province of the trier of fact and held that, in light of the conflicting testimony, the trial court's findings and conclusions were sufficient to support the court's decision. Although the trial court did not specifically articulate the elements of this section, it clearly made determinations that it considered to be in the child's best interests. Failure to list the contentions of a particular witness, such as the child's clinical psychologist, was not sufficient to determine a per se abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court. Without a clear showing of abuse of discretion, the Supreme Court declined to disturb the decision and affirmed the denial of the father's motion to modify the parenting plan. In re Paternity & Custody of A.D.V., 2001 MT 74, 305 M 62, 22 P3d 1124 (2001).

Credible Evidence in Expert's Recommendations That Child's Interests Best Served by Awarding Primary Custody to One Parent During School Year — Trial Court's Child Custody Decision Presumed Correct — Affirmation Absent Abuse of Discretion: Both parents were recognized as good but were unable to agree on important coparenting decisions once the child reached school age. The father wished to continue equal visitation time, and his experts expressed the opinion that the shared custody arrangement could work. The mother maintained that she could provide a more stable, structured home environment once school began, and her experts testified that the mother should have primary custody to achieve that stability. The District Court considered the opinions of all the experts and then granted primary residential custody to the mother. The Supreme Court found substantial credible evidence to support the custody award and found no indication that the court misapprehended the effect of the evidence or committed a clear and definite mistake in making the award. The trial court's decision is presumed correct and, absent a clear abuse of discretion, will be upheld on appeal. Here, the District Court properly considered the child's best interests, relied on professional assessments of those interests, and made an independent analysis of the facts, so no abuse of discretion occurred. Right of Interstate Travel as Basic Constitutional Freedom — Custodial Designation Improperly Revised: The District Court ordered that a mother who had relocated out of state must forfeit her status as primary custodian unless she moved back to Montana with the children. However, the right of interstate travel, which includes the right to migrate, resettle, find a new job, and start a new life, is a basic constitutional freedom recognized in Memorial Hosp. v. Maricopa County, 415 US 250, 39 L Ed 2d 306, 94 S Ct 1076 (1974), and described in Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 US 618, 22 L Ed 2d 600, 89 S Ct 1322 (1969), and Dunn v. Blumstein, 405 US 330, 31 L Ed 2d 274, 92 S Ct 995 (1972). A classification that operates to penalize persons who exercise this right must be justified by a compelling state interest, and the government's burden to justify this compelling interest is heavy. Absent legitimate, case-specific reasons and evidence pertaining to the particular child, there is no compelling state interest that justifies a court ordering a custodial parent to live in a state other than the state in which the parent freely chooses to reside. In the present case, the father failed in his burden to provide sufficient proof that the children's best interests would be most appropriately served by requiring the mother to move back to Montana or lose her status as primary physical custodian. The trial court erred in failing to apply the former rebuttable statutory presumption in subsection (3)(a) of this section (deleted 1997) regarding a grant of custody to the parent who has provided most of the primary care during the child's life and in ordering that custody be alternated between the parents every 2 years. In re Custody of D.M.G. & T.J.G., 1998 MT 1, 287 M 120, 951 P2d 1377, 55 St. Rep. 1 (1998), following In re Marriage of Cole, 224 M 207, 729 P2d 1276 (1986), and distinguishing In re Marriage of Abrahamson, 278 M 336, 924 P2d 1334 (1996), and In re Marriage of Tade, 282 M 449, 938 P2d 673 (1997).

Independent Review of Facts Conducted by District Court — District Court Did Not Ignore or Misconstrue Facts: Throughout Ed and Ann's marriage, Ed was the homemaker and primary caretaker of the couple's four children, while Ann pursued medical studies and then practiced medicine. Upon moving to Montana, the couple sought a dissolution. After the District Court awarded primary residential custody to Ann, Ed argued that the District Court failed to give an independent review of the facts, that it failed to review Ed's record as a caretaker, and that it misconstrued or ignored facts concerning the children's welfare. Citing In re Marriage of Merriman, 247 M 491, 807 P2d 1351 (1991), the Supreme Court held that the District Court is not required to make specific findings on each factor set forth in this section but must set forth only the "essential and determining factors" on which its determination is based. After reviewing the record, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did consider such factors as the wishes of the parties and the welfare of the children. In re Marriage of Bukacek, 274 M 98, 907 P2d 931, 52 St. Rep. 1141 (1995).

Court Not Required to Address Allegations That Father's Religion Practiced Exorcism and Taught Subservience of Women: Laurie Wang argued that the lower court had erred in not addressing her allegation that her child's best interests would not be served by awarding the father custody based on the fact that his religion practiced exorcism and taught that women should be subservient to men. The Supreme Court held that the lower court was not required to address every allegation of the parties and that the record showed sufficient evidence to support awarding custody to the father. In re Marriage of Wang, 271 M 291, 896 P2d 450, 52 St. Rep. 449 (1995).

Exercise of Independent Trial Court Judgment in Adopting Findings of Child's Best Interests: Mother asserted that the trial court failed to exercise independent judgment by adopting its findings of fact nearly verbatim from the findings proposed by the child's guardian ad litem. The court's findings were not clearly erroneous, and independent judgment was shown by the fact that: (1) the trial court appointed a guardian ad litem for the child; (2) custodial evaluation of the parties was ordered and conducted and the results were carefully considered; (3) the trial court carefully observed the testimony of witnesses and its appointed neutral experts, finding some persuasive and some not credible; and (4) the trial court thoroughly analyzed the record before it and considered the factors of this section when making its determinations. Although the court adopted the findings of the guardian ad litem, the recommendations of the custody evaluator were also considered and adopted in part. Relevant Factors Considered in Award of Sole Custody: An award of sole custody to mother was justified based on sufficient District Court findings that: (1) experts performing home studies found both parents fit but disagreed over the effects of split physical custody of a preschool child; (2) mother was the child's psychological parent; (3) mother had provided for the child's physical needs, environmental stimuli, emotional needs, and moral development; and (4) mother had maintained interaction with father's family and home community. In re Marriage of Nash, 254 M 231, 836 P2d 598, 49 St. Rep. 747 (1992).

Reasons Not Given for Adopting One Plan Over Another — Not Error: The husband argued that the lower court erred in adopting the wife's custody plan without giving any reasons for rejecting the husband's plan. The Supreme Court held that the lower court did not abuse its discretion in adopting any plan so long as the plan was supported by the evidence and the law of the case. In re Marriage of Tahija, 253 M 505, 833 P2d 1095, 49 St. Rep. 571 (1992).

Failure to State Basis for Custody Decision as Reversible Error: When nothing in the record demonstrated that the statutory criteria for making a custody determination were considered and that the essential and determining facts upon which the lower court rested its conclusions were not set forth, the omission constituted reversible error despite the court's attempts to bring the parties together amicably without having to resort to a trial. In re Marriage of Converse, 252 M 67, 826 P2d 937, 49 St. Rep. 162 (1992), distinguished in In re Custody of J.M.D., 259 M 468, 857 P2d 708, 50 St. Rep. 884 (1993), in which a custody trial was conducted prior to the parties' stipulation and there was no disagreement between the parties regarding the stipulation.

Credible Evidence Presented by Both Parties — Court's Determination Controlling: Both parties presented credible evidence supporting their respective custody claims. The District Court, after considering the factors set out in this section and making appropriately supported findings, decided the father's testimony was more substantial and credible and awarded custody to him. Absent abuse of discretion, it is the District Court's determination of the child's best interest that controls. In re Marriage of Otto, 245 M 271, 800 P2d 706, 47 St. Rep. 2080 (1990).

Findings — Wishes of Child: The District Court need not make specific findings of each statutory element. It must demonstrate only that it has considered each element by making specific findings as to the best interest of the child. The court is not required to award custody based on a child's preference. The District Court did not abuse its discretion by awarding primary custody of the parties' daughter to the mother in light of the child's expressed preference to live with her father. In re Marriage of Arrotta, 244 M 508, 797 P2d 940, 47 St. Rep. 1775 (1990), followed in In re Marriage of Kovash, 260 M 44, 858 P2d 351, 50 St. Rep. 934 (1993).

Adoption of One Party's Findings Not Error: The appellant argued that the lower court's adoption of the respondent's proposed findings and conclusions was error. The Supreme Court held that when the findings and conclusions are not clearly erroneous and are supported by the record, the judge has not abused his discretion. Lorenz v. Lorenz, 242 M 62, 788 P2d 328, 47 St. Rep. 546 (1990).

Findings Not Model of Completeness but Sufficient: The appellant argued that the lower court had erred in not addressing each element set out in the statute relating to determining the best interests of the children. The Supreme Court held that although the findings were not a model of completeness, the lower court did not have to specifically address each item and that taken as a whole, the findings were sufficient. Lorenz v. Lorenz, 242 M 62, 788 P2d 328, 47 St. Rep. 546 (1990).

Order Incorporating Findings of Earlier Decree Sufficient: The appellant argued that the findings of the lower court on the issue of the best interests of the child were insufficient. The Supreme Court disagreed, stating that the lower court's order contained 20 findings and also incorporated by reference the 58 findings of the original decree. In re Marriage of Susen, 242 M 10, 788 P2d 332, 47 St. Rep. 528 (1990).

Child Custody — Reliance on Expert Testimony Not Clearly Erroneous: The lower court heard testimony from numerous witnesses, including experts, as to the issue of child custody. The court did not abuse its discretion in relying heavily on the testimony and observations of two of the experts concerning the children's wishes, interrelationship of the children with their parents, and the mental and physical health of all individuals. In re Marriage of Ereth, 232 M 493, 757 P2d 1312, 45 St. Rep. 1223 (1988).

Statutory Factors Considered: The trial court issued nine findings relating to the custody issue, citing mother's remarriage into a stable family environment, her continuous custody of the child, father's sporadic visits, his home environment, and the child's attitude toward each parent. This evidence was sufficient to confirm that the court considered all five factors of this section. Failure to State Essential and Determining Facts in Preliminary Decree of Dissolution — Remand: While the District Court is not required to make specific findings on each of the statutory elements, it was an abuse of discretion warranting remand when the court, in the preliminary decree of dissolution, simply found that the "care, custody and control of the minor children of the parties should be with the petitioner, with reasonable visitation to the respondent". This conclusion lacked the required essential and determining facts on which custody was based. In re Marriage of Bloom-Higham, 227 M 217, 738 P2d 114, 44 St. Rep. 1025 (1987).

Adequacy of Nonspecific Findings Supported by Evidence: Although the Supreme Court would prefer that a trial court specifically address the factors listed in this section in the trial court's findings, failure to do so is not always fatal and was not fatal in this case because the trial court made numerous findings that basically addressed the factors and the findings were supported by substantial credible evidence. In re Marriage of Nalivka, 222 M 84, 720 P2d 683, 43 St. Rep. 1079 (1986). See also In re Marriage of J.J.C. & P.R.C., 227 M 264, 739 P2d 465, 44 St. Rep. 1068 (1987).

Written Findings Required: In awarding joint custody, the District Court should enter specific findings regarding the willingness of the parents to cooperate in custody matters and in their parental roles, the interaction and interrelationship of the child with each parent, and the effect of the geographic proximity of the parents' residences on their ability to share the rights and responsibilities of child rearing, particularly where there is a post-divorce birth and an absent parent requesting joint custody. Court to Make Specific Findings as to Child's Best Interests: Because the trial court did not make findings or other indications that it had considered each of the factors set forth in 40-4-212, the award of custody was set aside and the cause remanded for appropriate findings. Although the District Court need not make specific findings on each statutory element, it must demonstrate that it has considered each element by making specific findings as to the best interests of the child. In re Marriage of Keating, 212 M 462, 689 P2d 249, 41 St. Rep. 1865 (1984).

Statutory Factors Considered and Referred to Sufficient — Findings as to Mineral Interest and Attorney Fees Required: In awarding child custody to the husband, the court included in its finding the factors outlined in 40-4-212. In ordering the husband to pay maintenance, the court applied the factors set forth in 40-4-203 and referred to them in its findings of fact. There is no clear abuse of discretion by the District Court on either of these issues, and therefore the findings are affirmed. The District Court did not, however, place a value on a mineral interest, and the findings do not explain this exclusion. The court also failed to substantiate why attorney fees were not awarded to the wife. The case is therefore remanded to make findings on the value of the mineral interest and to state reasons as to the grant or denial of the wife's attorney fees. Hammeren v. Hammeren, 201 M 443, 663 P2d 1152, 39 St. Rep. 2222 (1982).

Specific Findings on Each Element Unnecessary — No Abuse of Discretion: In awarding custody, the District Court must consider the guidelines set forth in this section, although the court need not make specific findings on each of the elements. The record in this case demonstrates that the court heard sufficient testimony on each of the factors to support the findings of fact. Absent a clear abuse of discretion, the finding of the District Court will not be disturbed. No such abuse was shown in this case. Custody Award to Wife Supported by Substantial Evidence Although Husband Also Qualified: The two children of the marriage lived with the mother from the time of separation until the time of the divorce. The court granted the wife custody in the divorce decree and ordered the husband to pay $400 per month child support. The husband argued that he should have been awarded custody of the children because he fulfilled all the criteria of 40-4-212. He also argued that the court's findings did not properly address the children's interaction with other people in the wife's home, including the wife's new husband. The Supreme Court rejected the husband's argument, holding that there was substantial credible evidence to support the trial court's judgment. In addition, the court found that the trial court considered the needs of the children and the financial status of the husband and affirmed the child support award. In re Marriage of Burleigh, 200 M 1, 650 P2d 753, 39 St. Rep. 1538 (1982).

Custody Order — Necessity of Supporting Fact Findings: Where court's finding granting custody of 3-year-old child of divorced parents to the father was a conclusive statement unsupported by fact findings explaining why husband and not wife should have custody, the award was vacated and the cause remanded for new findings and conclusions and an order. The evidence supported an award to either party, but in making a prior order the court had found a close relationship between the child and his 7-year-old half sister, who lived with her mother, and had emphasized the relationship and ordered the parties to work out a joint custody arrangement, which they were unable to do, resulting in a subsequent grant of custody to only one party. Thus, the evidence and the findings in relation to the prior joint custody order tended to support a conclusion that the wife should have custody. Cameron v. Cameron, 197 M 226, 641 P2d 1057, 39 St. Rep. 485 (1982).

Criteria for Best Interests — Inadequate Findings: In determining child custody, trial courts must consider all of the pertinent criteria under the statute. Here the trial court failed to make findings as to the pertinent criteria and the case is therefore remanded for another hearing. In re Marriage of Markegard, 189 M 374, 616 P2d 323, 37 St. Rep. 1539 (1980). (Mr. Justice J. Sheehy dissenting.) See also Tomaskie v. Tomaskie, 191 M 508, 625 P2d 536, 38 St. Rep. 416 (1981).

Custody Award Undisturbed — No Clear Preponderance That Court Erred: Since the husband failed to establish by a clear preponderance of the evidence that the court erred in awarding custody of minor children to the wife, the trial court's decision will not be disturbed. Allen v. Allen, 175 M 527, 575 P2d 74 (1978).

Reputation Evidence: The admission of reputation evidence concerning petitioner's present husband's violent conduct in the home would be relevant as affecting his relationship with the child. Schiele v. Sager, 174 M 533, 571 P2d 1142 (1977).

Specific Finding Regarding Change of Circumstances: The court erred in relying on the "best interest of the child" test without making a specific finding that there had been a change in circumstances which seriously endangered the children's physical, mental, moral, or emotional health, and that the harm likely to be caused by a change of environment was outweighed by its advantages to the children. Schiele v. Sager, 174 M 533, 571 P2d 1142 (1977).

VISITATION

Error in Allowing Unsupervised Visitation by Spouse With History of Domestic Violence: Despite the father's history of violent behavior and convictions for domestic abuse, the District Court found that because the father had been observed several times acting appropriately with his children, unsupervised visitation was suitable. However, the court had an obligation to consider the mental and emotional impact that unsupervised visitation would have on the children in light of the father's history of violent behavior against the mother. The overwhelming evidence showed that there was at least some risk to the children if left alone with their father. Several therapists opposed unsupervised visitation, and psychologists treating the children reported to the guardian ad litem that the father's actions during visitation had a negative effect on the children's emotional well-being. The Supreme Court reversed the decision allowing unsupervised visitation and directed development of a parenting plan that included supervised, well-structured visitation—not to punish the father, but for the benefit of the children. In re Marriage of Stoneman, 2000 MT 274, 302 M 107, 14 P3d 12, 57 St. Rep. 1145 (2000).

Counseling as Condition to Visitation With Two-Year-Old Child by Violent Father: Husband was properly ordered to undergo counseling as a condition to visitation with a child less than 2 years old because both he and his wife presented evidence that he had hit her, that several times he had destroyed property in anger, that police had been called to the home at least six times due to his violence, and that he had twice been hospitalized for suicidal ideation. In re Marriage of Bradshaw, 270 M 222, 891 P2d 506, 52 St. Rep. 154 (1995).

Visitation Restrictions Based on Unsupported Claims of Potential Harm From Transvestism as Abuse of Discretion: Wife claimed that husband had exhibited compulsive transvestite tendencies and that exposure of the child to that behavior could result in irreparable harm. The trial court agreed, severely limiting visitation to the daytime weekend hours and requiring that visits be supervised by the wife or an adult, nontransvestite member of the husband's family. However, every expert who testified on the issue stated that: (1) the husband's therapy had been successful; (2) the husband exhibited above-average parenting skills; (3) any negative impact on the child because of the father's behavior would be less than the impact from not having a normal relationship with the father; and (4) the highly restrictive visitation arrangement was not conducive to a normal father-child relationship. The trial court's imposition of visitation restrictions, in spite of uncontroverted expert testimony, was an abuse of discretion and reversible error. In re Marriage of D.F.D. & D.G.D., 261 M 186, 862 P2d 368, 50 St. Rep. 1280 (1993).

Sole Custody Awarded Father — Mother's Mental Health a Factor in Granting Supervised Visitation — No Abuse of Discretion: Mother appealed from the District Court child custody order in a dissolution of marriage granting the father sole custody of their son and granting the mother supervised visitation rights. The Supreme Court ruled that because mental health is a factor used in determining the best interests of the child, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in relying upon the opinion of experts that the mother was in need of treatment and in granting sole custody to the father and ordering supervised visitation by the mother. In re Marriage of Cook, 250 M 210, 819 P2d 180, 48 St. Rep. 795 (1991).

Reasonableness of Order Authorizing No Fixed Holiday Visitation: The District Court did not err in setting father's visitation arrangements as alternating weekends from 6 p.m. Friday until 6 p.m. Sunday, plus 60 days during the year at times agreeable to the parties. Despite father's contention that the arrangement "totally eliminated any contact between the father and the child on any holidays", substantial evidence showed the visitation schedule to be in the child's best interests. In re Marriage of Graveley, 244 M 137, 796 P2d 585, 47 St. Rep. 1497 (1990).

Reasonable Visitation Provision Replaced by Fixed Visitation Schedule — No Abuse of Discretion: Following dissolution of marriage, mother was granted custody of two minor children with reasonable visitation awarded to father. In the ensuing months, the father was permitted to visit the children only once and further attempts to arrange visitation were not successful since the mother had no phone and would not respond to messages. The father petitioned the District Court to grant a fixed visitation schedule, and the petition was granted. Although not required under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the order contained findings and conclusions, including evidence that the District Court Judge considered the best interests of the children and the conclusion that the mother's suggested graduated basis visitation schedule required reasonableness that was lacking in both parties. The Supreme Court held that the District Court's aid was necessary to clarify the meaning of "reasonable visitation" and found no abuse of discretion in the District Court Judge's conclusion. In re Marriage of Vinecke, 221 M 58, 716 P2d 638, 43 St. Rep. 633 (1986).

Visitation as Incident of Custody — Same Considerations: The visitation rights of a parent are merely incidents of custody, and the same principles that apply to custody apply to visitation rights as well. In this case, the court based its decision on prior agreements and dealings between the parents and ignored certain other factors that must be considered under 40-4-212. Factors ignored included testimony of a psychiatrist as to the mother's mental health, the wishes of the children, and the testimony of a clinical psychologist as to the best interest of the children. The judgment of the District Court was reversed. Milanovich v. Milanovich, 201 M 332, 655 P2d 959, 39 St. Rep. 1554 (1982).

WISHES OF PARENT, PARENTS

Use of Mother's Surname in Best Interests of Child: The selection of a child's surname is a matter of choice, not law, and in determining whether to change a child's surname, a District Court must be guided by a child's best interests. In this case, the court correctly applied the best interests of the child standard in a nonsexist, nonpaternalistic manner, focusing on the child's interests rather than the wishes of a parent, such as the father's desire that his surname be carried on into future generations, in determining that the child would best carry the mother's surname. In re Custody of J.C.O., 1999 MT 325, 297 M 327, 993 P2d 667, 56 St. Rep. 1298 (1999).

Best Interest Used to Determine Custody of Child, Not Employment of Parent: Mother contended that because she was raising the child alone, it was in the child's best interests that she remain at home 5 days a week and work part-time 2 days a week. However, a court cannot order a mother to stay home and raise a child. The best interest criteria are used to determine the type of custody arrangement for a child, not to determine the employment status of parents, and it was not error for the court to find that the child's best interests did not require the mother to stay home to raise him. In re Paternity of W.L., 259 M 187, 855 P2d 521, 50 St. Rep. 751 (1993).

Custody Award Supported by Favorable Interaction and Interrelationship of Boys With Father: District Court properly awarded custody to father where evidence showed he spent considerable amounts of time with boys and entered into activities with them, whereas mother had made no attempt to see children for a year and had not written or sent birthday gifts. Haywood v. Sedillo, 167 M 101, 535 P2d 1014 (1975).

WISHES OF CHILD

No Error in Modification of Joint Custody Order Against Child's Own Wishes: When the mother and father were divorced, they entered into a stipulation providing for joint custody of their daughter, with primary physical custody for the mother and liberal visitation for the father. In the years following the divorce, the mother, by moving to other states and not allowing the daughter to see her father, continually frustrated the father's attempts to have a meaningful relationship with his daughter. The father petitioned for a change of primary physical custody. The petition was granted by the District Court after the court interviewed the daughter, who did not want to live with her father. The Supreme Court held that there was no error in the District Court's modification of the custody order. The record showed that the District Court considered the best interests of the child. The Supreme Court stated, citing Marriage of Mitchell, 248 M 105, 809 P2d 582 (1991), that although the testimony was not the same on both sides, it was the District Court's duty to resolve those conflicts and further stated that the Court's resolution of those conflicts will not be disturbed on appeal absent an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Ulland, 251 M 160, 823 P2d 864, 48 St. Rep. 1159 (1991).

Children's Expressed Wishes Not Determinative of Best Interests: Following an interview with the children, aged 5 and 7 years, the trial court ascertained their wishes as to custody. Rather than expressly following their wishes, the court granted primary physical custody of both children to their mother, which father contended necessitated reversal of the custody order. A review of the children's testimony in light of other testimony supported the court's conclusion that the children's expressed wishes were not determinative of their best interests. The court considered the children's desires but did not err in failing to follow their wishes. In re Marriage of Merriman, 247 M 491, 807 P2d 1351, 48 St. Rep. 275 (1991).

Findings — Wishes of Child: The District Court need not make specific findings of each statutory element. It must demonstrate only that it has considered each element by making specific findings as to the best interest of the child. The court is not required to award custody based on a child's preference. The District Court did not abuse its discretion by awarding primary custody of the parties' daughter to the mother in light of the child's expressed preference to live with her father. In re Marriage of Arrotta, 244 M 508, 797 P2d 940, 47 St. Rep. 1775 (1990).

Interview Not Necessary to Determine Wishes of Child: The appellant argued that the lower court erred in failing to interview the child to determine what her wishes were. The Supreme Court held that the findings demonstrated that the court had made a determination of the child's wishes based upon the testimony of others and that the court was not obligated to interview the child to ascertain her wishes. In re Marriage of Susen, 242 M 10, 788 P2d 332, 47 St. Rep. 528 (1990), followed in In re Marriage of Bukacek, 274 M 98, 907 P2d 931, 52 St. Rep. 1141 (1995).

Failure to Ask Children About Parental Preference — No Error: The Supreme Court refused to state categorically that because a District Court failed to directly ask children which parent they would rather live with, the judgment must be reversed. The record indicated that the children were asked questions about which place they preferred without being asked which parent they preferred to live with. Given the youth of the children, the lower court was not willing to place the children in the position to make such a decision. However, their wishes and best interests were adequately considered. In re Custody of J.H., S.H., & Ja.H., 231 M 301, 752 P2d 194, 45 St. Rep. 627 (1988).

Custody Based on Children's Preference — Custody to Father After School Year in Which They Reach Age Twelve: It was not an abuse of discretion for the judge to award custody of 8- and 10-year-old boys to the mother until the end of the school year in which each would turn 12 years old, with the father having custody all but 10 days of each summer, and thereafter permanent custody to the father, with the mother having custody for a month each summer and the children spending alternate holidays with the parents. Each boy had a strong preference for living with the father and for the farm lifestyle of the father, and though each boy had a normal and healthy relationship with the mother, each had some negative feelings about that relationship and did not wish to live with her. In addition, all four grandparents and assorted maternal and paternal cousins, aunts, and uncles lived near the father. The court's findings and conclusions were supported by substantial credible evidence. In re Marriage of Obergfell, 218 M 83, 708 P2d 561, 42 St. Rep. 1414 (1985).

Failure to Find as to Child's Wishes — Remand: The presumption that husband was the natural father of child arose when he married its mother after it was born and, with his consent, was named as the father on the birth certificate. This presumption was rebutted when, in proceeding upon mother's petition for dissolution of the marriage, she and her husband acknowledged under oath that he was not the natural father. Therefore, he could be granted custody of the child only in the capacity of a nonparent. The mother could be deprived of custody only upon a finding of unfitness, abuse, or neglect. The record supported the trial court's finding that the mother was unfit and unable to care for the child. Thus, the husband could be considered as a potential custodian and was granted custody. The trial court made no finding as to the wishes of the child because there was no evidence on this point. Though the wishes of the child would have little weight, as the child was only 4 years old, a remand was necessary for consideration of the child's wishes and a new custody determination. In re Custody of C.C., K.C., & B.C., 215 M 72, 695 P2d 816, 42 St. Rep. 190 (1985), overruled, with regard to use of marriage and divorce procedures in determination of appropriateness of custodianship for nonparent, in In re Marriage of Miller, 251 M 300, 825 P2d 189, 49 St. Rep. 36 (1992).

Wishes of Children Considered — Interview Not Necessary: The court rejected appellant's contention that there were no findings regarding the factors specified in 40-4-212, particularly as to the wishes of the children regarding custody as required by In re Kramer, 177 M 61, 580 P2d 439 (1978). The court distinguished this case from Kramer, which is limited only to those situations where the District Court has interviewed the children. The District Court was not compelled by 40-4-214 to interview the children. The court found that the preferences of the children, as well as their best interests, were considered. In re Marriage of Hickey, 213 M 38, 689 P2d 1222, 41 St. Rep. 1931 (1984), followed in In re Marriage of Bukacek, 274 M 98, 907 P2d 931, 52 St. Rep. 1141 (1995).

Court to Make Specific Findings as to Child's Best Interests: Because the trial court did not make findings or other indications that it had considered each of the factors set forth in 40-4-212, the award of custody was set aside and the cause remanded for appropriate findings. Although the District Court need not make specific findings on each statutory element, it must demonstrate that it has considered each element by making specific findings as to the best interests of the child. In re Marriage of Keating, 212 M 462, 689 P2d 249, 41 St. Rep. 1865 (1984).

Award of Custody Contrary to Child's Wishes Upheld — No "Tender Years Presumption" Applied: In an action for dissolution of the parties' marriage in which the custody of all of the children was awarded to the father, despite the wishes of at least one of the children, the court did not err in making its custody decree, as the wishes of the children are only one factor to be considered by the court. Additionally, the mother is not to be considered the "preferred" parent in cases involving young children, as the Supreme Court previously held in In re Marriage of Markegard, 189 M 374, 616 P2d 323 (1980), that the "presumption of tender years" is no longer to be followed in the courts of this state. Bier v. Sherrard, 191 M 215, 623 P2d 550, 38 St. Rep. 158 (1981).

Finding as to Child's Wishes:

Although the District Court did not make a specific finding in the decree concerning a child's wishes, the court amended its finding on his custody and at that time stated the child's wishes as expressed in chambers, thereby satisfying the requirement set forth in Kramer. Kaasa v. Kaasa, 181 M 18, 591 P2d 1110 (1979).

A court considering custody in a divorce proceeding should make a specific finding, stating the wishes of the children as to their custodian, and if the court determines that the children's wishes are not to be followed, the court should state in its findings the reason it has chosen not to follow their wishes. In re Marriage of Kramer, 177 M 61, 580 P2d 439 (1978), followed in Murphy v.

Murphy, 205 M 162, 666 P2d 755, 40 St. Rep. 1188 (1983), and Kuzara v. Kuzara, 211 M 43, 682 P2d 1371, 41 St. Rep. 1201 (1984).

Welfare of Child Paramount to Child's Wishes: Where evidence showed emotional instability on part of mother and that welfare of child would be better served by awarding custody to father, it was not an abuse of discretion to award custody to father even though child expressed desire to live with her mother. Libra v. Libra, 157 M 252, 484 P2d 748 (1971).

ADJUSTMENT OF CHILD

Requirement That Children Remain Together Not Erroneous — Sibling Bond: Mother contended that the lower court erred in holding that the best interests of the children required that they remain together, ignoring the special bond between mother and daughter. The Supreme Court found no error in the conclusion that splitting the children was not advisable because of the danger of the children identifying with the parent with whom they live at the expense of alienation from the other parent and that the bond between the children would remain of great value in the coming years. In re Marriage of Smith, 232 M 528, 757 P2d 784, 45 St. Rep. 1253 (1988).

Factors in Custody Decision — Close Relationship of Child to Other Family Members: The continuity and stability of the family relationship between a child and its custodian are important; therefore, court to which custody case was remanded after vacation of order was requested to consider, in framing a new order, its previous factual determination that the 3-year-old child, while temporarily living with mother, had a close relationship with his 7-year-old half sister who lived with her mother. Cameron v. Cameron, 197 M 226, 641 P2d 1057, 39 St. Rep. 485 (1982).

Custody Award Supported by Favorable Interaction and Interrelationship of Boys With Father: District Court properly awarded custody to father where evidence showed he spent considerable amounts of time with boys and entered into activities with them, whereas mother had made no attempt to see children for a year and had not written or sent birthday gifts. Haywood v. Sedillo, 167 M 101, 535 P2d 1014 (1975).

MENTAL, PHYSICAL HEALTH

Visitation Restrictions Based on Unsupported Claims of Potential Harm From Transvestism as Abuse of Discretion: Wife claimed that husband had exhibited compulsive transvestite tendencies and that exposure of the child to that behavior could result in irreparable harm. The trial court agreed, severely limiting visitation to the daytime weekend hours and requiring that visits be supervised by the wife or an adult, nontransvestite member of the husband's family. However, every expert who testified on the issue stated that: (1) the husband's therapy had been successful; (2) the husband exhibited above-average parenting skills; (3) any negative impact on the child because of the father's behavior would be less than the impact from not having a normal relationship with the father; and (4) the highly restrictive visitation arrangement was not conducive to a normal father-child relationship. The trial court's imposition of visitation restrictions, in spite of uncontroverted expert testimony, was an abuse of discretion and reversible error. In re Marriage of D.F.D. & D.G.D., 261 M 186, 862 P2d 368, 50 St. Rep. 1280 (1993).

Failure to Consider Mental and Physical Health and Physical Abuse Documented by Case Worker — Reversal Warranted: The District Court committed reversible error in failing to consider the information provided in a home and family assessment study by a social worker regarding the mother's mental health and her documented physical and emotional abuse of the children and in neglecting to order a psychological evaluation of the mother to determine her parenting capability or neglecting to order counseling for the mother and other family members. Maxwell v. Maxwell, 248 M 189, 810 P2d 311, 48 St. Rep. 386 (1991), citing In re Marriage of Bloom-Higham, 227 M 217, 738 P2d 114 (1987). However, see In re Marriage of McLean/Fleury, 257 M 55, 849 P2d 1012, 50 St. Rep. 35 (1993).

Sexual Abuse of Parent Not Determinative of Fitness for Custody: Appellant contended that custody of two children should not have been granted to mother because she was sexually abused by her father as a child and yet allowed him to see the children. The fact that mother was a child victim of sexual abuse had no relevance to the children's best interests absent evidence that the abuse affected her mental or physical health to the extent that her ability to act as a caretaker was diminished. In light of the fact that her father's visitation was not allowed unless she was present, the award of custody to her was affirmed. In re Marriage of Merriman, 247 M 491, 807 P2d 1351, 48 St. Rep. 275 (1991).

Itinerant Lifestyle and Physical Abuse — Modification Granted: The District Court did not err in transferring custody of a child from mother to father when court found: (1) that mother's remarriage resulted in an itinerant lifestyle with crowded and substandard housing conditions; (2) that the child was subjected to harsh, repeated, inappropriate, and excessive physical discipline and showed signs of abuse and fear of his stepfather; and (3) that the father had superior child raising and discipline practices and stability and security over that to which the child had been subject. The District Court's findings were supported by substantial evidence. The father met his required burden of proof to support his contention that modification of the decree was necessary to serve the best interests of the child. In re Custody of Dumont, 216 M 118, 700 P2d 167, 42 St. Rep. 687 (1985).

Abuse and Neglect — Custody With Intervening Divorce: Where a couple voluntarily surrendered their child to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) because of abuse and neglect by the mother, the District Court was correct in continuing with the abuse and neglect custody proceeding rather than dismissing it and allowing custody to be determined in the couple's divorce action. Once a determination of abuse and neglect has been made, the court proceeds to a dispositional hearing to determine the custody of the child. In re M.M., 200 M 244, 650 P2d 784, 39 St. Rep. 1716 (1982).

Fit Parent Properly Denied Custody — Factors to Be Considered by Court: In an action for dissolution of the parties' marriage in which the court found the wife not an unfit mother, the trial court did not err in granting custody of the two children of the parties to the father. The fitness of either party as a parent is only one factor to be considered by the court in granting custody. The court also found that the wife's new husband had an unsettling influence upon the children. Therefore, no error was committed. Bier v. Sherrard, 191 M 215, 623 P2d 550, 38 St. Rep. 158 (1981).

Removal of Children Warranted: The District Court did not abuse its discretion when it granted the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services' (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) petition for permanent custody and authority to consent to adoption of three children since they were adjudged dependent and neglected and there was ample evidence to warrant removal from their parents. In re Gore, Youths in Need of Care, 174 M 321, 570 P2d 1110 (1977).

Change of Circumstances Warranting Change of Custody: To prevent uprooting of child of tender years who had been in physical custody of her father by agreement of parents because of child's emotional problem, it was in the best interest of the child to change legal custody to the father because of change of circumstances. Gilbert v. Gilbert, 166 M 312, 533 P2d 1079 (1975).

40-4-213. Interim parenting plan.

Commissioners' Note

Subsection (a) [(1)] encourages trial courts to issue temporary custody orders without formal hearing whenever possible. Since the hearing itself may be a traumatic event for both parents (and therefore for their children, indirectly), the trial court is authorized to make temporary orders on the basis of affidavits alone unless one of the parties files formal objection to that procedure. In most cases, it is expected that trial judges will award temporary custody to the existing custodian so as to minimize disruption for the child.

Subsection (b) [(2)] states an important principle designed to foster values supporting family privacy. If a petition for dissolution or legal separation is dismissed voluntarily, there is no reason for the court to hold a special hearing and make a special (and extraordinary) finding before making any substantive custody decision. In most cases, then, if the dissolution petition is dismissed, the parties, whether or not they reconcile, will determine for themselves who should be the child's custodian. If the child's circumstances warrant concern for his physical or emotional security, the standard for community intervention expressed in the state's Juvenile Court Act should be the measure applied to the family. The divorce court can always alert juvenile court or welfare department staff informally that a problem may exist.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 343 in (1), in first sentence near beginning, substituted "parenting" for "custody" and at end substituted "an interim parenting plan" for "a temporary custody order" and in third sentence, near beginning, substituted "adopt an interim parenting plan" for "award temporary custody"; in (2), in first sentence near beginning before "is vacated", substituted "interim parenting plan" for "temporary custody order", after "unless a parent" deleted "or the child's custodian", near middle, before "proceeding", substituted "parenting" for "custody", and at end substituted "that a parenting plan be adopted" for "that a custody decree be issued" and inserted second sentence providing that a child support delinquency existing at the time an interim parenting plan is vacated remains collectible; in (3), in first sentence near beginning, substituted "parenting" for "custody" and near end substituted "interim parenting plan" for "temporary custody order" and inserted second sentence providing that a child support delinquency existing at the time an interim parenting plan is vacated remains collectible; inserted (4) providing that adoption of a final parenting plan vacates any interim parenting plan and that a child support delinquency existing at the time an interim parenting plan is vacated remains collectible; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Alteration of Temporary Custody Order — Showing of Changed Circumstances Not Required: Wife was awarded custody on an ex parte motion and at a later hearing was granted temporary custody pending final resolution of the action. Although the temporary order did not specifically state that the rights of the noncustodial parent would not be prejudiced, the Supreme Court held that the temporary order did not require a showing of changed circumstances before the final custody order could alter the terms of the temporary order. It would be inherently unfair to require a noncustodial parent to make a higher threshold showing of changed circumstances before a custody order may deviate from a temporary order. In re Marriage of Allen, 237 M 64, 771 P2d 578, 46 St. Rep. 624 (1989), distinguishing In re Custody of Andre, 234 M 80, 761 P2d 809, 45 St. Rep. 1745 (1988), and followed in In re Marriage of Kovash, 260 M 44, 858 P2d 351, 50 St. Rep. 934 (1993), in which it was held that forcing parents to litigate temporary custody by requiring proof of changed circumstances before temporary custody orders could be modified would be contrary to the purpose of this section.

Change in Custody From Temporary Order: In 1981, the District Court awarded the wife custody of the minor children during the pendency of an action for dissolution of marriage. The court specifically stated that this order was made without prejudice to the rights of the parties or their children. Two years later, the court entered the final custody order and in it awarded custody of one child to the father. The wife appealed, claiming that the District Court had erroneously modified an existing custody decree and had disturbed custodial continuity. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that although custody should be determined without delay and 2 years had elapsed prior to the final custody award, modification of the temporary custody order was proper. In re Marriage of Beitz, 211 M 111, 683 P2d 485, 41 St. Rep. 1247 (1984).

Abuse of Discretion in Awarding Custody: The court abused its discretion in awarding custody of children to the mother by ignoring the desires of the children, excluding a report of investigation by the welfare department, and in hearing the child custody issue without the presence of the children's attorney. The court should make a specific finding, stating the wishes of the children as to their custodian and, if the court determines that the children's wishes are not being followed, the court should state in its findings the reason it has chosen not to follow their wishes. Kramer v. Kramer, 177 M 61, 580 P2d 439 (1978).

Erroneous Award of Temporary Custody to Aunt: An aunt did not have standing to bring an action for temporary custody of her brother's children because they were in the "physical custody", although not actual and immediate control, of their mother. The aunt was not a party to the original custody proceeding, the motion for temporary custody was accompanied by a deficient affidavit, and no notice was given to the mother. Henderson v. Henderson, 174 M 1, 568 P2d 177 (1977).

Commissioners' Note

This section, and the two which follow, are designed to permit the court to make custodial and visitation decisions as informally and non-contentiously as possible, based on as much relevant information as can be secured, while preserving a fair hearing for all interested parties.

The general rule is that the judge may interview the child in chambers. It is often important for the judge to discover the attitudes and wishes of the child, and there is no reason to subject the child to the formality of the courtroom and the unpleasantness of cross-examination. This provision does not require the judge to permit counsel to be present at the interview, but he must make some kind of record of the interview (using a court reporter or a tape recorder) so that counsel for all parties will have access to the substance of the interview. Similarly, the judge may call informally on experts in a variety of disciplines without subjecting them, in the first instance, to the formal hearing process. But the experts' advice should be available to counsel for the parties so that the judge's decision will not be based on secret information; and the parties should be able to examine the expert as to the substance of his advice to the judge.

Case Notes

Necessity of Determining Child's Preference When Record Clearly Shows Change Is Necessary: Although it would have been preferable for the judge to interview the children in a change of custody proceeding to determine which parent they wanted to live with, such a determination is not required in every case. Here, failure to make the determination was not error because the record clearly showed that the best interests of the children required a change of custody from the mother to the father. McDowell v. McDowell, 263 M 252, 868 P2d 1250, 51 St. Rep. 42 (1994).

Failure to Release Transcript of Interview Not Abuse of Discretion: Appellant argued that the trial court abused its discretion in failing to release the transcript of the interview with the children and in making specific findings concerning the children's wishes. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that the children's wishes were known to all parties prior to the hearing and that the trial court clearly set forth its reasons for awarding physical custody of one child to the father and leaving physical custody of the other child with the mother. In re Marriage of Arbuckle, 243 M 10, 792 P2d 1123, 47 St. Rep. 1150 (1990).

Wishes of Children Considered — Interview Not Necessary: The court rejected appellant's contention that there were no findings regarding the factors specified in 40-4-212, particularly as to the wishes of the children regarding custody as required by In re Kramer, 177 M 61, 580 P2d 439 (1978). The court distinguished this case from Kramer, which is limited only to those situations where the District Court has interviewed the children. The District Court was not compelled by 40-4-214 to interview the children. The court found that the preferences of the children, as well as their best interests, were considered. In re Marriage of Hickey, 213 M 38, 689 P2d 1222, 41 St. Rep. 1931 (1984).

No Abuse of Discretion Found in Failure to Require Psychological Testing: In an action for dissolution of the parties' marriage in which the trial court left a permanent custody decision pending until the wife and husband received psychological evaluations, the court did not abuse its discretion when, upon a later showing that the wife had not obtained the evaluation, it failed to order the test. Whether or not to require psychological testing is a matter within the court's discretion, and the husband has not demonstrated any abuse of it. A review of the transcript also indicated sufficient other evidence upon which the court could base its decision. Bier v. Sherrard, 191 M 215, 623 P2d 550, 38 St. Rep. 158 (1981).

Failure to Include Children's Names in Record: The failure of the court reporter to include the children's names in the record of an in-chambers interview was not reversible error. Bailey v. Bailey, 184 M 418, 603 P2d 259 (1979).

Leading Questions to Child: The trial court did not err in asking a child leading questions during an in-chambers interview. Leading questions may be asked if necessary to develop testimony, and whether or not they will be allowed is a matter for the trial court's discretion. One of the exceptions to the prohibition against leading questions is when the witness is a child, and here, where the child was rather withdrawn, the asking of leading questions was not an abuse of discretion. Bailey v. Bailey, 184 M 418, 603 P2d 259 (1979).

Presence of Child Who Had Reached Age of Majority: There is no basis for appellant's contention that the parties' oldest son, who had reached the age of majority, should not have been present at the in-chambers interview. There was no request for his exclusion and no objection to his inclusion, and the issue cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Bailey v. Bailey, 184 M 418, 603 P2d 259 (1979).

Undue Influence Over Children: Although the trial judge did not inquire whether the children had been "coached" before the interview by someone sympathetic to the wife, the record reveals that upon being asked, one of the children said that any conversation that took place was among themselves. The credibility of the declarant and the effect of his statement was for the judge to determine, and the judge was apparently satisfied that no undue influence had been exerted and did not pursue the matter further. Bailey v. Bailey, 184 M 418, 603 P2d 259 (1979).

Finding as to Child's Wishes: Although the District Court did not make a specific finding in the decree concerning a child's wishes, the District Court amended its finding on his custody and at that time stated the child's wishes as expressed in chambers, thereby satisfying the requirement set forth in Kramer v. Kramer, 177 M 61, 580 P2d 439 (1978). Kaasa v. Kaasa, 181 M 18, 591 P2d 1110 (1979).

Lack of Record: While the practice of conducting off-record interviews is not desirable, the lack of a record alone does not always require reversal. Wilson v. Wilson, 180 M 377, 590 P2d 1136 (1979).

Waiver of Transcript: The statutory requirement of a verbatim transcript of the District Court interview of minor children is a provision that can be waived by the parents in a dissolution of marriage proceeding. Having voluntarily waived a known right they cannot complain about the lack of a record for appeal. Counts v. Chapman, 180 M 102, 589 P2d 151 (1979).

Record of Interview Required:

The holding of the interview pursuant to this section is discretionary. However, once such discretion is exercised, the statute mandates that a record of the interview be made and that such record be part of the case record. Brown v. Brown, 179 M 417, 587 P2d 361 (1978).

The mandate of this section was not complied with when the trial court failed to cause a record of the interview to be made. Schiele v. Sager, 174 M 533, 571 P2d 1142 (1977).

Specific Finding Required: When an interview is held, the District Court must make a specific finding stating the wishes of the child as to his custodian. Brown v. Brown, 179 M 417, 587 P2d 361 (1978).

Waiver of Record Requirement: An attorney may waive the requirement that all interviews with the child be on the record but may not then complain that he was prejudiced by not having the interviews recorded. Lehman v. Billman, 178 M 367, 584 P2d 662 (1978).

Determining Custody Distinguished From Modification: The court did not err by failing to interview a minor child and order that an investigation and report concerning custodial arrangements be made, since the only issue before the court was whether to modify a custody decree, determination of custody already having been made. Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978).

Failure to Interview: The trial court did not err in failing to interview 3-year-old child as to his preference on dissolution of his parents' marriage, where both parents testified as to their desire to have custody of the child. In re Marriage of Tweeten, 172 M 404, 563 P2d 1141 (1977).

Record Not Required: Supreme Court will not require entire record in making its decision when no objections were made of interviews conducted in chambers. Solie v. Solie, 172 M 132, 561 P2d 443 (1977).

40-4-215. Investigations and reports.

Commissioners' Note

The Act steers a middle course between those courts which prohibit a custody investigation unless both parties stipulate to it and those statutes which permit the judge to order an investigation in every case. It is obvious that custody investigations, whether made by a member of the court's staff or by a public or private agency employed for that purpose, can be useful aids to the court. But most custody dispositions are consensual decisions of the parents, and there is no reason to permit the judge to order an investigation in such cases unless one of the spouses, although agreeing to the disposition, wants some further inquiry made. Under these circumstances, the court can order an investigation even if the other spouse opposes it. Similarly, in contested cases, where the judge's need for independent investigation is greatest, a custody study can be ordered even if both spouses are opposed.

The provisions of subsections (b) [(2)] and (c) [(3)] detail the procedural aspects of custody investigations and reports. They assure that investigations will be conducted with due regard to fair hearing values, while encouraging investigators to provide accurate information to the court.

2001 Amendments — Composite Section: (Temporary version) Chapter 465 in (1) in third sentence after "recipient of" substituted "financial assistance, as defined in 53-4-201, or a participant in the food stamp program" for "cash assistance under the temporary assistance for needy families block grant, FAIM financial assistance" and after "53-2-902" deleted "food stamps, or public assistance"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

(Version effective July 1, 2002) Chapter 585 in (1) at end of sixth sentence substituted "must be paid by the state as provided in 3-5-901" for "must be paid from the fees for filing petitions for contested amendment of a parenting plan, as provided in 25-1-201(9)".

The amendments to this section in sec. 146, Ch. 574, L. 2001, were rendered void by sec. 255(3), Ch. 574, L. 2001, a coordination section.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 45, Ch. 465, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to payments made after January 1, 2001, for mental health services provided to children with serious emotional disturbances for whom mental health services are not provided by any other public mental health services program and whose family income is at or below 150% of the federal poverty level."

Saving Clause: Section 55, Ch. 585, L. 2001, was a saving clause.

1997 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 343 in (1), at beginning of first sentence, substituted "If a parent or a court-appointed third party requests, or if the court finds that a parenting proceeding is contested" for "In contested custody proceedings and in other custody proceedings if a parent or the child's custodian requests" and near end, before "arrangements", substituted "parenting" for "custodial", inserted second sentence concerning what persons may act as the investigator, in third sentence, near middle before "requesting", substituted "person" for "parent or the child's custodian" and after "recipient of" substituted "cash assistance under the temporary assistance for needy families block grant" for "aid to families with dependent children", and inserted sixth sentence providing that the cost of the educational evaluation be paid from fees for filing petitions for contested amendment of a parenting plan; inserted (2) providing for court determination of the level of evaluation necessary for adequate investigation and preparation of the report; in (3), at end of first sentence, substituted "parenting arrangements" for "custodial arrangements" and at beginning of third sentence inserted exception clause and at end substituted "persons or entities authorized by law to grant or withhold access to records" for "parent or the child's custodian"; in (4), at beginning of second sentence, inserted "When consistent with state and federal law" and inserted fifth sentence requiring the results of the investigation to be included in the court record and allowing without objection the investigation to be sealed; adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 486 in second sentence in (1), after "recipient", substituted "of FAIM financial assistance, as defined in 53-2-902" for "of aid to families with dependent children". Amendment effective May 2, 1997.

Both chapters substituted phrases for "aid to families with dependent children". The codifier has retained both substitutions.

Saving Clause: Section 41, Ch. 343, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

Section 50, Ch. 486, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 42, Ch. 343, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 43, Ch. 343, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] applies to proceedings begun after October 1, 1997, including proceedings regarding modification of orders or decrees existing on October 1, 1997."

1995 Amendments: Chapter 18 in second sentence of (1), after "food stamps", substituted "or public assistance" for "or general relief benefits".

Chapter 546 in (1), in second sentence, substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of family services" and after "food stamps" deleted "[or general relief benefits]"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Saving Clause: Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1993 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 434 in (1) substituted present second and third sentences regarding conditions under which the Department may be ordered to conduct the investigation or draft a report for former second and third sentences that read: "If the court orders the department of family services to conduct the investigation, the department may charge a reasonable fee. The department shall waive the fee for conducting the investigation if the parent or the child's custodian requesting the investigation is a recipient of aid to families with dependent children, food stamps, or general relief benefits"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 21, 1993.

Chapter 561 in (1), at end of third sentence after "food stamps", deleted "or general relief benefits"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Bracketed language in (1), though technically valid, is of no legal effect because general relief benefits were eliminated by other legislation adopted by the 1993 Legislature.

Chapter 434 and Ch. 561 made style changes that were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the more appropriate of the two.

1987 Amendment: In (1) inserted second and third sentences concerning fee and waiver of fee.

Function Transfer: Pursuant to sec. 117, Ch. 609, L. 1987, the Governor by executive order transferred the function and authority contained in this section from the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services to the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services).

1981 Amendment: Inserted "cost of the" before "investigation and report" in the last sentence of (1); substituted "shall be paid according to the final order" for "may be made by the county welfare department" at the end of (1).

Case Notes

Guardian Ad Litem Serving as Investigator Must Release Investigation Background Information: This section's provision that the investigator must make the investigator's underlying data and reports, texts of diagnostic reports, and the names and addresses of persons whom the investigator consulted available to counsel and to any party not represented by counsel applies to a guardian ad litem serving as an investigator. The District Court improperly denied the father access to the information. Because this section requires release at least 10 days before the hearing and the investigator's report was not filed with the court until after the hearing, the Supreme Court ordered the District Court to order release of the information and to conduct a final hearing no fewer that 10 days after the release. In re Custody of Krause, 2001 MT 37, 304 M 202, 19 P3d 811 (2001).

Consideration of but Failure to Adopt Investigation Report — No Abuse of Discretion: The District Court considered but did not adopt recommendations in a custody report from a clinical social worker that the mother remain the primary residential custodian, instead modifying custody and designating father as primary residential custodian. The court was required to consider but not necessarily adopt the custody report and fulfilled its obligation in referencing the report four times and reciting its recommendations verbatim in the findings of fact. The court also considered a great deal of conflicting evidence regarding the parties' stability and forthrightness, resolving a myriad of factual disputes. Issues of evidentiary weight and witness credibility are within the province of the trial court and will not be overturned absent an abuse of discretion. In this case, the court's findings were supported by substantial evidence and were not clearly erroneous, and thus no abuse of discretion occurred. In re Marriage of Abrahamson, 278 M 336, 924 P2d 1334, 53 St. Rep. 939 (1996), followed in Houdashelt v. Lutes, 282 M 435, 938 P2d 665, 54 St. Rep. 420 (1997).

Authority of Court to Require Sex Offender Evaluation — Relevancy of Report Undeterminable — Expert Testimony Unnecessary: After Robert's divorce from Tamara, Robert's visitation rights were changed to allow only supervised visitation of the parties' minor daughter. The basis for the modification of Robert's visitation rights was evidence that he had sexually assaulted Tamara's sisters. At the same time that the District Court modified Robert's visitation rights, it also required Robert to undergo a sex offender evaluation. Robert challenged the requirement for an evaluation as an abuse of the District Court's authority. The Supreme Court held that relevancy or admissibility of the report of the evaluation could not be determined until after the evaluation was completed. The Supreme Court also held that although the District Court could refuse to consider the testimony of Silvers, who recommended the evaluation, because Silvers was not qualified as an expert witness, the District Court could nonetheless order the evaluation because no expert testimony is required by statute as a prerequisite for ordering the evaluation. In re Marriage of Njos/Allard, 270 M 54, 889 P2d 1192, 52 St. Rep. 74 (1995).

Introduction of Polygraph Results in Custody or Visitation Dispute Prohibited: As part of a modification of Robert's visitation rights, the District Court required that Robert undergo a sex offender evaluation. Robert argued that the results of a polygraph test taken as a part of the sex offender evaluation should not be introducible. Citing St. v. Staat, 248 M 291, 811 P2d 1261 (1991), and 37-62-302, the Supreme Court held that the results of a polygraph test taken as part of a court-ordered sex offender evaluation would not be admissible in subsequent proceedings in the case. In re Marriage of Njos/Allard, 270 M 54, 889 P2d 1192, 52 St. Rep. 74 (1995), followed in St. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 58, 293 M 472, 977 P2d 315, 56 St. Rep. 243 (1999).

Objection to Home Study Report Not Based on Proper Grounds: The husband's attorney objected to the home study report on several occasions during the trial, primarily on the basis that it contained hearsay testimony. On appeal, the husband's attorney objected to the report on the basis that he had not received the report within the limits created by the statute. The Supreme Court held that the appellant had waived the right to object to the timeliness of the report by not objecting to the timeliness during the trial. In re Marriage of Clingingsmith, 254 M 399, 838 P2d 417, 49 St. Rep. 794 (1992).

Investigation Ordered After Modification Hearing — Remand: Remand was appropriate in a case in which: (1) an order for investigation was made after the hearing for modification of custody was held; (2) the report was mailed to counsel, but no request was made for an additional hearing to take testimony relative to the investigation; and (3) the District Court received the report prior to issuing findings of fact and conclusions of law, but it was impossible to determine whether the court even considered the report because the court failed to mention the report in its findings and conclusions. In re Marriage of Moseman, 253 M 28, 830 P2d 1304, 49 St. Rep. 349 (1992).

Failure to Consider Mental and Physical Health and Physical Abuse Documented by Case Worker — Reversal Warranted: The District Court committed reversible error in failing to consider the information provided in a home and family assessment study by a social worker regarding the mother's mental health and her documented physical and emotional abuse of the children and in neglecting to order a psychological evaluation of the mother to determine her parenting capability or neglecting to order counseling for the mother and other family members. Maxwell v. Maxwell, 248 M 189, 810 P2d 311, 48 St. Rep. 386 (1991), citing In re Marriage of Bloom-Higham, 227 M 217, 738 P2d 114 (1987).

Custodial Investigation Not Mandatory: This section provides that the order for a custodial investigation is permissive rather than mandatory. In re Marriage of Merriman, 247 M 491, 807 P2d 1351, 48 St. Rep. 275 (1991).

Failure by Court to Forward Copies of Investigative Report — Harmless Error: Home investigation reports were received by the District Court, and the court erred in not forwarding copies to counsel upon receipt. However, the Supreme Court found that the reports provided no additional information or insight for the District Court to rely on in making a custody determination; therefore, the error was harmless. In re Marriage of Kuzara, 224 M 124, 728 P2d 786, 43 St. Rep. 2068 (1986).

Abuse of Discretion to Order Then Fail to Consider Report: The mandatory language of this statute requires District Courts to provide copies of a custody investigation report to the parties involved. No discretionary power of the trial court is evoked. Once the trial judge determined it was appropriate to order an investigation of the custodial arrangement, this section mandated that copies of the report be distributed by the trial court to counsel and parties. Not only did the trial court fail to send copies of the report, but no hearing was held to permit testimony on the issue. The trial court abused its discretion by not considering the report in the process of reaching its final custody decision. In re Marriage of Ziegler, 215 M 208, 696 P2d 983, 42 St. Rep. 298 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Bloom-Higham, 227 M 217, 738 P2d 114, 44 St. Rep. 1025 (1987).

Court Advised to Order Investigation: The stories of the parties in a child custody dispute were diametrically opposed. The father requested an investigation of the mother's home by Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), but no investigation was ordered. The Supreme Court advised District Courts that they would be well advised to make use of the authority to order an investigation under this section to avoid having to rule simply by choosing between two incredible stories. Where the respective tales are nearly irreconcilable, as here, it is possible that the true facts may not be ascertained by oral testimony alone and an independent investigation may aid the court immensely. R.L.S. & T.L.S. v. Barkhoff, 207 M 199, 674 P2d 1082, 40 St. Rep. 1982 (1983).

Abuse of Discretion in Awarding Custody: The trial court abused its discretion in awarding custody of children to the mother by ignoring the desires of the children, excluding a report of investigation by the welfare department, and in hearing the child custody issue without the presence of the children's attorney. The court should make a specific finding, stating the wishes of the children as to their custodian and, if the court determines that the children's wishes are not being followed, the court should state in its findings the reason it has chosen not to follow their wishes. Kramer v. Kramer, 177 M 61, 580 P2d 439 (1978).

Untimely Request for Custodial Investigation: Failure to give the husband a County Welfare Department investigative report of custodial arrangements did not constitute grounds for vacating judgment in light of his untimely request and his failure to submit a timely motion for a continuance. Allen v. Allen, 175 M 527, 575 P2d 74 (1978).

Determining Custody Distinguished From Modification: The trial court did not err by failing to interview a minor child and order that an investigation and report concerning custodial arrangements be made, since the only issue before the trial court was whether to modify a custody decree, determination of custody already having been made. Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978).

Seeking Advice — Discretionary: The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it determined the aid of professional personnel was not necessary to the resolution of the instant case. Schiele v. Sager, 174 M 533, 571 P2d 1142 (1977).

Commissioners' Note

This section further details procedural aspects of custody hearings. Subsection (c) [(3)] changes the law in those states which now permit a jury to determine child custody. Subsection (d) [(4)] authorizes the court to protect the child by preventing unnecessary publicity if it finds that sealing the record is necessary for the child's welfare. Although this authority restricts access to public records, the evil of limitation is clearly outweighed by the public interest in the protection of children.

Case Notes

Opportunity for Hearing on Sealing of Record of Interview of Child by District Court Judge: In a proceeding for modification of visitation rights, the District Court interviewed the 12-year-old child involved and then, without a hearing, ordered the record of the interview sealed under 40-4-216. The only explanation given for the sealing was that contained in the order, that its purpose was to protect the child's welfare. The Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for the purpose of giving the custodial parent a hearing on whether the record of the interview should continue to be sealed for all purposes or whether some modification of the sealing order should be made for purposes of the appeal. The Supreme Court further ruled that if the District Court does not modify the sealing order, the record of the interview may be submitted in camera in any future appellate proceedings. In re Custody of Maycelle D., 213 M 225, 691 P2d 410, 41 St. Rep. 2066 (1984).

Hearing Priority — No Precedence Over Issue of Subject Matter Jurisdiction: Because the issue of subject matter jurisdiction may be invoked at any time in the course of a proceeding, there was no merit in the contention that because priority must be given custody proceedings such custody must be ruled on before a court may decide the issue of whether it had subject matter jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Lance, 213 M 182, 690 P2d 979, 41 St. Rep. 2032 (1984).

No Duty to Outline All Evidence in Findings: Judge, trying divorce proceeding involving custody without a jury, was not obligated to outline all the testimony presented at trial in his findings of fact, and no error was found on appeal in which husband claimed the judge ignored evidence husband had submitted and failed to make necessary findings thereon. Cherewick v. Cherewick, 205 M 75, 666 P2d 742, 40 St. Rep. 1106 (1983).

Commissioners' Note

With two important exceptions, this section [prior to 1997 amendment] states [stated] the traditional rule for visitation rights. The general rule implies a "best interest of the child" standard. Although the judge should never compel the noncustodial parent to visit the child, visitation rights should be arranged to an extent and in a fashion which suits the child's interest rather than the interest of either the custodial or noncustodial parent. The empirical data on post-divorce living arrangements suggests that, if the judge can arrange visitation with a minimum of contest, most parties will eventually reach an accommodation and the bitterness accompanying the divorce will gradually fade. The section does make clear, however, that the judge must hold a hearing and make an extraordinary finding to deprive the noncustodial parent of all visitation rights. To preclude visitation completely, the judge must find that visitation would endanger "seriously the child's physical, mental, moral, or emotional health." These words are intended to mesh with other uniform legislation. See Uniform Juvenile Court Act, Section 47. Although the standard is necessarily somewhat vague, it was deliberately chosen to indicate its stringency when compared to the "best interest" standard traditionally applied to this problem. The special standard was chosen to prevent the denial of visitation to noncustodial parent on the basis of moral judgments about parental behavior which have no relevance to the parent's interest in or capacity to maintain a close and benign relationship to the child. The same onerous standard is applicable when the custodial parent tries to have the noncustodial parent's visitation privileges restricted or eliminated.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 343 deleted former (1) through (4) that read: "A parent who is not granted custody of the child is entitled to reasonable visitation rights unless the court finds, after a hearing, that visitation would endanger seriously the child's physical, mental, moral, or emotional health.

(2) In a proceeding for dissolution of marriage or legal separation, the court may, upon the petition of a grandparent, grant reasonable visitation rights to the grandparent of the child if the court finds, after a hearing, that the visitation would be in the best interest of the child.

(3) The court may modify an order granting or denying visitation rights whenever modification would serve the best interest of the child; however, the court may not restrict a parent's visitation rights unless it finds that the visitation would endanger seriously the child's physical, mental, moral, or emotional health or unless the provisions of subsection (6) apply.

(4) As long as a noncustodial parent who has visitation rights under a decree or a custody agreement remains a resident of this state, a resident custodial parent shall, before changing the child's residence to another state and unless the noncustodial parent has given written consent, give written notice to the noncustodial parent, as provided in subsection (5)"; in (1) substituted "A parent who intends to change residence shall, unless precluded under 40-4-234, provide written notice to the other parent" for "The written notice required by subsection (4)"; in (2), at beginning of first sentence, inserted "If a parent's change in residence will significantly affect the child's contact with the other parent, notice" and at end inserted "and must include a proposed revised residential schedule", at end of second sentence substituted "adopted the parenting plan" for "issued the custody order", deleted former third sentence that read: "The purpose of the notice is to allow the noncustodial parent to seek a modification of the parent's visitation schedule", and inserted third sentence providing that failure to respond to the notice within 30 days constitutes acceptance of the proposed revised residential schedule; deleted (6) that read: "(6) (a) If a noncustodial parent or other person residing in the noncustodial parent's household has been convicted of any of the crimes listed in subsection (6)(c), the custodial parent or any other person who has been granted custody of the child pursuant to court order may file an objection to visitation with the court. The custodial parent or other person having custody shall give notice to the noncustodial parent of the objection as provided by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, and the noncustodial parent has 20 days from the notice to respond. If the noncustodial parent fails to respond within 20 days, the visitation rights of the noncustodial parent are suspended until further order of the court. If the noncustodial parent responds and objects, a hearing must be held within 30 days of the response.

(b) The noncustodial parent has the burden at the hearing to prove that visitation by the noncustodial parent does not seriously endanger the child's physical, mental, moral, or emotional health and that the modification of visitation is not in the best interest of the child.

(c) This subsection (6) applies to the following crimes:

(i) deliberate homicide, as described in 45-5-102;
(ii) mitigated deliberate homicide, as described in 45-5-103;
(iii) sexual assault, as described in 45-5-502;
(iv) sexual intercourse without consent, as described in 45-5-503;
(v) deviate sexual conduct with an animal, as described in 45-2-101 and prohibited under 45-5-505;
(vi) incest, as described in 45-5-507;
(vii) aggravated promotion of prostitution of a child, as described in 45-5-603(1)(b);
(viii) endangering the welfare of children, as described in 45-5-622;
(ix) partner or family member assault of the type described in 45-5-206(1)(a);
(x) sexual abuse of children, as described in 45-5-625"; and made minor changes in style.

Saving Clause: Section 41, Ch. 343, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 42, Ch. 343, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 43, Ch. 343, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] applies to proceedings begun after October 1, 1997, including proceedings regarding modification of orders or decrees existing on October 1, 1997."

1995 Amendments: Chapter 350 in (6)(c)(ix), at beginning, substituted "partner or family member assault" for "domestic abuse"; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 467 in (6)(a), near beginning after "parent", inserted "or other person residing in the noncustodial parent's household"; inserted (6)(c)(v) concerning deviate sexual conduct with an animal; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 15, 1995.

Severability: Section 31, Ch. 350, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Section 5, Ch. 467, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1989 Amendment: In (3), at end, inserted reference to subsection (6); inserted (6) establishing procedure whereby custodial parent or guardian may file objection to visitation right of other parent convicted of certain serious crimes and placing burden on convicted parent to prove visitation with convicted person does not seriously endanger child's health and modification of visitation is not in child's best interest; and made minor change in grammar.

1987 Amendment: Inserted (4) and (5) requiring notice to resident noncustodial parent of custodial parent's intent to move child to another state and stating required notice procedure.

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW PRIOR TO 1997 REVISION

General

Refusal to Order Mother to Pay Part of Child Visitation Travel Costs of Father Given Credit Against His Child Support Payment for Such Costs: The District Court did not err in refusing to order the mother, who lived in Oregon with the parties' child, to pay at least one-half of the travel costs of the child's visitations with the father, who lived in Livingston, because the father received credit for such costs against his child support payment. In re Marriage of Hogstad, 275 M 489, 914 P2d 584, 53 St. Rep. 257 (1996).

Slight Change, Based on Travel Distance, of Visitation Schedule Recommended by Custody Evaluators: The District Court did not err in slightly altering the child visitation schedule, based on the distance between the father (who resided in Livingston) and the child (who resided in Oregon with the mother), recommended by the child custody evaluators. In re Marriage of Hogstad, 275 M 489, 914 P2d 584, 53 St. Rep. 257 (1996).

Disallowing Visitation Because Child Was Grounded for Failure to Do Homework: The husband, who traveled from Montana to Louisiana for a weekend child visitation, was entitled to a $550 travel expense offset against support that he failed to pay because the wife punished the child for failure to do homework by not allowing the child to leave the house for the weekend to go on the planned outing with the father. The wife should have chosen a punishment that did not interfere with the visitation right. In re Marriage of Heath, 272 M 522, 901 P2d 590, 52 St. Rep. 915 (1995).

Grant of Grandparent Visitation Reversed in Absence of Grandparent Petition and Hearing on Issue: Granting visitation to the paternal grandparents was reversible error because no grandparent petitioned for visitation in the dissolution proceedings and there was no evidence that a hearing was held on the issue. Husband did not prevail on his claim that the visitation was granted in order to facilitate the visitation right of the husband, who had a history of violence, and as a condition to his exercise of that right, the court having ordered that the grandparents had to supervise husband's visitation with the child. In re Marriage of Bradshaw, 270 M 222, 891 P2d 506, 52 St. Rep. 154 (1995).

Standard of Review of Visitation and Custody Orders — No Abuse of Discretion Found in Supervised Visitation for Sex Offender: After Robert's divorce from Tamara, Robert's visitation rights were changed to allow only supervised visitation of the parties' minor daughter. Robert claimed that the change was an abuse of the District Court's discretion. Citing In re Marriage of Hunt, 264 M 159, 870 P2d 720 (1994), the Supreme Court held that the standard for review of visitation and custody orders was whether there is substantial credible evidence that supports the District Court's action. Because there was evidence before the District Court that Robert had sexually assaulted two of his former wife's sisters, the Supreme Court held that the modification of visitation rights was not an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Njos/Allard, 270 M 54, 889 P2d 1192, 52 St. Rep. 74 (1995).

Conclusion Regarding Absence of Serious Endangerment in Contempt Proceeding as Error — Substantial Rights Not Affected: At a contempt hearing to determine whether mother fabricated an incident of child sexual abuse in order to deprive father of visitation rights, the District Court entered a conclusion of law regarding the absence of serious endangerment under this section. That conclusion exceeded the scope of the show cause hearing but did not constitute reversible error because the substantial rights of the mother were not affected, in light of the fact that the contempt ruling was sufficiently supported. Woolf v. Evans, 264 M 480, 872 P2d 777, 51 St. Rep. 355 (1994).

Father in Alaska, Mother in Montana — Reasonable Visitation Provisions: When father lived in Alaska and mother lived in Montana, the following visitation provisions were found to be reasonable: (1) liberal visitation by father when he was in Montana so long as the child's schooling was not interrupted; (2) week-long blocks of time every 3 or 4 months at the father's home or other appropriate location, provided that the child was accompanied by an adult family member when traveling; (3) 14-day visitation blocks when the child was in elementary school; and (4) increased visitation after the child entered junior high school, to be decided jointly by father and child. In re Marriage of Nash, 254 M 231, 836 P2d 598, 49 St. Rep. 747 (1992).

Reasonable Visitation When Parties at Odds and Husband Can Petition for Specific Schedule: Grant of "reasonable rights of visitation" to husband without an established schedule was not an abuse of discretion when his adopted daughter was 16 years of age. Husband claimed that there was recognized animosity between him and his wife and that she had discouraged visitation in the past. The court decreed that the husband could petition for a specific visitation schedule if the "reasonable rights" became unworkable. In re Marriage of Dirnberger, 237 M 398, 773 P2d 330, 46 St. Rep. 898 (1989).

Notice of Parental Location Advised: Although a custodial parent did not have an affirmative duty to tell a noncustodial parent of every move within the state (prior to 1997 amendment), it was suggested that parents keep each other advised of their whereabouts to prevent secreting of children and to allow ease in payment of support and in visitation. In this case, leaving a forwarding address with the postal service and obtaining a valid Montana driver's license with the most current address were sufficient. In re Marriage of Callahan, 233 M 465, 762 P2d 205, 45 St. Rep. 1639 (1988).

Adoption by Stepparent — No Mandatory Termination of Grandparents' Visitation: There is no clear legislative intent or public policy that mandates termination of visitation for natural grandparents when a grandchild is adopted by a stepparent. Kanvick v. Reilly, 233 M 324, 760 P2d 743, 45 St. Rep. 1524 (1988).

Parent's Rights Not Limited by Grant of Visitation in Preference to Placement in Day Care or With Nonfamily Members: The District Court's conclusion that the mother be allowed liberal visitation when the children were in the father's care, rather than placing them in day care or with nonfamily members, did not confer superior custody rights to the father's household companion or limit or adversely affect the mother's visitation rights. In re Marriage of Smith, 232 M 528, 757 P2d 784, 45 St. Rep. 1253 (1988).

Lack of Contact and Sexual Abuse Allegations Unfounded — Visitation Proper: The District Court properly awarded reasonable visitation to the noncustodial parent when allegations of lack of contact, transmission of sexually related disease, and sexual abuse were unsupported by substantial credible evidence. In re Marriage of J.A.M. & D.A.M., 230 M 168, 750 P2d 1097, 45 St. Rep. 437 (1988).

No Contempt in Denial of Visitation by Parent — Concern for Child's Health: The trial court properly denied a motion that the mother be held in contempt for denying visitation to the father on several occasions after it found that the mother's denials were based on concerns for the child's health and not a desire to restrict the father's access. In re Marriage of Jacobson, 228 M 458, 743 P2d 1025, 44 St. Rep. 1678 (1987).

Reasonableness of Grandparent Visitation Schedule: The trial court granted to grandparents a total of 4 weeks per year of visitation, plus holidays, and allowed additional visitation conditioned on the mother's approval. Such a schedule was reasonable and provided adequate access to the child by the grandparents. In re Marriage of Jacobson, 228 M 458, 743 P2d 1025, 44 St. Rep. 1678 (1987).

Custody Based on Children's Preference — Custody to Father After School Year in Which They Reach Age Twelve: It was not an abuse of discretion for the judge to award custody of 8- and 10-year-old boys to the mother until the end of the school year in which each would turn 12 years old, with the father having custody all but 10 days of each summer, and thereafter permanent custody to the father, with the mother having custody for a month each summer and the children spending alternate holidays with the parents. Each boy had a strong preference for living with the father and for the farm lifestyle of the father, and though each boy had a normal and healthy relationship with the mother, each had some negative feelings about that relationship and did not wish to live with her. In addition, all four grandparents and assorted maternal and paternal cousins, aunts, and uncles lived near the father. The court's findings and conclusions were supported by substantial credible evidence. In re Marriage of Obergfell, 218 M 83, 708 P2d 561, 42 St. Rep. 1414 (1985).

Standard Governing Custody and Visitation Decisions — Best Interests of Child — Whether or Not Parents Married: In an action filed under 40-6-115, the father of a child sought to establish paternity of the child and petitioned for joint custody, visitation rights, and settlement of child support. The District Court awarded sole custody to the mother and granted the father limited visitation rights. The father appealed, claiming that it was a denial of equal protection of the law to determine his parental rights under the Uniform Parentage Act, Title 40, ch. 6, part 1, rather than under Title 40, ch. 4, the chapter that would have governed the case had he and the child's mother been married. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the standard for determination of child custody and visitation, best interests of the child, was the same in both laws, and the legally proper result was the same. Schuman v. Bestrom, 214 M 410, 693 P2d 536, 42 St. Rep. 54 (1985).

Necessity of Consideration of Older Children's Wishes in Visitation Determinations: The rule in child custody determinations that the trial court must consider the wishes of older children is also applicable in parental visitation determinations. Thus, when the District Court interviews a child of 12 as to his wishes respecting visitation, the court should make a specific finding, stating the wishes of the child as to visitation with the noncustodian. If the court determines that the child's wishes are not to be followed, the court should state in its findings the reasons it has chosen not to follow such wishes. In re Custody of Maycelle D., 213 M 225, 691 P2d 410, 41 St. Rep. 2066 (1984).

Opportunity for Hearing on Sealing of Record of Interview of Child by District Court Judge: In a proceeding for modification of visitation rights, the District Court interviewed the 12-year-old child involved and then, without a hearing, ordered the record of the interview sealed under 40-4-216. The only explanation given for the sealing was that contained in the order, that its purpose was to protect the child's welfare. The Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for the purpose of giving the custodial parent a hearing on whether the record of the interview should continue to be sealed for all purposes or whether some modification of the sealing order should be made for purposes of the appeal. The Supreme Court further ruled that if the District Court does not modify the sealing order, the record of the interview may be submitted in camera in any future appellate proceedings. In re Custody of Maycelle D., 213 M 225, 691 P2d 410, 41 St. Rep. 2066 (1984).

Obligation to Support Independent of Visitation Rights: A child's right to support and the parent's support obligation are not affected by misconduct of the parent or violations of visitation provisions of a custody decree. The District Court therefore was in error in making the enforcement of the child support payments, under a Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA) (replaced by UIFSA) action, contingent upon visitation compliance by the custodial parent. State ex rel. Dewyea v. Knapp, 208 M 19, 674 P2d 1104, 41 St. Rep. 143 (1984), affirmed in

In re Adoption of K.L.J.K., 224 M 418, 730 P2d 1135, 43 St. Rep. 2297 (1986). See also In re Marriage of Cox, 266 M 67, 878 P2d 903, 51 St. Rep. 672 (1994).

Investigation of Party Granted Visitation — Found Unnecessary: Since the trial court considered the evidence at the trial and made sufficient findings and conclusions to support its visitation order, it did not err by not conducting a further investigation of the person granted the visitation rights, even though the court had formerly stated that it would request a welfare investigation of that person before granting visitation rights. Overton v. Overton, 207 M 292, 674 P2d 1089, 40 St. Rep. 2047 (1983).

Reasonable Visitation: In a dissolution proceeding the court awarded both parties custody of at least one child and granted "reasonable visitation". The wife contended it was an abuse of discretion not to set a specific visitation schedule in light of the animosity the court found to exist between the parties. The Supreme Court found that the record indicated each party's willingness to allow the other visitation. In leaving the parties latitude in the matter of visitation privileges, if they are reasonable, they can work out a mutually satisfactory solution and avoid the inherent difficulties of a hard and fast visitation schedule. The court's findings supported its conclusion that reasonable visitation was all that was required. If visitation turned out to be unworkable, the parties could return to District Court for clarification. Meyer v. Meyer, 204 M 177, 663 P2d 328, 40 St. Rep. 753 (1983), followed in Romo v. Hickok, 264 M 341, 871 P2d 894, 51 St. Rep. 320 (1994), and distinguished in In re Marriage of Corey, 266 M 304, 880 P2d 824, 51 St. Rep. 859 (1994).

Clarification of Visitation on Motion to Enforce Decree: Divorce decree gave wife custody of the minor children and gave husband reasonable visitation rights and certain periods of time during the summer and holidays. On wife's motion for enforcement of the decree, husband was clearly shown to have abused his visitation rights. The evidence warranted court's clarification of the rights by granting each party alternate weekends with the children, setting a specific 40-day summer visitation, and providing for the manner in which the husband was to arrange visitations. There was clearly no abuse of discretion. Baker v. Baker, 198 M 371, 646 P2d 522, 39 St. Rep. 1031 (1982).

Clarification of Visitation Rights When Custodial Parent Moves Away: In a dissolution of marriage action, the wife was granted custody of the child and the husband had reasonable visitation rights under this section. After the wife moved 600 miles away, the husband petitioned the District Court for specification of his visiting rights but was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the District Court had abused its discretion, saying that the noncustodial parent should not be restricted unless visitation would endanger the child and that the father's visitation rights should be defined allocating sufficient time for his visitation so that a meaningful relationship can be nurtured. Sanderson v. Sanderson, 191 M 316, 623 P2d 1388, 38 St. Rep. 277 (1981), distinguished in Romo v. Hickok, 264 M 341, 871 P2d 894, 51 St. Rep. 320 (1994).

Necessity of Proper Findings and Conclusions — Incorporation of Property Settlement: An action for the dissolution of marriage was brought, and dissolution was granted. The parties entered into a property settlement a week before the decree of dissolution was entered. About 3 months later, one party brought a motion to incorporate the agreement in the court's final decree. The other party objected to the adoption of the visitation provisions. After a hearing, the District Court entered a supplemental decree of dissolution, incorporating all the terms of the property settlement agreement. On appeal, the appellant argued that the trial court erred in incorporating the property settlement without making specific findings of fact regarding the impact of the visitation provided for on the best interests of the child. The Supreme Court held that the purpose of the findings and conclusions required under the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure was to provide a foundation for the court's judgment. The record should include the essential and determining facts upon which the court rested its conclusions of law and without which the judgment would lack support. The finding of a fact and conclusion of law that the visitation provision in the property settlement agreement was in the best interest of the child failed to set forth the essential and determining facts upon which the court rested its conclusion. Without those factors, the Supreme Court was unable to determine the propriety of the determination. The case was remanded for the required factual findings. Jones v. Jones, 190 M 221, 620 P2d 850, 37 St. Rep. 1973 (1980).

Visitation and Obligation to Support — Interest on Unpaid Support: The Supreme Court rejected respondent's contention that he had no obligation to support his child under a divorce decree unless and until he exercised his right of visitation. The lower court incorrectly applied the rule in this case. Visitation has no bearing whatsoever upon the father's legal and moral obligation to support his child. Similarly, the father could not claim laches to avoid support payments owing over an 8-year period. Furthermore, on the basis of Williams v. Budke, 186 M 70, 606 P2d 515 (1980), appellant is entitled to receive interest on the past-due payments. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 190 M 66, 618 P2d 867, 37 St. Rep. 1350 (1980), followed, with regard to inapplicability of laches and equitable estoppel to recovery of child support arrears, in In re Marriage of Petranek, 255 M 458, 843 P2d 784, 49 St. Rep. 1107 (1992).

Section Controlling on Visitation Actions: This section and not 40-4-220 is controlling regarding child visitation actions, and therefore it was not error for the father to fail to file the affidavits required by 40-4-220. Gall v. Gall, 187 M 17, 608 P2d 496 (1980), followed in In re Marriage of Smith, 214 M 66, 692 P2d 1221, 41 St. Rep. 2325 (1984).

Failure to Properly Pursue Appeal — Best Interest of the Child: Even though a party may fail to both timely appeal and to pursue the appeal with some measure of diligence, in hearing a motion to dismiss said party's appeal, the District Court must still pay heed to the statutory requirement that it look to the best interest of the child. Lehman v. Billman, 178 M 367, 584 P2d 662 (1978).
